The art of storytelling – a modern day revival

For God's sake let us sit upon the ground

And tell such stories of the death of kings

How some have been deposed, some
Some poison'd by their wives, some sleeping Kill'd

Richard II

We need stories. I imagine our Stone Age ancestors kept a special place near the fire for their storyteller because outside the circle of firelight, beyond the sound of his voice, wild things waited in the dark to rend and tear. His story kept the wild things at bay.

There was certainly that special place by the fire in Classical times when blind old Homer wandered from city to city telling lies about the ten-year siege of Troy and the seven-year home-coming of Ulysses. And it was true among the barbarians of northern Europe when scop and bards spun hoppers about each tribe's beginnings and its heroes, told about Boewulf wrestling wild things in the dark at the bottom of a lake. True also of the bards and gleemen spinning stories about King Arthur and his knights of the Table Round battling ogres, giants, and dragons.

Each and every one of us first heard about Goldilocks and the Three Bears in our mother's laps while bogeymen lurked under the bed. Even down to our own century, there was always a place in the lumber camps for a good storyteller; he was thought almost as necessary as a good cook.

TADEUSZ
LETARTE

But, nowadays, the cold blue light of the television screen has replaced the warm glow of the hearth and the only human voice is somebody asking for the remote, or the T.V. Guide while the wild things are all inside us waiting to rend and tear.

That may be why storytelling is becoming popular again all over the industrialized world. Newsletters, magazines, international conventions and storytelling festivals are cropping up everywhere.

The Montreal Storytellers' Guild meets in the Atwater Library (after being ousted from the Simone de Beauvoir Centre when their ritual campfire – a candle – set off the smoke alarm and brought security guards at the gallop).

The Townships Tellers gather for supper and stories every third Thursday of the month at the Womens' Centre. When Mike Burns came to tell Irish tales at Bishop's University last year, Bandeem Hall was packed and every ear attentive.

There are no restrictions and no judgments in storytelling. The very old and the very young can both be very good, and, although it's an art, it's the opposite of elitist. Degrees don't count and often the least educated do best. Illiterates may excel. The genius, the beauty queen, the athlete, and the millionaire have no advantages in storytelling. And it's important to note that both Alice in Wonderland and the Just So stories were told to children long before being written down and therefore had the benefit of a certain feedback.

Storytelling belongs to everybody.

Richmond's St. Bibiane's hosts Haydn oratorio

Leader Marc Burnier is tired but exhilarated after leading a choir of over 100 singers through the inspirational music of Joseph Haydn. (See left). The Symphonic Choir of Sherbrooke fill St. Bibiane's Church in Richmond with the vocal harmonies created by Joseph Haydn nearly two hundred years ago. (Above).

The beauty of 120 voices raised in song touched the hearts of all who attended the performance of Haydn's "The Seven Words from the Cross" in Richmond's St. Bibiane's Church last Sunday.

Introductions to the two parts of the Oratorio were played by Maryse Simard on the Casavant Organ. Piano accompaniment was provided by Lise Landreville. Both musicians have a long association with the Sherbrooke Symphonic Choir, who filled the church with harmonies scored by Joseph Haydn, written some 200 years ago.

The power and depth of this music, perfect for the proclamation of the mystery of the crucifixion of Christ, can be experienced this Friday, March 28 at 8 pm in the Eglise Sainte Venant de Paquette (located about 20 kilometres from Sawyerville). Tickets are $12.00.

Talk of the Townships

Playground is for parents who don't take life too seriously

The good, the bad and the silly

A negative attitude is something I'm often accused of having.

I've been told that maybe, just maybe, I have little good to say in this column, and that all I want to do is complain and mock. This led me to think that maybe, just maybe, I should write something bright and sunny this week to let people know that I'm not a total curmudgeon.

Then I changed my mind.

My friends and family are always a little surprised to hear I really don't think of myself as a negative person. Sure, I'm a bit of a crank sometimes and my humor is a little too caustic, but all in all I think my behavior can be chalked up to nothing more sinister than a mother of two blowing off steam so the everyday routine doesn't drive her crazy.

