Committee work may be salvaged in new parliamentary session

By Gord McIntosh

OTTAWA (CP) — There is a good chance all committees left in limbo when the Mulroney government ended the last session of Parliament can be resurrected, an aide to Deputy Prime Minister Don Mazankowski said Tuesday.

But a final decision on the committees' fate must wait until Mazankowski can meet the House leaders of the two opposition parties, said Tom Van Dusen, the minister's press secretary.

When the Conservatives announced Aug. 28 that Parliament would be prorogued, all special committees and sub-committees were automatically disbanded unless the government agrees to a remedial order to allow them to resume in the new session beginning Oct. 1.

Parliament's 29 standing committees have the legal right to decide on their own to resume in the new session. But standing committees directed by the Commons to investigate a specific topic are disbanded along with the special committees and sub-committees.

Last week, Liberal House Leader Herb Gray complained that millions of dollars of work already done stands to be wasted if the special committees are allowed to die. He pledged his party's support for an order bringing them back to life.

CHILD CARE CONCERN

Particular concern has been voiced about the special committee on child care. It had heard submissions across the country on the issue of daycare and had begun drafting a report when Parliament was prorogued.

Margaret Mitchell, the Vancouver MP who represented the NDP on the child care committee, has said in a telegram to Mazankowski that any postponement of the committee's work would be disastrous.

Van Dusen said there already had been extensive discussions about the child care committee before Parliament was prorogued, and all sides were in agreement that its work should continue.

As for the others, their fate will have to await the meeting of the three House leaders, he said. "There is a good chance all of those will be brought back intact."

Nelson Riis, the NDP's newly-appointed House leader, said he has yet to hear from Mazankowski. He said he wants to hear what the government has in mind for the committees before committing himself on the committees that should survive.

LOBBYISTS STUDIED

Other key committee work left in limbo includes some by the standing committee on elections, privileges and procedures, which had been specifically charged by the House to investigate a possible code of conduct for lobbyists. It was also was about to draft a report after hearing a long line of witnesses.

"Before we try a transplant we'd better decide. Are we looking for a size 8 or size 13?"

'Free and secret ballot' to determine Bosley replacement

By Robert Fife

OTTAWA (CP) — Prime Minister Brian Mulroney could risk a caucus revolt if he tries to pressure Conservative MPs into voting for his choice as speaker of the House of Commons, says a veteran Tory MP.

The 10 regional Tory caucus chairmen met Monday evening and agreed they would not stand for political interference in the election of a new speaker to replace John Bosley, Lorne Greenaway, chairman of the B.C. caucus, said on Tuesday.

There has been speculation Quebec MP Marcel Danis is Mulroney's preferred choice as speaker, although the prime minister has not publicly said whom he wants to take over the $110,000-a-year job which Bosley resigned last week.

"All I can guarantee you is that it is going to be a free and secret ballot. It's as simple as that," Greenaway said.

"There won't be any political interference. I think that would probably be putting the hex on whomever (Mulroney) suggested."

The prime minister has traditionally appointed the speaker after consulting the two opposition leaders in the Commons, but new House rules now guarantee a secret ballot to elect a speaker.

However, a government insider has said the government will privately make it known to the Conservative caucus that they should vote for Danis, who is the deputy Speaker. He was first elected to the Commons in 1984.

Meanwhile, Bosley has been approached by some MPs who want him to reconsider his decision.

But his press secretary, Jim Watson, said in an interview that Bosley, who was in his Toronto riding and could not be reached for comment, has no intention of allowing his name to stand for reelection as speaker when Parliament resumes Oct. 1.

At least five Conservative MPs, including Danis, and two opposition MPs are considering running for speaker.

Three of the Conservatives — Doug Lewis (Simcoe North), Steve Paproski (Edmonton North) and Blaine Thacker (Lethbridge-Foothills) — are not bilingual.

The other Tory MP interested in the job is Leo Duguay, a freshman MP from Manitoba who is the provincial caucus chairman and deputy whip.

Montreal Liberal MP Marcel Prud'homme, a 23 year veteran of the Commons, also said he is willing to let his name stand for the job.

And NDP House Leader Nelson Riis said his party is also considering putting forward a candidate. The most likely candidate would be Saskatchewan MP Lorne Nystrom because he is bilingual and an 18 year veteran of the House, Riis said.

Chileans killed in apparent revenge

SANTIAGO (AP) — Three men linked to the Marxist left were abducted and killed in what a civil rights activist called apparent death squad vengeance for an assassination attempt against Chile's President Augusto Pinochet.

The fatal shootings of a well-known journalist, a schoolteacher and a machinist were reported Tuesday as tens of thousands of marchers roared their approval for the 70-year-old Gen. Pinochet and for his vow of tougher laws against terrorism.

Relatives said gunmen dragged all three victims from their homes within hours of the Sunday evening grenade and rocket ambush that killed five bodyguards in Pinochet's motorcade. None was considered a suspect in the attack.

"These seem to be revenge killings, except there is no apparent logic in the selection of the targets," said Luis Hermosillo, a lawyer for the Roman Catholic rights agency Solidarity. "They are leftists who seem to have been chosen indiscriminately."

"What is frightening is that we have not seen this kind of random death squad violence since the first few years after the coup."

Pinochet seized power from elected President Salvador Allende, who was a Marxist, in a coup 13 years ago Thursday. Allende died in the revolt.

SHOT 13 TIMES

Hermsillo spoke in an interview during a wake for Jose Carrasco, the foreign news editor of Analisis magazine, who was dragged from his home and shot 13 times in the back of the head.

The other victims were identified as Gaston Vidarrazugaza, a schoolteacher who was shot 16 times, and Felipe Segundo Rivera, a government-employed machinist shot eight times.

S. African offices closed by Nov. 1

OTTAWA (CP) — South Africa's tourism and airline offices in Canada should be closed by Nov. 1, External Affairs Minister Joe Clark says.

Clark announced last week he would seek the closure "as soon as possible" of the Toronto offices of the South Africa Tourism Board because of an advertisement in The Globe and Mail promoting a package trip to the race-torn country.

In a release Tuesday, he said the government has ordered the closure not only of those offices, but also of South African Airways' operations in Toronto, Montreal and Vancouver. The closures will eliminate 14 jobs for Canadians.

Clark said he regretted having to order the action, but had no choice because South Africa "chose to challenge" Canada's policy of trying to curtail tourism to the country, in keeping with Commonwealth measures against apartheid.

Clark said the advertisement was a clear attempt "to defy Canadian policy."

The advertisement touted a two-week tour to "see the real South Africa" with an opportunity to "freely converse with all racial groups" and "ask tough questions of anyone."

Accident victim injected with unprescribed drugs

TORONTO (CP) — Police are investigating an incident in which a Toronto hospital patient was injected with unprescribed drugs, but decided Tuesday not to re-open a probe into a similar case.

Police began to investigate the attempted murder of Gerald Basnicki, 31, last June after he was injected with insulin and digoxin, a potent heart drug, at Toronto Western Hospital, where he was taken following an automobile accident.

Some nurses on Basnicki's ward have voluntarily submitted to lie detector tests, which police Supt. Charles Maywood called "strictly an investigative technique."

Maywood said Tuesday police decided after reviewing the file not to re-open the case of another man who died at the same hospital in August 1985.

Pasquale Spiniello, 21, of nearby Mississauga died of head injuries but had been improperly injected with digoxin. An inquest last January concluded the injection was a medication error.

Basnicki was injected with digoxin and insulin, a drug prescribed only for diabetics, during the week of June 23. He is in hospital for treatment of injuries suffered in an accident which killed two children last March 23.

Toronto Western officials asked police to investigate after a doctor noticed the patient exhibiting unusual symptoms, a hospital spokesman said.

"He did have an adverse reaction but he has recovered completely from the drugs," hospital spokesman Lucie Baistrocchi said.

The man's father, John Basnicki, confirmed his son was the victim of the drug injections, although police and hospital officials have refused to reveal the patient's name.

Basnicki said Tuesday police informed him of the suspected attempt on his son's life shortly after it happened. He said the "game plan" was to keep quiet about the incident until police caught the person responsible.

Mulroney's office satisfied with hospitality bills

By Robert Fife

OTTAWA (CP) — Prime Minister Brian Mulroney's office is fully satisfied with the hospitality expense claims by one of his closest aides which were brought into question last week, Mulroney's press chief says.

But Michel Gratton — furious with The Canadian Press reporters who disclosed discrepancies in expense claims from Mulroney's communications director, Bill Fox — refused to comment to the news agency about the affair.

Gratton, who replaced Fox as Mulroney's press secretary last year, told the Toronto Star on Tuesday that Mulroney's office is satisfied with the claims and will not investigate them further.

Asked by one of the CP reporters who wrote the original story for comment after his statement to The Star, Gratton brusquely replied, "I don't want to talk to you," and walked away.

CP reported last week that Fox billed taxpayers for almost $600 for drinks he said he bought reporters covering Mulroney's to the Commonwealth conference in the Bahamas last October.

But at least seven of the 17 reporters cited in Fox's expense claims — totalling $569.20 for six-day period — said they rarely saw Fox at the conference and could not remember him buying their drinks.

When asked last week about his claims, Fox acknowledged his expense accounts may not be as exact as possible because he prepares them from memory after the fact.

"If there is any question about anything, I will repay the money," he said. Fox says he could have made at least one mistake, when trying to remember who was present when he was entertaining, while preparing his claims.

A spokesman for Auditor General Kenneth Dye — the taxpayers' independent watchdog over government spending — said Tuesday his office will not investigate Fox's expense claims.

"We just haven't got the resources to get down to that kind of detail," said Morris Cutler, head of Dye's public affairs office.

Cutler says the agency directly involved, in this case the Privy Council Office, also has responsibility for ensuring that kind of spending is accounted for. As well, Dye's office in some cases does not direct its resources to an issue already being studied by the media and the Commons opposition, Cutler says.

Reporter fears case may hurt U.S.-Soviet relations

MOSCOW (AP) — Nicholas Daniloff, the U.S. reporter charged with spying in the Soviet Union, fears his case is getting out of hand and that Soviet friends will be coerced into testifying against him, his wife says.

"He thinks his case is escalating rather dangerously," Ruth Daniloff said Tuesday after visiting her husband for the third time at Moscow's Lefortovo Prison.

Mrs. Daniloff said her husband would not like to see the case "torpedo the summit or torpedo U.S.-Soviet relations."

Daniloff, Moscow correspondent for U.S. News and World Report, was arrested Aug. 30 by Soviet secret police agents after a Soviet acquaintance handed him a package that contained military photographs and maps marked secret.

He was formally charged Sunday with espionage, which can carry a prison term of up to 15 years or the death penalty. Daniloff has denied the charge.

Mrs. Daniloff has accused the Soviet government of framing the 51-year-old journalist and holding him hostage so an exchange can be arranged for Gennadiy Zakharov, a Soviet UN employee arrested Aug. 23 in New York and indicted Tuesday on spy charges.

After seeing her husband for an hour and 20 minutes, she told reporters he looked drawn. But she said he was composed and gave her a description of the 28 hours of interrogation by the KGB secret police.

"He said this is getting out of hand," she said, apparently referring to Soviet and U.S. moves to arrange a summit. "We have to resolve it fairly soon or it will jeopardize some important meetings."

Mrs. Daniloff said her husband feels isolated and finds it frightening "when you are alone in your cell and people are talking about death sentences."

She said Daniloff fears false evidence is being prepared against him and he is worried his Soviet friends are being coerced into testifying against him.

But Daniloff also said he believes the investigation is a formality, his wife said. "He said it clearly relates to the Zakharov case."