When I started writing Linda's Playground, I wanted to entertain as many readers as I could, but I especially wanted to entertain the audience of mothers and fathers who, like me, read all the parenting magazines, are inundated with advice on how to be better parents and yet, despite all their efforts, still feel like they aren't quite doing enough.

These are the parents I see at the mall trying to keep their kids from driving them crazy. And the parents I see at the grocery store with their kids in a shopping cart, who are enjoying the free ride with parent number one, while parent number two pushes a second grocery cart with the actual food in it. Sure, they look tired and even a little embarrassed sometimes, but they wouldn't trade parenthood for anything in the world.

I wanted other parents to know there's someone out there who sympathizes, someone who's still struggling to be the best mom she can be. It never occurred to me when I started this column that some readers would take me seriously to the point where they'd actually believe I walk around with a black cloud over my head all the time. No way! Motherhood is the best thing that ever happened to me. I exaggerate the facts because it makes me laugh and hopefully makes other people smile as they remember similar experiences with their own children.

LINDA'S PLAYGROUND

Let's face it: Mothers and fathers alike sometimes feel slightly overwhelmed by all the tasks that need to be accomplished in one day and I'm sure that many parents, like myself, would love to devote 100 per cent of their energy towards raising their kids. Unfortunately, something always gets in the way.

It's called Life.

There's housework to be done, meals to be made, money to be earned, bills to be paid, the list goes on and on and on. And in the midst of everything, we have to raise happy, healthy children without short-changing them in any way. I can tell you this isn't always possible.

Despite all the love, affection and attention I heap upon my kids, my son still loves nothing more than to eat Play-Do and slither around on the floor, refusing to acknowledge me unless I call him Scorpion. And despite my efforts to steer my daughter clear of the trappings of fashion and beauty, she still has pierced ears, pretty dresses and sometimes even a hint of lipstick (when she manages to sneak into the bathroom and apply herself).

I'm sure every Mom and Dad out there can think of something their children do that makes them wonder, 'Is this normal?' All the mundane, silly and weird things that make parenting such an adventure - that's what Linda's Playground is about.

So take a break and enjoy this column for what it is - a wink and a nudge from a mom who's been there, done that, has the stinkin' t-shirt.

And that, my friends, is my cheerful column for this week.

A cultural 'happening' in the Townships

SHERBROOKE

Les concerts symphoniques de Sherbrooke presents Classique à l'oss, a cultural "happening" that will surely be the talk of the Townships.

Not only is it a benefit event to help the Sherbrooke Symphony Orchestra, it is an innovative artistic experience likely to become a tradition in the area.

The show involves 50 musicians from the Sherbrooke Symphony Orchestra on stage at the magnificent Granada Theatre in downtown Sherbrooke, performing the works of Pink Floyd, Gowan, Jimi Hendrix, the Boomtown Rats, Elvis Presley, Chris de Burgh, Joe Cocker, Led Zeppelin and other classics of rock, blues and folk.

It also brings together local performers such as Paul Gingues, Kate Morrison, Chantal Poulin and Garou.

The Classique à l'oss is an invitation to see, to hear and, above all, to enjoy a great show of music, visual arts and many surprises.

It takes place at the Granada Theatre in downtown Sherbrooke on Friday, April 4, at 8 p.m. Tickets: $15 per person, available at all admission outlets and by calling (819) 820-1000. To reserve a table of four or more, please call (819) 821-0227.

Sherbrooke singer Kate Morrison will also be playing at Lafontaine de Hatley in North Hatley this weekend.

Singer-guitarist Kate Morrison, along with Paul Gingues, Chantal Poulin and Garou, will join the Sherbrooke Symphony Orchestra in a tribute to popular rock & roll, blues and folk music next Friday.

Has molded different sounds into own unique style Sherbrooke's Alain Pouliot is the Big Daddy of country

Big Daddy has been making music for quite a few years now, sticking to one rule and one rule only. If it sounds good, he plays it. He's mastered rock and roll, blues, rock, and country, swirled them all together and created his own unique sound.