The U.S. administration says it is prepared to take steps if Daniloff is not released soon, but will not say what the steps might be.

Gennadiy Gerasimov, a Foreign Ministry spokesman, told reporters Tuesday a solution to the Daniloff case could be found, but he declined to be specific.

There has been no indication when Daniloff might be brought to trial.

The government newspaper Izvestia accused Daniloff on Monday of trying to gather intelligence on Soviet forces in Afghanistan, where western officials say more than 115,000 Soviet troops have been deployed since the Soviet Union's intervention in 1979.

Doctor's trial for abortion may force government to take stand

MONTREAL (CP) — A Montreal doctor has become the first physician in Quebec to be committed to trial on abortion charges in more than a decade, a move that may force the provincial government to take a stand on the abortion issue.

Dr. Yvan Machabée, charged with performing an illegal abortion, was committed to trial after a brief preliminary hearing on Tuesday.

The charge was laid earlier this summer after anti-abortion crusader Reggie Chartrand convinced a judge at a pre-trial hearing that there was enough evidence to warrant a charge.

However, a private lawyer — Gratien Duchesne — rather than a Crown counsel represented the prosecution at the preliminary hearing.

Judge Roger Savard, who imposed a publication ban on evidence at the sessions court hearing Tuesday, said a trial will be held early in November.

Previously, Justice Minister Herbert Marx had said he could not comment on the case while the preliminary hearing was pending.

Now that a trial has been ordered, the onus is on Marx to decide whether to assign a Crown prosecutor to the case, withdraw or stay the prosecution, or allow the case to proceed without a Crown lawyer prosecuting.

Defence lawyer Jean-Claude Hebert wrote to Marx two weeks ago asking him to drop the case because the issue now is before the Ontario Court of Appeal and the Supreme Court of Canada in other cases.

WANTS ANSWER
"The minister said he couldn't intervene while there was a preliminary hearing pending," said Hebert. "Now the preliminary hearing is over, we're going to trial and I invite the minister to give me a response."

Marx could not be reached for comment and his press secretary declined to say what position the government will take.

Hebert said if Marx does not stay the prosecution or assign a Crown counsel to the case, Duchesne will not be able to proceed without written authorization from a Quebec Superior Court judge.

"In the 15 years I have been practising law, I have never seen a case before judge and jury that has been pleaded by a private lawyer," said Hebert.

The Liberal government of Premier Robert Bourassa, elected last December, has continued the policy of the previous Parti Québécois government of not prosecuting doctors who perform abortions outside accredited hospitals.

But a source close to the justice ministry who requested anonymity said last month that the government would not prosecute abortionists for fear of the political fallout that might occur with the reopening of an emotional debate over abortion.

Dr. Henry Morgentaler, who was tried and acquitted three times during the 1970s, was the last doctor to be prosecuted in Quebec.

Duchesne, who is not charging legal fees for pleading the case for Chartrand, is also representing another anti-abortion activist in Chicoutimi, Que., who has succeeded in laying a similar charge against Dr. Jean-Denis Berubé and a community health clinic.

Waste sites may go ahead despite cracks

WINNIPEG (CP) — Rock samples taken from the Canadian Shield indicate some forms of granite will crack due to heat and excavation, but scientists said Tuesday that doesn't rule out the area as a nuclear waste disposal site.

The results of a study into the strength of the rocks found near Lac du Bonnet, Man., where Atomic Energy of Canada Ltd. has a nuclear waste research facility, were made public at an international conference on nuclear waste management.

Researcher Alfred Annor said significant breaks in the rock occur when the granite is heated above 100 degrees Celsius.

As well, a form of granite found at a depth of several hundred metres is prone to weakening if disturbed by excavation.

AECL spokesman Robert Dixon said the findings by the Ottawa-based Canada Centre for Mineral and Energy Technology are not significant.

"Really, we're not getting too many major surprises," Dixon said. "This report is just another little piece of information in our overall research."

Tests are being conducted in the Lac du Bonnet and Pinawa areas of Manitoba to see if parts of the Canadian Shield are suited for long-term disposal of nuclear waste.

AECL is researching ways to reduce the number of cracks which would occur during construction of a disposal vault.

Annor's findings suggest some way of excavating the repository bunker to minimize the effect of boring and blasting needs to be perfected before a vault can be built, Dixon said.

WILL LEACH

Preliminary research indicates a one-kilometre square bunker could be built one kilometre below ground where containers of spent nuclear fuel would occupy an area the size of an Olympic-size swimming pool.

Containers holding the radioactive fuel would be spaced metres apart inside the vault so as not to generate excessive heat, Dixon said.

Some areas of the vault near the waste containers could reach temperatures of 150 degrees but the overall temperature of the vault would be below that, he said.

The vault would be backfilled with crushed granite, bentonite and sand to eliminate the possibility of an underground collapse.

However, some leaching of the radioactive waste would occur over a period of hundreds of years, Dixon said.

Eventually, the containers will fail and radioactive isotopes will leach through the sand-filled vault into the natural and man-made micro-cracks in the granite, he said.

A July, 1985, report by the technical advisory committee on AECL's nuclear fuel waste management program suggested there are problems with the present vault design.

PQ platform has higher regard for private sector

MONTREAL (CP) — The Parti Québécois is rethinking its political platform as part of the long march back from electoral oblivion and one of the first notions to be dropped is the party's traditional suspicion of the private sector.

"There are a few sentences in here which may surprise some people," PQ Leader Pierre Marc Johnson said Tuesday as he made public the first of a series of working papers by the party's national program committee.

"For example, we are no longer equating the private sector with exploitation of the people," he said. "There was a time in the party when the notion of profit necessarily meant exploitation, but I don't think people believe that now."

Johnson said the PQ was also breaking new ground for itself by calling for co-operation between the public and private sectors in joint efforts to further social, cultural and economic aims rather than pitting the sectors against each other.

Because of growing government deficits, chronic unemployment, and high tax rates that can scarcely be squeezed for more revenue, he said, it's time to rethink the interventionist and all-providing role of government.

PRESENCE FELT

During the PQ's nine years in office, a provincial government presence was brought into everything from small business programs to automobile insurance.

But Johnson said that the neo-conservative approach of the Liberal government under Premier Robert Bourassa — which is cutting government services deemed inefficient and turning some of them over to the private sector — is not the answer.

"Judging services simply by the law of the marketplace ... is wrong because it does not take into account the fact that we are a small society in terms of the rest of North America, that we want to remain distinct," he said.

"If you leave a small population to the law of the marketplace in the furnishing of services, some people will be starved, in the cultural area for example."

"The role of government must be efficient and judged in terms of performance, but in Quebec there always will be an interventionist role for government for social and cultural development and the growth of the economy and employment."

The difference should be in the way government intervenes, he said, with the accent now on collaboration with the private sector.

The PQ was drubbed in the Dec. 2 election last year, winning only 23 seats in the Quebec legislature to the Liberals' 99.

News-in-brief

Hilton funeral draws hundreds

MONTREAL (CP) — Hundreds of friends and family members gathered Tuesday to pay their last respects at the funeral of 17-year-old Stewart Hilton, the youngest of Montreal's boxing Hilton brothers.

Hilton, a talented boxer who had won four professional fights and lost none at the time of his death, was killed in a fiery car crash last week.

His brothers Dave, Jr., Matthew, Alex and Jimmy were among the pallbearers who carried the casket into St. Luke's Anglican church in Rosemont.

Charest hearing set for Oct. 1

SOREL, Que. (CP) — A preliminary hearing has been set for Oct. 1 for Andre Charest, charged with first-degree murder in the death of 11-year-old Steve Mandeville two weeks ago.

During a brief hearing in sessions court Tuesday, the former hockey coach stared in silence at his shoes.

Charest, 39, was watched intently by the dead boy's parents who were in the courtroom in this industrial city 60 kilometres east of Montreal.

Spectators watched as Charest was hustled from the building by provincial police officers as a handful of people shouted insults at him.

Amnesty knows about 272

OTTAWA (CP) — The international human rights group Amnesty International has documented 272 cases of "disappearances" of Sri Lankan citizens, most of them Tamils, during the last three years of civil strife in the former British colony.

In a new, 96-page report released Tuesday, Amnesty International says the victims, mostly young men, were taken by security forces who were battling Tamil separatists agitating for an independent state apart from the Sinhalese majority in Sri Lanka.

A Canadian missionary who recently returned from Sri Lanka after winning a celebrated case against the government for wrongful imprisonment, says security police are responsible for the arrests and that he believes most of the detainees were killed while in custody.

Board in airport deadlock

MONTREAL (CP) — The Montreal Airports Advisory Board, deadlocked over whether Dorval or Mirabel should be the city's main airport, tossed the political football into Ottawa's lap Tuesday, but the minister of state for transport promptly punted it right back.

Andre Bissonnette, dissatisfied with the report submitted by the 14-member board which studied the question for 14 months, told the group it must meet again to seek a consensus.

Tamils still fear deportation

TORONTO (CP) — The Tamils who entered Canada after being abandoned in lifeboats off the coast of Newfoundland a month ago are still fearful of being sent back to Sri Lanka, a spokesman for the group said Tuesday.

Sri Skandarajah, a member of the Tamil Eelam Society, said the 61 Tamils in Toronto and 94 in Montreal could be deported when their application for refugee status is heard next spring.

Representatives of the Tamil community addressed a meeting of the City of Toronto's committee on race relations Tuesday evening, though the newcomers themselves didn't attend.

Driver had trouble from start

MONTREAL (CP) — A Montreal transit commission bus driver had trouble "from the start" with a 19-year-old who boarded his bus one night in August, a preliminary hearing was told Tuesday.

Driver Daniel Bouillon, testifying at Serge Lemoyne's preliminary hearing on a charge of using an offensive weapon, said Lemoyne "had been drinking and had three bottles of beer on him." He said Lemoyne boarded the bus without paying outside a subway station in northeast Montreal.

Bouillon said he went to telephone police after trying in vain to get Lemoyne to leave the bus. After making the phone call, he said, he came back to the bus and realized Lemoyne, who was now outside the vehicle, had a knife in his hand.

AIDS top 35—44 year old killer

TORONTO (CP) — AIDS was the top killer of Toronto residents between the ages of 35 and 44 last year, the city's medical officer of health said in his annual report Tuesday.

It is the first year that AIDS-related deaths have been numerous enough to warrant a separate category, Dr. Sandy Macpherson said. AIDS-related illnesses overtook suicides as the number one cause of death in the age group, he said.

Acquired immune deficiency syndrome is an illness that destroys the body's immune system, leaving the victim susceptible to a host of fatal infections. The AIDS virus is transmitted through bodily fluids such as semen and blood.

Disinfectant poisons 5 patients

SURREY, B.C. (CP) — Five patients were poisoned at Surrey Memorial Hospital when they were accidentally fed disinfectant instead of juice.

Hospital president Roger Bernatzki said one of the elderly patients, a 100-year-old man, is on a ventilator, while a 78-year-old man is being monitored on a "minute-by-minute basis."

Two younger victims are in the emergency ward in serious but stable condition and a fifth is being monitored every 30 minutes in the extended-care unit, he said.

Canadian arrested for attack

BONN (AP) — Police arrested a 61-year-old Canadian after he used a hammer to smash several bullet-proof window panes at the entrance of the Bundestag, the West German parliament, Tuesday.

The man told investigators he was protesting the government's refusal to grant an unspecified financial claim, police said. They declined to identify him.

Witnesses said the man had joined a large group of tourists visiting the building, pulled a hammer out of his bag and started smashing the windows. A doorman called police, and the man was arrested.