When it comes to power-packed performances and soulful song renditions, very few can do as Big Daddy does. He's an artist who moves easily from a singer of love songs to a storytelling balladeer to a hot roadhouse rocker.

Alain Pouliot, a native of Sherbrooke, inherited the nickname Big Daddy a few years back from the kids in his entourage who saw him as a father figure. It does not sound disrespectful to him and the truth is he likes it enough that he has decided to use it as a stage name.

Pouliot can't be labelled since he doesn't restrain himself to one particular style of music; his tastes are very eclectic. From Willie Nelson and Johnny Cash to Louis Armstrong and BB King, for Big Daddy there's no difference. It's all good music to him.

"Basically I'm an entertainer," he said. "My strongest wish is that I want my music to entertain people." Pouliot is genuine and his public means a whole lot to him, and whether he sings for six or six hundred persons, the same emotion is involved.

"People have to feel that I'm up on stage not for the money but for the passion that I have for music" Pouliot said. "What I love to see when I sing is people's eyes because then I know that they're reliving some moments good or bad triggered by which ever song I have picked to interpret."

Big Daddy could be referred to as a human jukebox since his repertoire includes hits from the 1950s onward and applies to more than one musical genre. This, according to him, is his major strength, but there's much more.

Pouliot has a potent, powerful voice that he handles with extraordinary finesse, flexing and releasing it like a perfectly toned muscle to adapt to a variety of song situations. He is in total control of his music and everyone of his performances reveal the multi-faceted, high energy intensity of this incredible artist.

Although his career is now top priority for Pouliot, there was a time when his brother Bruno's success in show business came first. Big Daddy remembers how the whole family supported his younger brother who has been earning his living with his music, while touring on the road.

"It was very important to my family and I to help Bruno and if I think about it now, he's probably the one who's inspired me and given me the drive to start my own career" said Pouliot.

Pouliot started with the occasional talent contest followed by semi-professional competition until he actually auditioned to perform at a provincial fashion show for which he was hired to entertain the crowd as a Gene Kelly impersonator.

"The show was a success and it somehow was a confirmation to me that I was doing the right thing, so I formed my first duo and started playing clubs, always trying to hone my style" stressed Pouliot.

"I worked in Asbestos at the Johnsmanville until 1995 making music during my spare time but now music has my undivided attention and it makes me happy" he said.

Pouliot also took guitar lessons from Rene Gilbert but he has no interest in becoming a picker. All he wants now is to be able to accompany himself when he practices. He wants to preserve his energies for more important things, like singing - his real passion.

"I can't put all the feelings and emotions I want in a song if I have to be pre-occupied by what guitar riffs should be included in a tune" Pouliot explained. Different types of music evoke different emotions. To Pouliot, this is perfectly normal.

"I love singing the blues just like I love my wife. It comes from inside, it grabs me. Singing rock'n roll to me is like having a party, it's fun music. When it comes to country music, this is my roots, this is real life put into music and lyrics. Each song tells a story not just any kind, stories that a million of people have lived and experienced at one point. This is most likely why country music is so popular" explained Big Daddy.

His favourite country artists are the group Alabama, Alan Jackson, Johnny Cash, and Willie Nelson (Pouliot owns his entire discography).

"Have you ever listened to the lyrics in 'For The Good Times? This is one song I love to sing. I find it easy to invest my emotions in that particular number but I must admit that I love ballads more than up-tempo material."