Mom: transfusion caused death

PEMBROKE, Ont. (CP) — A day-old baby born to Jehovah's Witness parents died from an unwanted blood transfusion, the infant's mother testified Tuesday at the second day of a coroner's inquest.

"This is the treatment (blood transfusion) that caused our baby's death," a distraught Linda Turnbull told a tension-filled inquest into the death of her daughter, Leah Martha.

The baby was made a ward of the Ottawa-Carleton Children's Aid Society because her parents withheld consent for a blood transfusion on religious grounds. She died Feb. 8 — in spite of finally receiving a transfusion at Ottawa's Children's Hospital of Eastern Ontario — about 19 hours after being born in the family's Combermere, Ont., home, just south of Barry's Bay.

La Presse writer to Paris?

MONTREAL (CP) — Jacques Bouchard, editorial writer at the Montreal daily La Presse, is about to be appointed press attache for Quebec's delegation in Paris, Le Devoir reported today.

Le Devoir said it has learned from unofficial sources that the Montreal journalist has been selected over several other people who were interested in the job.

Jean-Louis Roy, former publisher of Le Devoir, has been delegate-general since February.

Law translation costs $10 million

WINNIPEG (CP) — The final cost of translating Manitoba's English-only laws into French will be about $10 million.

Attorney General Roland Penner said the translation, ordered last year by the Supreme Court of Canada, is on schedule and should be mostly completed before 1990, when the court-imposed deadline expires.

He said Ottawa will contribute about $2 million of the costs. The province received about $400,000 from the federal government last year.

"We expect a similar amount from Ottawa this year" and for each of the next three years, Penner said on Monday. "Support for other aspects of the plan is being discussed with the federal government."

Second paper prospects look good

MONTREAL (CP) — Raymond Heard, former managing editor of the defunct Montreal Star, says that prospects for a second English-language newspaper in the city are "looking pretty good."

Heard, a senior executive with Global Television in Toronto, said in an interview Tuesday that he is acting as an adviser to a group of Montreal businessmen who are discussing the project with Donald Creighton, president of Toronto Sun Publishing Corp.

"The people raising money (for the new paper) are pretty heavy hitters in Montreal," said Heard. "Raising the money is no problem, but they haven't made a decision yet." He declined to name the members of the group, but said it includes both francophones and anglophones.

Fonyo Sr. has inoperable cancer

VANCOUVER (CP) — Steve Steve Fonyo Sr., who learned this week that he has inoperable cancer, said Tuesday he will probably not undergo chemotherapy to prolong his life.

"There is still no (final) decision yet, but I think we're not going to go in for it (treatment)," he said in an interview. "It's up to God's will."

"If I'm going to die, I'm going to die in dignity."

Fonyo, 58, said his son, Journey for Life cancer runner Steve Jr., was shaken by the news.

Rock Forest shooting

Commission refuses to comment on Sherbrooke's decision

SHERBROOKE (CP) — Dominique and Reine Huard, who bought Le Chatillon motel in Rock Forest four months ago, say they would just as soon forget the incident that still brings gawkers to see room number five.

On Dec. 23, 1983, three Sherbrooke police detectives led a raid on the motel seeking suspects in the slaying of Brink's Canada Ltd. guard in a Sherbrooke shopping centre the day before.

Serge Beaudoin, 33, died in a hail of sub-machinegun bullets when police stormed room five. His partner, Jean-Paul Beaumont, was wounded in the cheek. Both were asleep at the time of the raid.

"A monumental mistake was made," Dominique says, adding however that Sherbrooke city council was wise not to demote Andre Castonguay, Michel Salvail and Roger Dion, the officers who led the raid. She said little would be accomplished by such a move.

Castonguay and Dion were brought to trial on various charges and acquitted while charges against Salvail were dropped.

Castonguay and Salvail were later promoted. Dion applied for a promotion but was turned down because he lacked seniority.

BOTCHED RAID

A Quebec Police Commission inquiry into the raid said Castonguay, Dion and Salvail gave little thought to planning the complicated and dangerous operation and that it was botched and improvised.

The commission said the three men should be demoted and spend three years on patrol duty.

Sherbrooke Mayor Jean-Paul Pelletier, a former police chief, said the city could not legally pursue the matter because of its collective agreement with the police force, which states that disciplinary actions against officers must be launched within six months of the event.

The Quebec Police Commission declined all comment Tuesday on the decision, saying the commission never comments on reports brought down or on decisions by municipal councils on their contents.

"You mustn't forget that the commission is a quasi-judicial tribunal in disciplinary matters," commission spokesman Serge Fortin said. "It is in the order of things that a judge does not comment on his judgment."

Reaction in and around Sherbrooke was mixed.

A hardware store cashier, who gave her first name as Carmen, said the policemen have already paid for what happened.

"You can make a lot of mistakes in life without meaning to," she said.

But Louise Belhumeur, an accountant, disagreed.

"If it had been anyone other than policemen, they would have paid for it," she said. "They should have given them what they deserved."

IT'S DISGUSTING

"It's disgusting," said Jean-Louis Fabi, who operates a coffee stand. "If it were you or me, we'd be punished. Why not them?"

Fabi suggested that Mayor Pelletier's stand in favor of the decision could threaten his lead in the Sherbrooke elections on Nov. 2.

Gerard Latulippe, Quebec solicitor general, said the Sherbrooke council was within its rights in rejecting the police commission recommendation.

Latulippe, speaking at a news conference in Montreal, added that the government is considering reforms to the powers of the commission under the Quebec Police Act. One option would be to make its recommendations binding. The act has not been revised in 20 years.

"I tell you frankly," Latulippe said. "I still don't know what we're going to do."

"Everyone will be consulted. The problem is much more complex than we believed. We must move cautiously, step by step."

Police later captured the real killers of the Brink's guard Yvon Charland, nabbing Yves Lasalle, 31, and Mario Valiquette, 30, in Texas during another Brink's robbery. Both were sentenced to life in prison.

Lasalle later escaped with four other prisoners from the Laval maximum security penitentiary and is still at large.

Lost their way in Thetford Mines bush

School children found safe

By Philip Authier

THETFORD MINES — Four students who got lost in the bush here while learning how to use a compass were home in time for supper last night after a police search turned them up safe and sound.

The students, all in Grade 6 at St-Gabriel school in Thetford Mines, were part of a nature outing which brought the group to Lac Rond, about four kilometres south of Thetford Mines.

As part of the excursion, students Brigitte Fecteau, Annie Houle, René Fournier and Pascale Dubé were given a chance to use a compass, a spokesman for the Thetford Mines School Board said.

But somehow they lost their way in the dense bush. When the four monitors who accompanied the 51-person group were unable to find them, the Quebec Police Force was called in.

The group went missing at about 10 a.m. but it took police, using helicopters and dogs, only about 45 minutes to find the band when they arrived on the scene at 2 p.m.

"They are safe and sound, there's no problem," Const. Maurice Briand of the Quebec City QPF said.

School board director Raymond Couture said he was happy the students had been found.

"It (the search) was done well," he said.

Police conducted the search on their own, fearing a big group of volunteers would throw their dogs off the scent. For that reason, parents and friends who descended on the scene were kept at bay by police.

PLUCKED FROM WOODS

Their fears were put to rest, however, after the word came from a small plane which had been combing the area that the children had been spotted on a bluff of land.

A provincial police helicopter then moved in to pluck the children out of the woods and bring them to their relieved parents.

In explaining the mistake the students made with the compasses they were carrying, Couture said, "They went in the direction they shouldn't have."

The kids are having a ball in Sutton's new bilingual school

By Hilari Farrington

SUTTON — It may be an experiment in linguistic relations, but the atmosphere at the open house for Sutton's "new school" on Friday felt like nothing less than a party.

With its first day of classes scheduled for Sept. 8, the Sutton school will become the first in Quebec to serve students from both Catholic and Protestant school boards under a single administrator.

Despite the painting, hammering and unpacking which continued even as visitors filed into the as-yet-unnamed school, parents and students alike appeared pleased with recent renovations to the building and enthusiastic about the project as a whole.

"My own children attend school on the French side," said Annette Warwick, one of the school secretaries employed by the District of Bedford Regional School Board, "but they have friends on both sides. They're very excited about this."

"I think that it's beautiful," said parent Ruth Ann Turbidity. "I'm happy that all the children in Sutton will be in one school."

Although, with the exception of the bilingual kindergarten, each grade will have a separate French and English class, a floor plan of the school showed that there would clearly be no other physical separation of the language groups — a concern voiced by many parents at meetings last spring. Grade one in French is located across the hall from its English counterpart; grades five and six in English are next door to the 6th grade French class.

"It's really nice what they've done here. It makes you have a good feeling and I think that it will make the kids feel good," said Michael Sherrer whose son Dustin will be attending kindergarten.

"Last June my children were worried about leaving the French school, but now they're very excited about the new school," Annette Domingue, a member of the school's new kitchen staff remarked. "I think that it's great that everyone will learn to speak both languages."

The idea of the Sutton school project was initiated jointly by the Davignon and District of Bedford school boards for reasons which both admit were more pragmatic than altruistic.

Sutton's French students had been crowded into two inadequate buildings, while English-speaking students inhabited a building far too large and expensive for the financially strapped District of Bedford to maintain. To Sandra Jewett, District of Bedford Board chairman, amalgamation "might be a way to keep a lot of small rural schools open."

Pauline Quinlan, the Sutton school's newly appointed principal, believes that the Sutton community, with its strong tradition of bilingualism will easily meet the challenge of its unique place in the Quebec education system.

Quinlan's personal challenge, she believes, will be to help the students feel secure in their new environment and to ensure that each language will be respected. "We have a rare chance to bring both groups together," she commented.

Quinlan, herself a francophone, was raised in an English area near Cowansville and attended school in Cowansville, Granby and the University of Sherbrooke. For the past three years she has been in charge of the Ecole St-Edouard in Knowlton.

"I was surprised to see how many children here are already bilingual," said Quinlan, whose own four children have spoken both languages since the age of two.

Quinlan also seemed pleased with the atmosphere amongst the teachers and staff in the school. "The teachers have been working together for two weeks in a very positive way. We hold our meetings in both languages, with everyone speaking their own language."

The hesitancy expressed by teachers in the French schools last June appears to have evaporated. "This will be a wonderful experience for all of the community," said Patricia Harvey, a second grade teacher on the French side. "I'm very happy."

Thus far, the new school's major problem has been to complete the building renovations on time. With school already delayed a week, the library and gym still contain piles of unpacked boxes, and a number of areas are awaiting a new coat of paint.

"First we had to move everything from all three schools into the gymnasium while the renovations were taking place," Quinlan recounted. "A new electrical system had to be installed, the ceilings were lowered and everything was repainted. We also made a cafeteria downstairs with a new kitchen for serving hot lunches."

"Don Craig of the District of Bedford has been in charge of all the work and has done a wonderful job. People have been painting here night and day," said Quinlan.

"I stopped by the school when all of the work was going on," said parent Bill Nunnally. "People were talking away in both languages and helping each other with words they couldn't translate. There was a really nice feeling," he added.

Children attending the Friday open house in Sutton were visibly enthusiastic, though not without their own concerns. "I don't know what I think of it yet," said third-grader Ian Bissonnette cautiously. "It smells like wet paint," added classmate Jemmy Farrington.

"The new changes are like nothing I ever expected," said Kirstin Freemantle, an English fifth-grader who attended the Country School in Richford, Vermont until this year. "It's so big and different from what I'm used to."

Kirstin and two friends, Naomi Turbidity and Erin Boudreau stood in the hallway licking ice cream cones which were distributed to all of the children in the new cafeteria. "Now I can be with Kirstin at recess and on the bus," said Naomi, who attends French classes. "And we really like the ice cream cones," Erin added enthusiastically.

When asked what she thought of the new school, Jessica Jennings, a third grader on the French side smiled broadly and said, "I like it."

"I had three children who went to school here," said Norman Jennings, Jessica's grandmother, "and I think that this is a marvelous way to create understanding. The children are having a ball."

Identity of body still a mystery, say cops

SHERBROOKE (PCA) — Provincial police have still not identified a body which was found wrapped in orange garbage bags in the trunk of a parked car in Knowlton Monday.

A Quebec Police Force spokesman said early Wednesday that there were no new developments in the case, although the investigation is continuing.

The body was found by Brome Lake police in the back of a stolen Toyota which had been parked on Brandy Road, north of Knowlton. Provincial police were called to the scene to investigate what is being viewed as a possible murder case.

A loaded .357 Magnum revolver was also found in the vehicle by police. Even though the body has yet to be identified, police are already checking with local residents for any clues in the case.

Mystery tomato cracks up barber

Wayward seeds may explain brave sprout

By Craig Pearson

LENNOXVILLE — For one amused Lennoxville businessman — after becoming aware of a strange discovery on the sidewalk outside his store two weeks ago — gardening is no longer something he has to leave at home.

Terry Beatie, the barber who owns and runs Beatie's Barber Shop at 125 Queen St., said he was surprised when some passers-by pointed out a reasonably large tomato plant growing from a tiny crack between the sidewalk and his small, white building.

"I came to work one morning and a couple of fellahs were waiting for me and said 'Well you sure have a nice garden' and I looked — and there was a tomato plant. So I pulled the weeds out from around it," said Beatie smiling.

Beatie said vegetable plants growing wild on the sidewalks of Lennoxville are, needless to say, a rare occurrence.

He said it's "the first time I had greenery growing through the cement." And Beatie should know: the Lennoxville native has been around the barber shop before most of the Bishop's students he cuts hair for were born. His father started the store in 1948, and Terry's been cropping there since 1967.

Beatie, who has already pruned the plant and tied it with a string to the wall to give it more support, said he doesn't have a clue how the plant got there — save a sort of Jack and the Bean Stock theory: "I don't know if someone got mad at the haircut or what and threw a tomato or something and the seeds fell down the crack — I don't know," he said chuckling.

And for a plant left alone for the first time in a bustling downtown — it's doing pretty well. Beatie said even though he has only recently learned of its existence, Barber Terry Beatie prunes 'a little off the top, not too much off the sides' of a brash little tomato plant that is facing Lennoxville's urban jungle these days.

the plant "had to be growing all summer" because it's over a foot tall and is supporting two green tomatoes (which Beatie plans to eat if they ripen) and a half a dozen blossoms.

Customer Robert Woollerton, who has been going to Beatie's for a haircut every month for 30 years, agreed it looks in good shape. "It looks like a very healthy plant... I hope the frost doesn't get it."

And then, bewildered, added "It's a real oddity how that got there."

New creative plateaus

Think of all the names you wanted to call your teachers when they piled on the extra homework ... now think of all the names you called them to their face. A big difference, no?

But in all that mud-slinging, did names like Fred Flintstone, Archie Andrews or the Green Hornet ever cross your mind? Probably not. You were too busy looking for the worst profanity you could find. Calling your math teacher Elmer Fudd was simply not enough of an insult.

But today's students have reached new creative plateaus. They aren't satisfied with the narrow range of broad language left behind from another generation. They have come up with a whole new set of insults, including cartoon characters.

Last April in British Columbia, a high school student hit his teacher with a low blow and the teacher hit back. The 17-year old boy called his industrial arts instructor a 'Papa Smurf' and the teacher, who clearly did not appreciate the comment, slapped the teenager on the side of the head.

In the parking lot of the school, the student, in a joking mood, hailed his teacher with "Hi, Papa Smurf." Needless to say, the professor was not amused — he struck the student. The observant student said later, "He definitely wasn't in a good mood."

The smurfs are those insipid little blue cartoon creatures who live in mushrooms and use their own language which includes substituting the word "smurf" for any adjective. They say things to each other like "That's a smurfy good idea". At the head of this little blue organization is a dude named Papa Smurf.

But meanwhile, back in B.C., the teacher was suspended without pay for eight days and charged with assault. Recently, a provincial court judge ruled that under the Criminal Code a school teacher or any other person acting as a parent is justified in using force if it is warranted and reasonable.

The instructor says the slap was intended to re-establish authority and to remind the student that he'd been very rude. He added he was happy with the judge's decision because it showed that teachers are still afforded some dignity and respect.

And the student? He hasn't said anything yet. But you can be sure he'll think twice before he decides his science teacher looks like Bugs Bunny.

Some Canadians want the drinking age raised, even as others cry to have it lowered.

Some venues cry for beer sales at the corner store, others already have it — and still others wouldn't have it on a bet.

There are places in this country where it's legal to take a glass on one side of the street, but quite against the law to imbibe across the road.

To advertise or not to advertise booze remains the contentious issue it has been down through the years.

Our drinking laws are a real mixed-up mish-mash, right?

Compared to what?

You should have been around in the old days.

Back in the early 1950s in British Columbia, when the Social Credit government came in and the old, restrictive laws went out, it suddenly became permissible to drink openly in cocktail lounges and night clubs.

Deliverance.

Freedom unbonded.

But there was a catch.

Up to then, you had to sneak in your own supplies — a bottle of liquor in a brown paper bag or, if you couldn't afford liquor, then a few bottles of beer in a shopping bag, all to be consumed in the farthest, darkest corner.

CARRIES BOOZE

It was the height of sophistication — being led to your table clutching a paper valise marked "Safeway."

Only the most brazen left later with the empties for the deposit.

Under the new laws, you could order from the wine list but consumption had to take place in a blaze of public scrutiny and liquor inspectors would show up now and then with photographic light-meters to take a reading on your face.

If you were f-11 at 100, you were okay.

It wasn't until 1965 that Saskatchewan permitted liquor advertising of any sort. At that time, Ontario advertisers had their copy checked for suitability by the liquor control board and even so, they were limited to 2,000 agate lines a week in a daily newspaper.

Newfoundland was more liberal.

All forms of advertising and sales promotion were permitted with only one stipulation — the line Not Inserted by the Board of Liquor Control appear beneath each ad.

Today's tippler probably never heard of the old liquor permit issued for each bottle sold.

Quebec never did institute the permit system; New Brunswick and Saskatchewan used them only in wartime; British Columbia abolished theirs in 1947, Manitoba in 1956, Alberta in 1957 and Ontario in 1962.

In Prince Edward Island, you had to get a doctor's certificate — a prescription, really — to buy liquor, but that ended about 1948.

In some parts of the country during wartime drinkers were rationed to one 40-ounce bottle a month. To pick up the bottle, you produced proof of age and got a stamp on the back of your registration card.

This led to violations — thirsty city editors dressed up tall, under-age copy boys in sombre garb and sent them out smoking pipes in search of myopic liquor-store clerks.

Travelling across Canada was once a drinker's nightmare. Bars on trains opened and closed as you rushed through the night passing into various jurisdictions with varying regulations.

To a certain extent, the same thing applied to commercial airliners.

If that was a nightmare, there was one place that was something else again.

Send refugees back where they came from

I've tried to write this one about three times so far. Everytime I get one page of so written I'm so angry I rip it out of the typewriter and file it under "T" for trash, kick the dog and beat my children. Then I justify keeping my mouth closed typewriter-wise by saying there's enough noise being made already and why stick my two cents worth into the fracas. Then I can proceed into a bit about earthworm cycles in Peru or something equally important.

I'm angry about our latest arrivals — the refugee Tamils from India or Germany or Newfoundland or where ever. Now that the fuss has been labelled "racist" by the Globe & Mail (Canada's self appointed mouth-piece) and some of the Tamil associations, it is hard to sit back and watch without chewing a piece off the corner of my desk.

We all watched the story unfold from the first sightings of the lifeboats through the devious story that has since been proven untrue, to watching their names being added to the "dole". We heard our soft-headed Prime Minister talking about world responsibility and Canada's big heart. We're about to watch the entire situation swept under the rug and forgotten although most members of parliament are reporting thousands of angry telephone calls from their voters.

Now the fuss has been labelled "racist". That means that anyone who says anything against the policy that has been adopted by our immigration department is automatically branded a "bad person" and his opinions unworthy of any further discussion. The implication is that "if these poor Sri Lankan refugees were white and from a northern European country nobody would be upset about their illegal entry."

Where the pavement ends

What garbage! What a convenient way to muzzle any opposition. If you say anything you're racist, a red-neck and a rat.

Since I've already been called all of the above, let me expound on my racist, red-neck, rattish reputation. (rattish?) In a country that has such a high unemployment level and such high rates of government waste spending, what we really need are more people to help us spend more money. If each of these new arrivals are given $400 per month for the next year we will spend ($400 x 155 x 12) $744,000. I realize that this is only a drop in the bucket when you consider federal budgets but to me $744,000 is a pile of cold cash. I'd rather see that 3/4 of a million spent on Canadians to alleviate some of the farm problems, or native education, or even social assistance to needing Canadians (I'll wager we could find 155 Canadians who need another $400 a month with little effort).

What we have is a group of non-Canadians who put themselves in a laundry basket and left themselves at our front door. A group of people who paid up to $3,000 each for the opportunity of avoiding the normal immigration channels. A group of illegal entrants. On the other hand we have the Canadian Immigration Department saying "Sure, we know you are illegal. We know you lied to us. We know you conspired to break Canadian law. We know we'll have to pay you a living wage for the value of your presence. We know you don't qualify for immigrant status. But you're welcome to stay anyhow."

Our lantern-jawed baritone leader said "If we're going to err, we will err on the side of compassion. Canada is a country of compassion ... a country with a big heart." Yes, and a country with a big hole where it's brain should be.

We've been deluded into thinking of these people as political refugees from Sri Lanka — people with no place to go, unable to return home, faced with imprisonment or death in their own country who are asking us for help and relief. In reality they seem to be a bunch of West German refugees (some have lived for up to three years in Germany) who thought that Canada promised a better life than the one they were currently enjoying in Germany. They were well enough off to afford $3,000 to get them into Canada (I can't afford $3,000 for anything right now ... how many Canadians can?) and simply because they pulled the "Moses in the bul-lrushes" act they expected us to accept and support them.

I don't care if they are blue, green or purple. I don't care if they come from Germany, England or France. I suggest that our only responsibility to these people is to provide them with a one-way ticket back to West Germany as quickly as possible. A one-way ticket and a huge sign that reads: "Canada is not a patsy. If you want to become a Canadian through the proper channels. Don't start by cheating, lying and breaking the law. Anyone who tries to enter this country illegally will be fed (once) and returned from whence they came." P.S. This particular group of 155 Tamils has now blown it and if they apply for legal status will be refused. Let this be a warning to those who may be considered passage on the next freighter to the misty shores of Newfoundland. Do it right or don't do it at all."

Of course this won't happen. This group of people will be given the royal treatment and set up for life. The next group will be treated the same way too. Perhaps we might even change our laws to remove any need of qualification, or make it mandatory for new-Canadians to arrive by life boat in St. John's. (if you can't paddle a life-raft you can't get in). If you are not going to follow the laws already established you might as well have laws you intend to follow. In fact, if our government refuses to follow its own laws, why have any laws at all? Why should you and I be expected to obey the laws of the land if the people who make the laws break them whenever they wish?

A big heart and no brains at all!