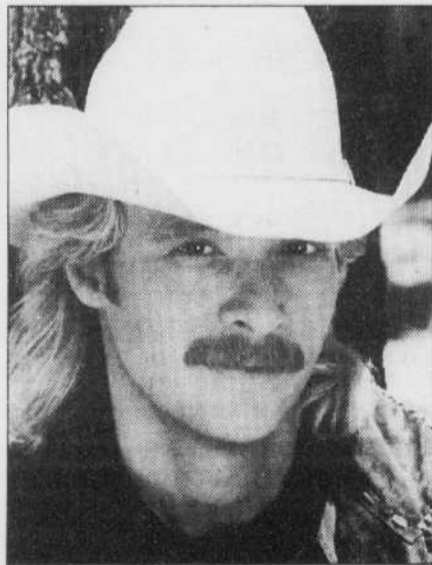

More recently, Pouliot has formed another duo with a guitarist named Jocelyn Frechette, who won a gold medal for best guitar player in a recent provincial competition. They make a good team. They call themselves "Big Daddy and Cool Joe".

Their first gig together took place in the fall as they opened the show for JoAnn Morreault of former duo Jerry and JoAnn which got them a standing ovation from over six hundred wide-eyed attendants.

Big Daddy has big dreams which could very well happen with the help of his big talent.

Happy Easter everyone, and 'til next time, keep your country state of mind!

Marie-Andrée Ostiguy: Skillful Successful Self-reliant

By Kathy Mercier
RECORD CORRESPONDENT
SHERBROOKE

Though pianist-composer Marie-Andrée Ostiguy has received critical acclaim across the country, she remains down-to-earth, even meeting with audiences after every performance.

Before the pop instrumentalist plays a piece, she explains its meaning so people will understand what the music is about, bridging the gap between music aficionados and novices.

"Early on I figured out it's more fun if everyone in the audience knew what I was doing," she said. "People feel a part of the performance. They get more information and know why things happen. I use simple language to guide people through the performances."

Ostiguy, who plays Coaticook on April 19, is enjoying a successful career nourished by hard work and following her instincts.

Raised on a cow and vegetable farm in Marieville, Ostiguy first started tinkering on her great-great grandmother's piano as a child. She would play by ear and her parents soon realized she had a special talent. So Ostiguy began receiving lessons at home by the age of 10.

The little girl got hooked on the piano.

"I always knew this was what I wanted to do," she said simply.

By the age of 12, Ostiguy's mother was regularly driving her to the Montreal Conservatory of Music. During Marie-Andrée's hour-and-a-half lessons, her mother would patiently knit or crochet.

"She did a few family heirlooms during my lessons," said Ostiguy with a laugh.

Ostiguy continued her training at the renowned Julliard School of Music in New York. During a summer program in Banff, she met Gyorgy Sebök, who invited her to Indiana University and its famed music program. Though planning to return to Julliard in the fall, she decided to follow her instincts and stay in Indiana.

"When you find someone who brings you what you need," she said, it is important to follow your instincts.

Memories of the time spent in Indiana are fond ones.

"Indiana was a nice change of pace. The concentration there was one of creating artists, not piano-playing machines," she said.

Back in Montreal, she earned her Bachelor's degree in piano interpretation from the Université de Montréal.

It wasn't long before she was under the management of René Angelil, making her first album, Montréal Concerto, with him.

"He likes instrumental music," she said. "He saw that I had talent and potential, but knew nothing about piano.... He asked for help from other people on how to go with my career."

Angelil was Ostiguy's manager for a year-and-a-half until he decided to manage Céline Dion's career exclusively. Ostiguy said she then took her career into her own hands.

"I realized that I was better off by myself. Now my husband (Don MacLean) and I work together," she said.

Ostiguy's talent extends to her ability to compose her own songs. She wrote seven of the 11 pieces on her first album and earned two 1988 Félix award nominations for Best First Album and Best Instrumental Album.

Ostiguy wrote all 14 pieces on her second album, Tandem, which earned her a 1995 Juno nomination as Instrumental Artist of the Year and a Félix nomination for Instrumental Album of the Year.

She is currently working on a third album for release by October. It will be her first distributed across Canada, and perhaps the world. Ostiguy is keeping quiet about an international recording deal until the album is closer to completion.

With government cutbacks, Ostiguy said she is fortunate to be able to make a living as a composer and concert pianist in Canada. Her fortune may be attributed to the fact that she has never relied on the government to support her career.