Dear Editor:

At the Brome Lake council meeting of Sept. 8 the mayor demonstrated his railroading skills in riding roughshod over citizen's concerns of the new zoning by-laws.

There have been approximately 79 public meetings on zoning over two years but the apartment complexes in three lakeshore zones were introduced Traditionally Brome Lake council meetings have allowed questions from the public throughout the meeting. Cutting off the municipal association and conservation association representatives was shameful and unprecedented. Several other questions from the public were accepted on zoning and other subjects.

It is scandalous to authorise doubling the lakeshore population with neither public discussion nor professional analysis of the social and environmental aspects.

On this day in history

September 10, 1986

By The Canadian Press

The Battle of Lake Erie, a War of 1812 engagement, was won when a U.S. naval force under Commodore Oliver Perry defeated the British 173 years ago today — in 1813. The victory, which Perry summed up in a report by saying, "We have met the enemy and they are ours," gave the United States control of Lake Erie.

Also on this day in:

1937 — More than 1,500 cases of infantile paralysis with 58 deaths were reported in Canada in an epidemic that began in June.

1713 — Scientist and cleric John Needham was born in London.

1846 — The sewing machine was patented by Elias Howe of Spencer, Mass.

Move to curb president's term backfires

WASHINGTON (CP) — Ronald Reagan is flattered. Nancy Reagan is not amused. The Democrats smell a rat. And Franklin Delano Roosevelt is probably chortling in his grave.

The reason? A Republican-inspired campaign to change the U.S. constitution to give Reagan a shot at four more years in the White House.

Of course none of this would be necessary if the Republicans had not led a successful campaign in the 1940s to amend the constitution to preclude presidents from sitting for more than two, four-year terms.

Known as the 22nd amendment, it became the law of the land in 1951, six years after Roosevelt, the Democratic president who spurred the Republicans to action by winning four consecutive elections, had died in office.

Before Roosevelt, U.S. presidents had followed the lead of their predecessors and opted against seeking more than two terms even though the constitution contained no such restriction.

The merits of the 22nd amendment have been debated on and off during

Interpreting the News

By Norma Greenaway

the last 35 years. But the latest burst of interest, virtually all of which is coming from Republican circles, is clearly linked to the belief that the popular Republican president now occupying the Oval Office could score another victory if given the chance.

LEADS CAMPAIGN

The campaign to repeal the 22nd amendment is led by Max Hugel, a Reagan campaign adviser, and congressman Guy Vander Jagt of Michigan, chairman of the Republican campaign committee of the House of Representatives.

"When Ronald Reagan raises his right hand and takes the oath of office

... for a third term ... historians will look back and say it all began here," Vander Jagt said as he kicked off the campaign.

"The 22nd amendment is an insult to American voters who are wise and well-informed."

Many Democrats, while saying they aren't opposed in principle to repealing the 22nd amendment, write off the effort as a fund-raising gimmick by Republicans nervously eyeing a future without Reagan.

The 75-year-old Reagan is reported to be flattered by the move. He favors repeal of the two-term limit but says he is sticking to his plan to retire to his mountain-top ranch in California when his second term ends in January 1989.

Close aides say they believe him and make clear that talk of a possible third term leaves Nancy Reagan cold. "She'd kill him," one aide was quoted as saying.

LACKS ENTHUSIASM

There also seems to be a lack of enthusiasm on the part of the public. A recent poll by Newsweek magazine said 60 per cent of 771 adults questioned opposed repealing the 22nd amendment and 62 per cent said they would not like to see Reagan elected for a third term.

Even taking account a margin of error of plus or minus four percentage points, repeal advocates can't be heartened by the results. It seems unlikely, therefore, that the campaign can pick up enough steam in time for the 1988 presidential election.

A chief constraint is the complicated formula required for amending the U.S. constitution. To be adopted, it would have to be approved by two-thirds of the 435-member House and the 100-member Senate and then ratified by 38 state legislatures.

It took four years to get the 22nd amendment through the chain the first time round and few political analysts believe that things would be much different this time.

All things considered, it's hard to imagine Vice-President George Bush, congressman Jack Kemp or any other potential contenders for the Republican presidential nomination losing sleep over the proposal.

Education

Glasses won't help these students

Children with learning disabilities such as dyslexia cannot be treated with glasses or other corrections to vision, according to the Canadian Ophthalmological Society (COS).

Dyslexia is not a defect in eyesight. It's a defect in the processing of visual information by the brain. The eyes of a dyslexic child will see information correctly but the brain may scramble that information. Letters, words or numbers are reversed, inverted or scrambled so they are not read the way they appear.

"Dyslexic children are often thought to have eye problems but glasses are useless in the specific treatment of dyslexia or related learning disabilities," says Dr. J. Donald Morin, a specialist in pediatric ophthalmology at the Hospital for Sick Children in Toronto. "In fact, the use of glasses may delay early diagnosis and remedial treatment, which are essential to prevent repetitive experiences of failure in spelling and reading."

MOST IN MALES

Dyslexia is usually first discovered in the early school years when a child is unable to read with understanding. A dyslexic child may write upside down, downhill, backwards or form letters of distorted sizes. They can also have trouble sounding out words or building words and the same words or numbers may be interpreted differently from time to time.

Approximately 10 per cent of all children have a learning disability (their performance in school falls far below their estimated intellectual potential), and 1/2 to 3/4 of that group — or two to three per cent of all children — have dyslexia. Of each 10 cases of dyslexia discovered, nine occur in males. The condition remains a weakness throughout adult life but it can be greatly improved with proper therapy and reading practice.

Dyslexic children are also often wrongly diagnosed as emotionally disabled or developmentally delayed. "Children with dyslexia will often lose interest in school when they begin to fail," says Morin. "That's when the child begins to misbehave in order to compensate for his or her problem. That in turn causes a breakdown in the parent-child relationship. The child is unable to meet parents' expectations and the parents get anxious."

Parents of a child with undiagnosed dyslexia come into my office all charged up, expecting to find a neat quick solution," says Morin. "Some find it very difficult to accept the fact that their child has dyslexia. The dyslexic child does require special education in reading and writing. However, it's also true that they are usually very skillful in one or more areas other than reading and writing. Some have a good ear for music, others are very adept at working with their hands."

POTENTIAL PROBLEMS

Morin emphasizes that no particular eye defect is associated with dyslexia. Dyslexia sufferers have no higher or lower incidence of eye problems than non-sufferers. Therefore, glasses or other visual training are of no use in treatment.

Recent studies suggest dyslexia and other associated learning disabilities may be related to genetic, biochemical or structural brain changes or a combination of the three. Children with potential problems include those with speech defects, emotional problems or a family history of learning disability.

The COS has called for further scientific research into the condition and, in the meantime, recommends parents who have children with potential problems, arrange an examination by medical, psychological and educational specialists as early as possible.

"Teachers who have been trained to spot the condition in children lay an important role in the early diagnosis and treatment process," says Morin. "Because it's often believed to be a vision defect, they come to me and as an ophthalmologist it's my job to make sure the child's eyes are healthy. If my tests and review of the child's educational history point to a learning disability, I'll refer them to the learning disability clinic or special educator."

The Canadian Ophthalmological Society is the national association of Canada's eye physicians and surgeons. Founded in 1937, it is a non-profit organization with over 850 members representing approximately 80 per cent of all ophthalmologists in Canada.

Flying bottles at the Elmwood resulted in posse of local cops

There were bodies all over the place.

It might be worthwhile to check how many 'frosh' make it back after the Bishop's orientation pub crawl. An awful lot wake up on somebody's lawn. But this year's lot got help getting home from the Lennoxville-Ascot police Wednesday night.

Things apparently got a little out of hand at the Elmwood watering hole. It's said bottles were flying. Whatever really happened, the end result was a posse of cops. The Law then moved on to close the Georgian.

Student council vp internal Mark Wrobel says the mess was an exercise in unnecessary muscle flexing. Wrobel says he was at the Elmwood shortly before the raid. "It was not out of control. There were a lot of people, there was a lot of partying, people up on tables partying away," he says. Wrobel characterized the evening as being "loud and rambunctious."

Wrobel feels the police "started off on the wrong foot. It was simply intimidation."

FUZZ MOBILES

But townies, as BU jargon has branded the local element, are very upset. One musician says that upon the entry of a couple of police officers into the G, a few Bish hulks decided that as the two were outnumbered, a little 'fun' could be had.

They changed their minds once the other fuzz mobiles and a paddy wagon drove into the parking lot.

Everyone — 250 revellers in all — was asked to leave around 2 a.m. No one was arrested.

Police head Richard Tremblay says there were some 60 students blocking traffic in front of the Elmwood, broken furniture, and dozens of calls from residents "who wanted to get some sleep."

Tremblay says the cops met principal Hugh Scott the next morning.

Adds Tremblay, "We could have arrested dozens. We can't tolerate this sort of thing too often... Homecoming is coming at the end of the month. We'll be prepared."

(It used to be so easy to get people out of the G. Bernie, a regular hanger-on, would walk in and offer to rid the building of undesirables in exchange for a free brew. A brief trip outside and he'd be back; Bernie would pick up the beer, sit down, carefully balance his shotgun against the table top, and take a drink. By the time he wiped his mouth off, the place was empty.)

Other initiation shenanigans: No more the ridiculous sight of football players parading naked through local drinking establishments. Impressing those in charge of orientation now means taking off your clothes and jumping on passing security guards. Kangaroo Court — for those who refused to roll in the molasses the first time around — meant more tar and feathering.

Maybe I'm just getting old...

CRAWLING ABOUT

It was a lot easier to get a hold of alcohol this year. Lord knows, getting your hands on a case isn't difficult. But students usually had to leave campus to do it on weekdays. Welcome to the pub management's latest money making scheme: The Gaiterdome.

It's a circus tent full of beer. And it made a fortune. The good news: The bucks poured into student council coffers go right back to constituents. The bad news: The pub crawl had started hours before it usually does, and everybody was 10 times drunker than usual.

On to the Bishop's University Memorial House Pub — known many years ago as the Pub. This illustrious institution had a few problems last year. Allegations of widespread corruption led to one official losing part of an honorarium (a decision later appealed — the full amount was eventually granted). Hundreds of drink tickets were 'misplaced'. The '86 staff has ordered new tickets, making last year's worthless.

And it's supposed to be tougher to get in. Pub cards were introduced last year. Give your school I.D. card, repeat your birthdate, get your photo taken. You end up with a small red plasticized gizmo that will admit you to the danceteria.

The official reason for the enhanced security is a community-minded concern for under-aged Lennpuddians gaining access to alcohol. The off-the-record logics of it have to do with the belief that locals were waltzing in, getting plastered, and causing trouble. Not to mention bad publicity. Keep outsiders away and discipline is dealt with very quietly by Bishop's and Champlain people.

PHOTOCOPY IT

Of course, getting a pub card isn't a problem. Borrow someone's I.D. (no one checks the picture). Or pay your buck and get signed in by someone who'll vouch for your age. Three pieces of identification are needed, but that's not usually too hard to come by.

One Bish student's scam involves photocopying a (different) university I.D. card while blanking out any personal information. Add your own name and a photo from the machine outside the grocery store, and plasticize it. It's quite a money-making venture — and you're an instant visitor from Ontario. You can also take advantage of student discounts anyway.

But for the over 18, legitimate cards are available Sept. 11 from 12:30 to 2:30, and Sept. 12 from 2 to 4 p.m. The place to be is the pub. Be ready to dish out a dollar.

The handbook has been found. It was in the possession of its editor R. Jay Swanborough. The book is now in the mail and the SRC is in the market for a new editor. Deadline is Sept. 20 and there's a $300 honorarium sweetening the deal. Applications should be sent to box 1012.

For 40 years, Radio Champlain-Bishop's University has dreamed of broadcasting on FM cable. Expectations ran high last year as station officials talked big — but delivered little. Indeed, the BU student paper made quite a flap when it published a candid review of the foul-ups — including the station manager resignedly taking the blame with a comment that some found of questionable taste.

THREE INCHES

Technician Andy White ('Droid' to his friends) has taken over the reigns, although the old guard is still actively involved. CJMQ sent in an AM broadcast request to the CRTc that was returned with a note asking for a letter from Buildings and Grounds okaying equipment installation. Then it's gone.

But AM approval isn't what the station is really gunning for. The FM market is closer to CJMQ's format. That application is three inches thick and due to be mailed in two week's time. A hearing will follow, and White says he can't begin to guess how much time the process will take.

But many of the deals cut last year have to be renegotiated. The local cable company which agreed to carry the signal has changed management. "It's not a go anymore," White says. The station has been paying for phone lines which are to send the station's sound to the company all summer. But the new manager wants CJMQ to get its licence before anything is agreed upon — a condition White says isn't necessary.

Another problem is money. White estimates McGill radio's budget at $80,000 a semester. "They (Bishop's and Champlain student councils) have given us what they think is a lot of money. For this school, it is a lot of money. I don't blame them for getting angry — they just want to hear us," White says.

White says.

WALLOP 'EM

Cable or not, RCBU-cum-CJMQ broadcasts on its closed-circuit system Monday.

The bus for Queen's leaves Saturday. For $25 a shot, fans can watch the Gaiters wallop the bad guys. Tickets are on sale today in front of the mailboxes.

Queen's fans are best remembered as the gang which destroyed the goalposts at a McGill game a while back. The Bishop's contingent usually restricts itself to taking over the field in between quarters.

On a more positive note: SRC vp external John Hilton tried to make up for the pub crawl fiasco and do a good turn at the same time. Some 20 years ago, Bishop's shined the shoes of passers-by for cystic fibrosis research.

Some 100 bleary-eyed party-goers got up once their doors were kicked in at 9 a.m. Saturday by orientation group leaders. The Shinerama collected about $500. Laughs Hilton, "It's a community service... more of a 'get to know freshmen' (affair) than to cause street riots."

VACANT SEATS

One small altercation: The proper permit hadn't been applied for at the Lennoxville town hall, and police were afraid of 'illegal soliciting'. But everybody's shoes were shined, including those belonging to the mayors of Sherbrooke and Lennoxburg, so everything worked out.

Champlain student council (CSA) elections are set for Sept. 29 and 30. Nomination period opens today and closes Sept. 19. Campaigning (if necessary, the note specifies) is from Sept. 22 to 26. Apathy at the collegial level has usually meant unchallenged candidates or vacant seats.

Red-in-the-face department: Mark Wrobel is in a huff. I rather snarkily suggested the only reason he was back at Bishop's on time was because he had never left. In fact, he didn't spend his summer in Lennoxville. He went to Europe.

What are health and social services?

Many people wonder what exactly health and social services are. The phrase refers to services provided by various public institutions such as hospitals, local community health centers (known as CLSC's; see our column July 23), and social service centers (CSS). The services in question relate to health and social well-being. In other words, health and social services institutions provide us with psychological, physical and social care from birth to death.

A Regional Council of Health and Social Services (CRSSS) is an umbrella organization responsible for planning, managing and assessing the service needs of the population of a given region of Quebec. It also receives formal complaints about services made by the different institutions which it governs: local community service centers, social service centers, reception centers for institutionalized care, hospitals and the department of community health (DSC; see column August 20). It is responsible for the coordination and networking of the institutions which it governs and of the community volunteer organizations which if financially supports. Most of the Eastern Townships falls into the territory of two Regional Councils: Estrie (Region 05)

Keeping in touch

By Victoria Coste

Townshippers Association and Montérégie (Region 6C).

The Board of Directors of each CRSSS sets up a five year plan based on what are perceived as the health and social service priorities for the region. Recently, the Regional Council for the Eastern Townships (CRSSSE) published its five year objectives in a document (which is available to the public) called "Défis Présents et Futurs en Estrie". This document outlines twelve problems as priorities for action in our region:

1. Mental Health Problems
2. Parental Role Problems
3. Marital Problems
4. Alcohol and Drugs
5. Unemployment and Problems Relating to Early Retirement and Retirement.
6. Problems Related to Loss of Self-Reliance
7. Isolation of Certain Social

Groups

8. Cardio-Vascular Diseases
9. Physical and Sexual Violence in Families
10. Injury and Shock
11. Tumors and Cancers
12. Respiratory Diseases

It is noteworthy that although this document sets out to highlight the main health and social problems of the Estrie region, it makes very little mention of the English-speaking community's concerns on the accessibility and availability of health and social services in English.

Sept. 19, the CRSSSE is hosting a forum on health and social service priorities to which local community organizations have been invited. The document described above will be used as the basis for work. Realizing that this forum is a key phase in the working out of priorities and planned action for health and social services in our region, the Townshippers' Association is concerned that the English-Speaking community's needs be expressed. Townshippers', therefore, urges all those who have input based on personal experience to contact us or other English-language community organizations before September 19 and voice their concerns about health and social problems. In this way, English-language community organizations will be in a position to bring forward the specific needs of the English-speaking community at the forum. Those who have input could consider the list of 12 problems prioritized as a way of classifying or talking about cases of which they have personal knowledge.

Cohabitators have no legal inheritance rights

Legally speaking

By Jacqueline Kouri

Q. My son and his wife were divorced and following this, my son made a will, typed, with a hand-signed signature and witnessed by two of his friends (hand signatures).

In 1981, he began living with a girl, they purchased a house and after he discovered she was having an affair, he bought her "out", so to speak. This transaction was done before a notary. His "company" life insurance was changed so that his father is beneficiary.

The question is the fact that he is still living with this girl (since 1981), in the event of his death, will she inherit the house? Incidentally, they are residents of Quebec. I am interested to know what her claim can be.

A. The will your son has made is valid because it was signed before two witnesses as is necessary for a will drafted in "English form" (typed). However, you have not mentioned to whom he has bequeathed his estate. If he has named as beneficiary of his estate someone other than the girl with whom he has been living, then she would not inherit the house.

Her only claim against the estate would be for compensation of any sums she personally has invested in the house since the ownership was transferred to your son. This compensation would only be due for major repairs or renovations to the house and not for minor repairs.

In the province of Quebec concubinage is not recognized as giving legal rights. There is no such thing as a "common-law" wife in this province.

However, the law does give a person who has cohabited with another person as "man and wife" the right to "spousal" benefits if they have cohabited for more than a year.

Vigneault-Henderson wedding solemnized

The wedding of Marie Clémence Vigneault, daughter of Florent Vigneault and the late Marie Claire Vigneault and step-daughter of Pierrette Vigneault of Plessisville, Que., to Terry Ray Henderson, son of Herbert and Vivian Henderson of Thetford Mines, Que., took place April 26, 1986 at 3:30 p.m. at the Notre Dame Church in Thetford Mines, Que.

The church was nicely decorated with large white satin bows on the pews, pretty baskets of flowers and lighted candles at the altar. The bride and groom's parents were seated on chairs in front of the altar.

As the bride walked up the aisle, a friend of hers, accompanied by the organist, sang "Aimer". The groom then escorted his future wife to the altar preceded by Father Brodeur.

The double ring ceremony was conducted in English and French by Father Brodeur. The first scripture reading, done by Father Brodeur in English, was Colossians 3:12-17 on family unity. It was followed by the bride's brother, Serge Vigneault, reading in French, Corinthians 13:1-13 which is about love.

After the marriage ceremony the registry was signed, during which time a friend of the bride sang "Endless Love"

Alain Turcott, the photographer, took pictures of the bride and groom during the ceremony. After the wedding, parents and guests joined the bride and groom on the steps of the church for more pictures. Then the bride and groom left to have some pictures taken at the photographer's and were driven there by a cousin of the bride, Sylvain Vigneault.

The bride looked lovely in a long white gown of embroidered lace over satin with a satin sash, puffed sleeves to mid-arm tapering to embroidered scallops at her hands, with embroidered scallops around the bottom of the dress. Her headpiece was a narrow band across her forehead caught at each side with double petals and baby's breath flowers. Her three quarter length veil was gathered at the back of her head and she carried a bouquet of large pink roses with baby's breath.

The groom wore a navy blue serge suit, a white shirt with a stand-up collar and turned down points, a deep rose pink bow tie with matching pocket handkerchief and a pink rose with baby's breath boutonniere.

The guests gathered at Thetford Receptions Hall. On the arrival of the bride and groom a receiving line was formed and congratulations were offered. Guests were handed a glass of sherry as they filed by.

The bride and groom's table was centered with a three-tiered wedding cake decorated with white icing, pink rose buds, small silver leaves and topped with a double wedding ring decoration. It was made and decorated by a neighbour of the bride, Collette Mathew. Bouquets of flowers similar to the bride's bouquet were placed on each side of the cake.

Seated at the head table with the bride and groom were the bride's father, dressed in a dark beige suit with matching beige and blue tie and a boutonniere of two pink rose buds. The mother of the bride chose a peach calf-length lace dress with long sleeves. Her corsage was three pink rose buds with baby's breath and a ribbon matching her dress. Denis Vigneault, uncle and godfather of the bride, wore a dark grey suit, matching tie and a single white rose bud boutonniere. Jeannette Vigneault, godmother and aunt of the bride was in a beige medium-length dress with a corsage of two white rose buds and baby's breath with a ribbon matching her dress.

The groom's father wore a medium grey pinstripe suit, a wine and grey tie with matching pocket handkerchief and a boutonniere of two pink rose buds with baby's breath. The groom's mother was attired in light blue chiffon over taffeta medium-length dress with long sleeves, and pale blue embroidery on the skirt and scalloped hem. Her corsage was three pink rose buds and baby's breath tinted to match the dress and ribbon. Glendon Morrison, uncle of the groom, wore a dark blue suit with matching tie and a white rose boutonniere. June Morrison, aunt of the groom, chose a pretty royal blue dress of polyester silk with long sleeves, high neck and matching shoes, her corsage was two white rose buds with baby's breath.

A turkey dinner was served to about 225 relatives and friends. The Miller Band supplied the music for the evening with the bride and groom opening the dancing with a waltz. Later in the evening, the bride's bouquet was caught by Josée Gosselin and the garter by Sylvain Vigneault. At midnight a buffet lunch was served to the guests, after which the groom thanked everyone in English and French on behalf of himself and his wife for the lovely gifts, money and good wishes.

Great-aunts of the groom who attended from a distance were Mildred Pecor and Madeline Lowery, both from Westerville, Vt., Gertrude Crawford, Barre, Vt., Ethel MacRae, Kinneer's Mills and Ellen and Gladwin Geake, Bulwer.

Also attending from a distance were a friend, Winston Moore of Woodbury, Vt., and a grandmother of the bride, Marie-Ange Laliberté of Notre Dame de Lourdes. Guests were from Montreal, Plessisville, Victoriaville, Notre Dame de Lourdes, Quebec City, Trenton, Ont., Rivière du Loup, Bulwer, Cookshire, Sawyerville, Randboro, Lennoxville, Leeds, Kinneer's Mills and Thetford Mines.

two-week honeymoon in Honolulu, Hawaii. They are now residing in St. Leonard, Montreal. Both have been employed for the last two years — Ray at Arthur Anderson & Cie. and Clémence at Yvon Boudanger Ltée.