"I never asked for grants for what I do. I believe you shouldn't depend on that to do something. You could wait a long time to get a grant and life is too short," said the confident pianist.

Besides, Ostiguy believes government funding to musicians is not put to proper use.

"They should put it in the right hands - for studies, instruments, touring," she said.

Instead, Ostiguy said funds go to agencies which promote artists until the funding runs out.

"That does not ensure the continuity of a career," she said, adding she knows of many musicians who no longer produce because the money is no longer there.

Ostiguy said she and McLean find producing their own work challenging and gratifying.

"It's the only way to exist now," Ostiguy said. "Funding will eventually stop."

Marie-Andrée Ostiguy plays Coaticook at the Pavillon des arts et culture on Saturday, April 19, at 8 p.m. Tickets cost $20. For more information, call (819) 849-6371.

Val Kilmer stars in The Saint - premiering April

A gifted actor or emotionally disturbed?

By Jamie Portman

SOUTHAM NEWSPAPERS
BEVERLY HILLS, CALIFORNIA

It's a typical Val Kilmer story. And it indicates why few in Hollywood feel neutral about him.

When first approached to play The Saint, he decided he wanted to bring his own darkly sardonic spin to the fabled "Robin Hood of crime," a character first created by novelist Leslie Charteris more than 60 years ago. So he sent Paramount bosses 80 pages of his own script notes - gift-wrapped.

Such obsessiveness has in the past landed Kilmer in a heap of trouble with those filmmakers who see nothing saintly about his conduct and consider him difficult, demanding, and even disturbed.

But it has left others unfazed, among them Saint producer Mace Neufeld who believes every responsible actor should be a perfectionist. "They have to really care about what they're doing," Neufeld says bluntly.

Kilmer would seem to meet this caring criteria with a vengeance. That massive onslaught of notes is but one example. Another is the way Kilmer went about fulfilling his grand plan to make Simon Templar, aka The Saint, a master of disguise.

There was no way he'd be content with just surface cosmetic changes. He rejected the idea of simply gluing on a phony mustache or donning a pair of distinctive eyeglasses.

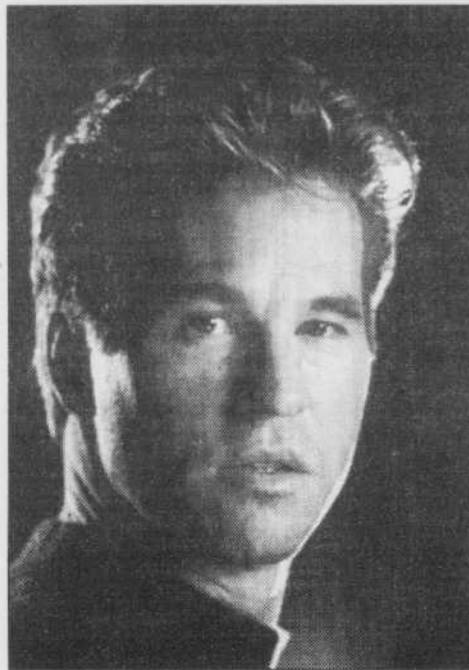

"It was how I viewed this character," Kilmer explains. "I didn't want them to be just disguises. I wanted the Saint to be someone totally involved in creating these other people. It's his pleasure - and it's similar to acting."

In the film, opening April 4, Kilmer vanishes into a succession of distinctive, meticulously detailed personalities. They include a shifty American businessman, a sinister Russian bodyguard, an effete South African poet, a nerdy British scientist, and a dumpy cleaning woman.

In fact, Kilmer started working on his disguises while still in Africa filming The Ghost In The Darkness, before Paramount had even officially given The Saint its go-ahead.

Director Philip Noyce recalls his astonishment when Kilmer told him he had hired a skilled wig weaver.

Noyce realizes now that his young

Joel Schumacher, director of Batman Forever, once described actor Val Kilmer as "the most psychologically troubled human being I've ever worked with."

star's preoccupation with wigs and disguise made perfect sense, given the context of the movie.