Ray is a graduate of Johnson High School in Thetford Mines. He studied two years at Champlain College, Lennoxville, and graduated in 1984 from Concordia University with a Bachelor of Commerce degree and will write his C.A. exams in September at McGill University.

Clémence graduated from the Polyvalente and the C.E.G.E.P. in Thetford Mines with a diploma in Administration.

CPS, PPM, LPM, WPM, NLQ — what do the letters mean?

Q. Due to your recent columns I have started reading some computer ads and I find that the printer terminology is just as confusing as I used to find the computer terminology. For example Dot Matrix, Daisy Wheel, Parralel, Serial, CPS, etc.. I would appreciate a column that explains these terms.

A. I agree that many of these terms seem confusing to the novice. The tendency of Data Processing publications to insert unexplained acronyms and numbers into the middle of otherwise straight-forward articles seem to serve no purpose other than to perplex the novice reader. On the other hand, I would soon tire of articles or ads that repeatedly referred to Characters Per Second instead of CPS.

Well, that's a start. CPS refers to printer speed. Another measurement of speed that is often used is PPM, or Pages Per Minute (this measurement is usually used for Laser prints which I will discuss later in this column). There are two other acronyms that are occasionally used, LPM (Lines Per Minute) which usually

COMPUTER EASE

By Norman J. Longworth

refers to larger printers than those associated with a micro computer, and WPM (Words Per Minute) which is usually used for typing speed, but is sometimes used to make the speed of a Daisy Wheel printer (I'll get to them, too) sound faster. If you are quoted WPM, multiply by 7 (the characters in a word), and divide by 60. For example: 145 WPM multiplied by 7 gives 1,015, then divided by 60 gives 16.9 or 17 CPS, a much less impressive sounding number.

The terms Serial and Parralel are descriptions of how the data is sent from the computer to the printer. If you remember from my first column a byte consists of 8 bits, and 1 byte represents one character. A parralel printer accepts a full byte at a time, the bits are transmitted parallel to each other. In contrast a serial printer will only accept one bit at a time, I.E. the byte is transmitted serially.

A term normally associated with parralel printers is Centronics, this manufacturer of printers has established an industry standard that is usually quoted to indicate that it can be connected to a large number of computers. RS232C is a standard used to indicate the compatibility of serial devices, including, but not limited to printers. Modems are another example of serial devices.

Dot Matrix and Daisy Wheel printers are both impact printers. An impact printer is a printer that puts the image on paper by striking an inked ribbon. Non-impact printers use other forms of technology in order to put the image on paper.

Dot Matrix printers use a number of wires in a straight up and down line to form the characters. Most people are very familiar with the look of dot matrix characters. A cash register slip, or a 6/49 ticket are rather coarse examples of dot matrix characters. I believe these printers use a 7 wire print head, which is one of the main reasons the resolution is so poor. Generally, the more wires in the print head the better looking the letters are. Nine wire print heads are currently standard, but Fujitsu, among others, has introduced a twenty-four wire print head.

Even with the improved resolution of a twenty-four wire print head, it is still obvious that the printing was done by a computer printer. In order to make their printers as attractive as possible, most manufacturers of dot matrix printers include an NLQ (Near Letter Quality) mode. The twenty-four wire print head is capable of producing NLQ that requires a very close look to see that it wasn't done on a typewriter. The nine wire NLQ is often quite good, depending on the manufacturer. The dot matrix printer is also capable of doing very impressive graphics. It's also much faster than the daisy wheel, being easily available in speeds from 100 to 220 CPS.

A Daisy Wheel printer uses the same type of print head that is used in typewriters, the linear descendant of the IBM Selectric's galloping golf ball. This print head has the characters arranged in a circle around a central hub, hence the name Daisy Wheel. These style printers are much slower than Dot Matrix printers. The standard speed range is about 17 to 60 CPS.

An important extra feature to look for in either type of printer is a buffer. To explain what a buffer does, I'd like to explain a simple program cycle without a buffer. First the program reads a record from the disk, and waits until the data is read in. When the data is read in, time is spent while the calculations are done. The program then has to wait until the printer is finished, before it can read in another record to start the cycle again.

A buffer is an amount of RAM memory that has been added to the printer. When the computer sends the information to the printer, it's accepted into the buffer, and the program is free to read the disk, and do the calculations, while the printer prints from the buffer. The improvement in speed of execution can be dramatic.

There are two non-impact printers that are also available. The ink-jet printer squirts the ink onto the page. It's extremely quiet, and produces excellent NLQ. It's not much faster than the better dot matrix printers and is more expensive.

The Laser printer is the Mercedes-Benz of printers. Usually based on photo-copier technology, it's extremely fast (6 to 10 PPM), very quiet, and produces letter quality print as well as graphics. Both can be mixed on the same page. It is a little pricey for the average home, stating at over $6,000 Canadian. The price has been coming down, though. I was reading a text book recently that spoke of the six figure price. Granted, that was based on a different technology. Non-impact printers naturally can't produce carbon copies.

If you have any computer questions, write me care of this column. Questions that are of general interest will be answered. Norman J. Longworth has been working in Data processing since 1961, and is currently a computer system consultant practicing in the Sherbrooke region.

Is a gas surtax coming? It may be needed to make up for lost $$$

By The Canadian Press

In an attempt to revive Canada's depressed oil and gas industry, Energy Minister Marcel Masse has ended effective Oct. 1 the federal government's petroleum and gas revenue tax.

Masse, following his announcement in Calgary on Monday, estimated the premature end to the levy — it was to be phased by the end of 1988 — will cost Ottawa between $800 million and $1.2 billion.

Industry estimates go as high as $1.5 billion.

A gasoline surtax is one way of compensating for the lost revenue, but the minister refused to comment on what action his government is considering.

Masse made the announcement at a luncheon meeting of about 200 members of the oil and gas industry's five key lobby groups, who stood and applauded his words.

The groups received hasty invitations late last week after federal officials said the energy minister was coming to Calgary with good news.

Masse was expected to call a halt to the revenue tax at a far larger luncheon a month ago. But he disappointed and angered a crowd of

1,000 by saying the levy would not be eliminated until provincial governments reduced their royalties. REJECTS LINK

In the four weeks since then Alberta Energy Minister Neil Webber has steadfastly refused to tie royalties to the federal tax.

Alberta Premier Don Getty confirmed Monday his government has made no commitment to Ottawa to reduce royalties.

"We've been following a plan ... that would lead to removal of the PGRT and I'm glad to see that that has worked," Getty said.

But the premier said removal of the tax by itself will not solve all of the industry's problems.

In other business news Monday, Nesbitt Thomson Inc. of Montreal and F.H. Deacon Hodgson and Co. Ltd. of Toronto announced they will merge to form a new Canadian brokerage company with $115 million in capital and 2,000 employees.

"Because of what's happening in deregulation, the future lies in large, strong companies that are international in scope," Brian Aune, chairman of Nesbitt Thomson Inc., told a news conference in Montreal.

Under the agreement approved by directors of both firms over the weekend, F.H. Deacon shareholders will get one million Class A shares in Nesbitt Thomson, worth about $15 million at current prices, plus $5 million cash, Aune said. The deal is to be completed by Sept. 30.

OPERATES WORLD-WIDE
Nesbitt Thomson, which calls itself Canada's third-largest investment dealer, had revenue of $201 million in fiscal 1986. It has 26 offices across Canada as well as operations in South America, the United States and Europe.

F.H. Deacon Hodgson, one of Canada's oldest investment firms, was founded in 1897. It is one of Canada's top 20 dealers, with capital of $10 million, six offices and 230 employees across the country, and revenue of $27 million in fiscal 1986.

Both companies are profitable and their spokesmen emphasized that the merger was not made under duress.

In other developments:
— The tourism boom continued into the second half of the year as foreigners continued to visit Canada in July in numbers unmatched in more than 10 years, Statistics Canada figures show.

"Long-term visits to Canada by residents of the United States reached the highest July level since 1975 while visits by residents from other countries climbed to the highest July level since 1972," the agency said.

— U.S. trade negotiator Peter Murphy said Canada's claim to cultural sovereignty is one of the difficult, time-consuming issues of free-trade talks and he welcomes industry suggestions on where to draw the line.

He was commenting during a trade hearing in Washington where Benjamin Cooper, vice-president of Printing Industries of America Inc., urged U.S. negotiators to ensure Canada does not get away with protecting its printing industry under the guise of defending cultural sovereignty.

— Quebec Premier Robert Bourassa opened a giant modern aluminum smelter at Becancour, Que., on the banks of the St. Lawrence River, and declared he is confident it will thrive despite slumping world aluminum prices.

The Aluminerie de Becancour Inc. is a $1.1-billion joint project owned one-quarter by the province and one-quarter by Alumax Quebec, Inc., a subsidiary of the U.S.-

based Alumax Inc., an American-Japanese venture.

The other half is owned by Pechiney Corp., an American subsidiary of the French government-owned company, Pechiney Ugine Kuhlman SA.

Mutual fund gets credit evaluation for first time

TORONTO (CP) — Investors wondering about the quality of their mutual funds may soon have an easy answer in a credit rating.

For the first time in Canada, a mutual fund has received a credit evaluation, and there are predictions the practice will spread.

The First Canadian Mortgage Fund, which has about $100 million in assets and is run by the Bank of Montreal, has just received a triple-A ranking from Canada's two major rating agencies.

The triple-A opinion by Dominion Bond Rating Service and Canadian Bond Rating Service Ltd. is the highest the firms grant. It signifies that the fund has demonstrated good profitability, with minimal risk to the money placed in it.

Mutual funds raise money from many investors, pooling the cash for the purchase of stocks, bonds, or mortgages. Credit ratings have, until recently, been given only to securities issued by companies.

Penant races cooling down as Astros, Angels, Sox all win

By The Associated Press

The Houston Astros defeated the Cincinnati Reds 9-2 on Tuesday and opened up more ground in the National League West between themselves and their closest competitors.

"These were big losses for them," said Houston's Billy Hatcher after the victory completed a two-game sweep over the Reds and gave the Astros a 10-game lead in the NL West. "They are 10 games out now and the way we are playing, it's going to be tough for them to come back."

Hatcher did his part with three straight singles, three runs scored, one RBI and two stolen bases.

In other NL games, Montreal Expos beat New York Mets 9-7; Chicago Cubs downed Philadelphia Phillies 8-6 in 10 innings; and St. Louis Cardinals defeated Pittsburgh Pirates 3-1.

In American League play, it was: New York Yankees 3, Toronto Blue Jays 1; Boston Red Sox 7, Baltimore Orioles 4; Milwaukee Brewers 3, Detroit Tigers 1; California Angels 8, Cleveland Indians 1; Chicago White Sox 4, Oakland A's 1; Seattle Mariners 3, Texas Rangers 1; and Kansas City Royals 11, Minnesota Twins 3.

Houston starter Mike Scott and Tom Browning were locked in a pitching duel over the first 5½ innings until the Astros broke it open in the sixth with four runs, highlighted by Glenn Davis's two-run double.

"I'm not going to quit," Reds manager Pete Rose said. "We're still in second but I can't worry about catching Houston."

"I'm worried about catching (last-place) San Diego the way we're playing."

Expos 9 Mets 7

Andre Dawson's two-run homer with none out in the ninth inning gave Montreal the win. Tim Lincecum opened the inning with a single off reliever Jesse Orosco, 6-6, and Dawson followed with his homer on the first pitch. Randy Hunt followed with an RBI single to give the Expos a two-run lead. Tim Burke, 9-7, was the winner in relief.

Cubs 8 Phillies 6

Leon Durham's two-run homer in the 10th inning gave Chicago the win. Keith Moreland, who earlier had hit two home runs, singled with one out in the 10th before Durham hit his 18th home run of the year. Lee Smith, 9-9, was the winner and Steve Bedrosian, 8-5, the loser.

Cardinals 3 Pirates 1

Andy Van Slyke had three hits and one RBI and Clint Hurdle hit a solo homer to lead St. Louis. Rick Horton, 3-3, allowed one run and seven hits over the first five innings for the victory. Todd Worrell, the fourth St. Louis pitcher, worked the final two innings for his 32nd save.

Yankees 3 Blue Jays 1

Mike Easler hit an RBI single in the eighth inning to break a 1-1 tie and propel the Yankees. Don Mattingly started the eighth against reliever Mark Eichhorn, 12-5, with a single, his third hit of the game, and moved to third on a walk and a fielder's choice. Easler's one-out liner to right-centre scored Mattingly and made a winner of Ron Guindry, 7-10, who held Toronto scoreless through five innings.

Red Sox 7 Orioles 5

Dwight Evans homered twice, and Marty Barrett's two-run double capped a three-run Boston rally in the seventh inning as the Red Sox extended their winning streak to 10. Evans began the Boston seventh with a homer, a drive that finished rookie starter John Habyan, and homered again in the eighth. Don Baylor also homered for the Red Sox.

Angels 8 Indians 1

Right-hander Kirk McCaskill pitched a six-hitter for his 10th complete game as California got its 12th victory in 14 games. McCaskill, 16-7, struck out seven and walked two. He lost his bid for a shutout in the sixth inning on Julio Franco's sacrifice fly.

Brewers 3 Tigers 1

Paul Molitor's eighth-inning double drove in Jim Gantner with the go-ahead run, backing Ted Higuera and the Milwaukee Brewers. Higuera, 18-9, didn't allow a hit until the fourth. He worked seven innings, allowing six hits and three walks while striking out seven to beat Detroit's Frank Tanana, 10-7, who allowed five hits in 7 2-3 innings.

White Sox 4 A's 1

Ron Hassey had three hits, including only his third triple since 1980, and scored twice to back Joe Cowley and the White Sox. Cowley, 9-9, allowed seven hits and struck out seven in seven innings, ending a three-game losing streak. Oakland starter Dave Stewart, 9-2, saw his five-game winning streak come to an end.

Royals 11 Twins 3

Jamie Quirk hit a two-run home run, and rookie Kevin Seitzer drove in three runs to lead Kansas City. Mark Gubicza, with relief help from Steve Farr, won for the ninth time in his last 11 decisions and lifted his season record to 9-6. Farr got the final four outs for his eighth save.

Andre Dawson... Won it in the ninth.

Pro wrestling must be cleaned up — Bernier

MONTREAL (CP) — Judge Raymond Bernier, head of the provincial agency that governs sports in Quebec, says he's fed up with some of the antics of professional wrestling.

Bernier, president of la Regie de la securite dans les sports au Quebec, says he wants to civilize wrestling and will crack down on promoters who don't clean up their own act.

Bernier is upset with some of the wrestlers' goings-on — such as fighting outside the ring or throwing chairs at each other while the referee looks on without acting.

"The referees don't enforce the rules of contact," said Bernier. "They don't stop wrestlers from breaking chairs. They close their eyes to his type of conduct. This is unacceptable."

"One of the problems is that the referees are hired by the promoters. It makes a parody out of the official. We have to define the authority of the officials."

DON'T GET HURT
Much of what happens in the ring is choreographed. Wrestlers are rarely injured, and most injuries are accidental. Most people who go to arenas to watch wrestling know the sport is a lot of hype. However, few fans complain.

Bernier is confident that he'll be successful in his task. Last June, Quebec adopted a law empowering the provincial agency to govern contact sports, including professional wrestling.

Bernier said he will present recommendations to government within the next two weeks. Promoters will have the subsequent 45 days to present their side of the story to provincial officials.

A final report on how to govern wrestling is expected to be ready by next February.

"I do not want to intervene in televised wrestling," said Bernier. "But I want to have a say in what happens in arenas around Quebec."

"It is a delicate situation. We have the mandate to regulate contact sports, including professional wrestling. We have contacted promoters to see if there is an acceptable compromise."

Baseball recruiting is coming out of the closet

By John Felkner

BELMONT, Mass. — Larry Embley Jr. was a sterling second baseman for Gil St. Bernard's High School in Far Hills, N.J.

Like many other gifted young baseball players, he assumed he would receive numerous scholarship offers to play college baseball toward the end of his senior year. When he received no offers, he began to worry.

"By the time spring rolled around," says his father, Larry Sr., "I began to realize the colleges either didn't know about Larry or figured the league he played in was noncompetitive." So the elder Embley took matters into his own hands and spent quite a bit of time and money calling colleges throughout the state. Eventually his son landed, without a scholarship, at Monmouth College.

The Embleys learned the facts about the college baseball recruiting system the hard way. One thing they found out was that most information about potential prospects was carried by word of mouth.

As a result of this frustrating experience, the elder Embley formed the National Collegiate Scouting Bureau. The idea behind this service is to provide a computer data base filled with the names, athletic evaluations, and academic records of strong high school players from around the country to any college coach free of charge. All the coach has to do is call the service and hook the phone up to his personal computer to get profiles of every high school player who fits his needs.

To carry out the actual evaluation of the players, Embley and his bureau hired the Doyle Baseball School, headed by Denny, Brian and Blake Doyle, all former professional players during the 1970s (Denny spent several years in the major leagues, mostly with Philadelphia and Boston; Brian played for the 1978 world champion New York Yankees; and Blake played Triple A ball).

"College baseball recruiting is in the dark ages," says Brian Doyle. "Hundreds of talented kids who could play small-college ball on a scholarship are getting passed over each year."

Doyle pointed out that if a high school team possesses a well-known blue-chip player, Division I team scouts will all come and focus on this star, ignoring the two or three other players on the team who are skilled enough to receive aid to play for a smaller school.

Meanwhile, the small-college recruiting staffs with their limited budgets will assume they don't have a chance of recruiting the blue-chippers. Consequently they seldom send scouts far afield, focusing instead on players in their immediate area.

Under this new system, however, a high school player can be evaluated by the Doyle staff, made up of professional scouts and coaches. Throughout this summer and fall, the Doyles are conducting a series of two-day camps held at numerous regions around the country. The player's physical evaluation, which includes skills, is entered in the computer data base along with his academic record (grade point average, SAT results), and his score on the Athletic Motivation Inventory test. This test, the same one that is administered to over 5,000 professional players, is designed to measure an athlete's attitude about the sport in such areas as drive and coachability.

The National Collegiate Athletic Association indicates that it has only recently learned of Embley's service and is trying to obtain more information before making a comment about it. Embley, however, is confident that the whole approach does not violate any NCAA regulations. The evaluation, he points out, is done strictly at the player's initiative and expense (the fee for evaluation is $265), since NCAA rules prevent colleges from paying the tab for such services.

The last regional camp on the East Coast for the Doyle evaluators was held recently in Boston. Brian Doyle was directing the assessment of about 10 players from around the New England area. "We're here to market these young players, to give them the exposure they want," he said. "Until now there has been no bureau like the Major League Scouting Bureau for amateurs. Why not? These kids deserve a fair chance, too."

Howard Preston Jr., whose goal is to play in the major leagues, is exactly the sort of player Embley's service is designed to help. He and his father drove the two hours from Auburn, N.H., for each day of the camp.

Once the Embley service has made a player's statistics available to the colleges, then it is up to the college coaches. For this reason, Embley has no track record of who has been contacted. He is aware, however, of a few satisfied customers, like catcher Phil Andriola of Queens, New York, who has been contacted by Yale University as a result of a Doyle evaluation.

The Doyles foresee expanding the National Collegiate Scouting Bureau services into other sports as well. "This service is going to be around for a long time, because we're really meeting a need," says Brian. "My goal is to give the kids an incentive to play by bridging the current gap between the player and the college coaches."

Demers ruling postponed

By Grant Kerr

VANCOUVER (CP)—The National Hockey League will not deal with tampering charges regarding coach Jacques Demers of the Detroit Red Wings until after the start of the 1986-87 season, NHL president John Ziegler said Tuesday.

The St. Louis Blues filed formal tampering charges in June after Demers jumped to the Red Wings from the Blues.

Demers insisted he had no written contractual ties with the Blues after he signed a five-year, $1.2-million US contract with the Wings on June 13.

"I have elected to put this issue over to a special meeting which will be called after the season starts... I didn't feel we would have time to deal with this here," Ziegler said at an informal news conference following an NHL board of governors meeting.

The NHL governors began meetings Tuesday as part of the festivities surrounding the annual Hockey Hall of Fame induction ceremonies and dinner tonight at the Hotel Vancouver.

It's the first time in the 26-year history of the event that it has been held outside Toronto.

INDUCTS PLAYERS

Former NHL players Serge Savard, Dave Keon and Leo Boivin will be inducted, along with Bill Hanley, longtime administrator in the major junior Ontario Hockey League.

Ziegler presided over meetings of several NHL committees Tuesday, including the finance and broadcasting groups, but refused to elaborate on the discussions.

He said NHL governors will be given more details on the new, five-year collective bargaining agreement reached July 27 between the owners' committee and the NHL Players' Association.

The NHL governors are expected to approve a proposal to increase the first round of the playoffs to best-of-seven series from the present best-of-five format.

Ziegler also expects the owners to discuss the introduction of a rule making it mandatory for new players entering the NHL to wear plastic face-mask visors for protection of the eye area.

Another issue to be considered is the use of instant replays by officials in NHL games.

"We'll look at the studies done with respect to cost, implementation and operation of replays for use in goal, no-goal situations," Ziegler said. "It would be a major step and we may still be a ways away from that."

New swim coach will make Sherbrooke club dominant

By Craig Pearson

SHERBROOKE — A Sherbrooke swimming club has big plans for the future since acquiring last year's Canadian swimming coach of the year and former Commonwealth medalist Paul Naisby as head coach.

The president of the Club de Natation de Sherbrooke, Paul Deshaies, is excited about Naisby, who he says will mold the club into a dominant force in Quebec.

"The coach of the team is its heart — its motor. The arrival of Paul is a source of motivation for everyone," says Deshaies.

The team is currently ranked 13th in Quebec out of 98 swimming clubs, and is considered one of the strongest predominantly French-speaking clubs. Deshaies says with Naisby on board, the club is shooting for number one in the next few years.

Naisby explains how he plans to improve the team: "The way we're going to build the club is by having a foundation of good young swimmers. We'll fix the objectives by working with the young swimmers coming up."

The 31-year-old Naisby seems to have the credentials for the job. Born in Sunderland, England, Naisby swam for Great Britain from 1972 to 1978 and competed in the '72 Olympics in Munich and the '76 Olympics in Montreal. He also competed in two Commonwealth Games and won a total of three bronze medals.

He obtained a sports scholarship to Miami University where he earned an administration degree and swam on the NCAA circuit for three years.

He coached the Monmagny swim club for six years, winning the coach of the year distinction (voted on by other coaches) last year. And he only came to Canada by fluke. While waiting to obtain a work permit in the U.S., which was taking forever, he visited a friend in Quebec City. His friend introduced him to Monmagny — he ended up staying six years.

Naisby has already started improving the club — one of the best swimmers he coached in Monmagny, Guylaine Cloutier, has moved to Sherbrooke to continue training under him.

The club is currently looking to recruit new talent and will be holding open door sessions at the Pavillon Universtrie pool, Wednesday, Thursday, and Friday nights this week from 5 to 7 p.m.