"This is basically the story of a black-hearted man who's been running away from himself, who hides behind masks, who meets a woman who unmasks him so that he finds his true identity and the persona which he has been denying in anger," Noyce says.

There are some who would say that the real Val Kilmer is as elusive as the character he portrays, and that Kilmer loved the idea of role playing because he himself is uncertain of his real identity. But if you submit this thesis to Kilmer, whose intelligence has never been questioned even by his enemies, you get a terse rebuttal.

"If an actor doesn't know who he is, he's neurotic," he says icily.

Kilmer clearly doesn't consider himself neurotic, but he must be wondering whether he'll ever live down his bad-boy image.

Here he is this morning, trying to be affable with reporters. Yet he's still pursued by past demons, still dealing with those persistent stories that he's difficult on the set, makes unreasonable demands, and is subject to terrible temper tantrums.

He's meeting the press the same week that Premiere Magazine has published a cover story on him labelled "Saint Or Sinner?" The article quotes both friends and foes, with the most devastating comments coming from Joel Schumacher who directed him in Batman Forever. He describes Kilmer as "the most psychologically troubled human being I've ever worked with."

Kilmer hoped his image problems would have subsided by now. After all, it's nearly a year since his controversial exit from the cast of Batman and Robin because he wanted to do The Saint instead.

And the furor over the troubled filming of The Island Of Dr. Moreau has also died down (co-star Marlon Brando reportedly told Kilmer he was confusing the size of his talent with the size of his pay cheque, and director John Frankenheimer declared publicly that there wasn't enough money in the world to make him ever want to work with Kilmer again).

But even though Kilmer recently hired a top publicist to help him deal with his image problems, a media session can still turn into a sparring match when he stonewalls on questions about his controversial reputation.

"I'd love to be entertaining about it, but it's so boring," he says, his appearance of boyish vulnerability concealing a steely stubbornness.

Meanwhile, Phillip Noyce is going out of his way to stress that he's a big Kilmer fan who admires his dedication: "It makes me wonder whether Joel Schumacher was reacting out of bitterness that Val wanted to do The Saint and not Batman again." But Noyce also found an unusual level of obsessiveness in Kilmer who was offered the role after Mel Gibson, Ralph Fiennes, and Hugh Grant turned it down.

"The way I worked with him was to recognize very quickly that he had an enormous amount to offer. He was never any trouble except that he asked too many questions and had too many suggestions, but they were all good. Is a man troubled because he has an opinion? After all, surely you ask people to work for you because you do respect their talent."

Hollywood's latest spin on The Saint is far removed from the breezy flavor of the Charteris books or the debonair playboy so successfully portrayed by Roger Moore in the TV series and by Kilmer in disguise. His new film, The Saint, premieres April 4.

George Sanders in the movies of the early 1940s.

Here, he's very much an action character of the '90s. Like Charteris's original hero, he's still adept at working both sides of the law and matching wits with corrupt tycoons, politicians and master criminals, as well as with the police. But now the stakes are higher as he finds himself fighting the criminal plot of a Russian billionaire (Rade Serbedzija) to topple the Kremlin's democratically elected government and make himself czar of a new Slavic empire.

The film also offers a darker, more tormented Simon Templar who initially is motivated by cynical greed - the result, the screenplay suggests, of an oppressive childhood. And it takes the love of a young female scientist (Elizabeth Shue) for him to rediscover his humanity.

For Kilmer, it was important his character not be a cartoon creation in the sense that Batman is.

"For example, the kind of acting I like to watch you find in performances which in your memory continue to have dimension and life after the story's over. Like Pacino in Dog Day Afternoon."

And hopefully like Kilmer in The Saint. There's no hedging on this point: "I really am proud of this movie."

Canada needs its own best-of-the-century list

By Ian Haysom
SOUTHAM NEWS

Michael Ondaatje's The English Patient may be the literary flavor of the moment, may have sold millions of copies worldwide, but would it make a Canadian best-books-of-the-century list?

How about Margaret Atwood's Alias Grace or Carol Shields's Stone Diaries? Or would they be put firmly into the shade by, of all things, the unabashed populism of Anne of Green Gables or one of Madaine Benoit's cookery books?

Best-of-the-century book lists are beginning to appear around the world. But though Canadian literature may be fashionable at the moment, CanLit has made barely a dent on the international lists, all but ignored as a kind of quaint colonial literary irrelevancy.

Late last year, Waterstone's, the well-known English bookseller, and Channel Four television asked tens of thousands of British readers to pick the best books of the century. Only one Canadian novel, Margaret Atwood's The Handmaid's Tale, made the list - at No. 58.

Tolkien's Lord of the Rings topped the list, with Orwell's 1984 and Animal Farm second and third. The rest of the Top 10 included such novels as Ulysses, Catch-22, Catcher in the Rye, To Kill a Mockingbird and The Grapes of Wrath, as well as Gabriel Garcia Marquez's One Hundred Years of Solitude and the colloquially Scottish novel Trainspotting.

Atwood was beaten by Winnie The Pooh, but nosed ahead of Delia Smith's Complete Cookery Course and Michael Crichton's Jurassic Park, suggesting toad-in-the-hole and dinosaurs can bring you a kind of literary immortality.

Margaret Laurence, Robertson Davies and Stephen Leacock didn't get a look in.

The Handmaid's Tale was also the lone Canadian novel to make the exhaustive Books of the Century list compiled by the New York Public Library, a roster that included the literary - Chekhov, Proust and Kafka - as well as the popular - The Joy of Cooking, Tarzan and Peyton Place.

The list of the most "significant and influential" books of the century was chosen by U.S. librarians because the books "helped shape and define the character of the last 100 years."

For that reason, perhaps, the only other Canadian among the 160 books was economist John Kenneth Galbraith, whose The Affluent Society appears in an Economics and Technology Section. Somewhat curiously, the futuristic The Handmaid's Tale appears in a section titled "Utopias and Dystopias" along with such novels as Peter Pan, A Clockwork Orange and The Wizard of Oz.

Again, however, there is no sense of CanLit's growing international muscle or historical richness. The literary, the populist, the influential, are ignored. No McLuhan, whose "medium is the message" still resonates; no Doug Coupland, whose Generation X defined a disenfranchised generation around the world; no William Gibson who coined cyberspace.

No Mavis Gallant, Emily Carr, Morley Callaghan, Marian Engel, Brian Moore, Rudy Wiebe, Mordecai Richler, Malcolm Lowry, W. P. Kinsella, Hugh MacLennan, Gabrielle Roy, Hugh Garner, Rohinton Mistry, Milton Acorn, Timothy Findley, Alice Munro, Jack Hodgins, Norman Levine, Anne Hebert, Sinclair Ross, Farley Mowat, Dorothy Livesay, Michael Ignatieff, Irving Layton, W. O. Mitchell and a host of other English- and French-Canadian authors who could lay claim to at least one literary or populist masterpiece.

What is becoming evident to scholars and critics across the country is that there's room for not only a Canadian best-of-the-century list, but one that could easily top 100 titles and rank alongside any national list in the world.

The reason CanLit doesn't rate on a British list "is because the English believe the entire tradition of literature is British," says David Arnason, a professor of English at the University of Manitoba. "They'll include a couple of upstart American publications or an Aussie work. As for the Americans, they believe true, authentic literature began in the mid-1800s and it was American."

Arnason points out, however, the Canadian literature is admired, even revered, in Europe - particularly Germany and France - and India and Japan, where it is increasingly taught in universities and schools. He is currently showing six Japanese English professors around Canada's literary heritage.

"They have a marvelous appreciation of Canadian literature. It's funny. When I ask them why Anne of Green Gables is so popular in Japan, they just look at me. To them, the answer is so self-obvious. To them, it's a classic beyond criticism."

Arnason, asked to pick the best Canadian books of the century, says he doesn't even include Atwood and Davies "because they speak for themselves."

Instead, his top Canadian book would be Laurence's The Diviners. "It changed forever the complexion of the way women thought in this country. She wrote about very ordinary people living ordinary lives who were heroines."

He'd also pick Wild Geese, Martha Ostenso's 1925 novel, as one of the pivotal works of the century. The novel won the $13,500 first prize offered by The Pictorial Review for best first novel in North America, from among hundreds of other North American novels. Atlantis Films is about to make a new movie of the book, which paints a raw picture of prairie farm life, which Arnason suggests could make it as populist today as The English Patient.

Sinclair Ross's As For Me And My House, Hodgins's The Invention of the World, Alice Munro's Lives of Girls and Women, Roy's The Tin Flute, Ernest Buckler's The Mountain and the Valley and Roch Carrier's La guerre: yes sir! would also be on the list.

Thomas Friedman, an English professor at the University College of the Cariboo in Kamloops, B.C., who also helps run the Margaret Atwood Society, with members in 17 countries, sees Atwood as the quintessential Canadian author - "our very best. She's helped give Canadian literature its international standing."

He would probably pick what he calls her more Canadian works such as Surfacing and Bodily Harm for a best-of-the-century list, one that would also include Laurence's The Diviners, as well as some much older fare.

Friedman would put Susanna Moodie's Roughing It In The Bush near the top of a greatest-ever Canadian list (even though her book appeared in the last century) "because hers was such an important book, geographically and influentially, that celebrated the Canadian experience. It understands the Canadian psyche."

He'd also include Mavis Gallant, whose Pegnitz Junction, a novella about how post-1945 Germans dealt with the war is, he says, "one of the most devastatingly accomplished books I've ever read. It's a difficult read, but the pain and passion hits you on every page."

French-Canadians Roy - "brilliant" - and André Langevin's Poussiere Sur La Ville (Dust Over The City) would also make his Top 10 list.

Friedman points out a happy aside to Canadian literature: present-day students, rather than recoiling from it, are now lapping it up.

"I guess the recent discussions about nationalism have a lot to do with it, as well as the success of current writers. But suddenly CanLit is very relevant and absorbing to young people, which is incredibly heartening."

This year is the 50th anniversary of the publication of Lowry's Under the Volcano, written largely in Deep Cove near Vancouver, and various celebrations are being organized.

Though Lowry was born in England, and died there, and his masterpiece is set in Mexico, Lowry-aficionado Paul Tiessen, an English professor at Wilfrid Laurier University, believes the book should top a Canadian best-of-the-century list "because it falls between so many cracks."

"It's a brilliant novel. Many believe it's the last great novel of the century," Tiessen, who is helping organize a Lowry symposium set for Toronto in June, points out that Lowry is revered around the world, especially in Germany, where 15 of his books, some of them published posthumously, are sold and where he is taught in many universities.

"He's ranked alongside Becket and Sartre and deserves that kind of recognition here. People from around the world are coming to the symposium, even from China, because they recognize his greatness and importance."

Tiessen would also include Edmonton's Rudy Wiebe in a best-of-the-century list "because he's produced some of the most stunning literature ever seen in this country. The fact is, there's a wealth of brilliant material beyond Atwood and Shields and Ondaatje."

Which still begs one larger question. Should any Canadian novels, other than Handmaid's Tale, be on an international best-of-the-century list as well as a Canadian list? The Diviners? The Deptford Trilogy? The Wars? Kamouraska? Anne of Green Gables? The Stone Diaries?

"Of course," says Friedman. "We produce a wealth of world-class writing in Canada, but the usual party line is that we produce marginalized literature and we are not a major literary power."

"We shouldn't be overly worried about the insularity of other places. The strides now being made by the likes of Mistry, Ondaatje and Atwood are now waking up people to the strength of Canadian literature. Maybe we're finally waking up to that fact too."

A few Canadian books that might be candidates for best books of the century:

- M. Richler, St. Urbain's Horseman
- Brian Moore, The Doctor's Wife; The Luck of Ginger Coffey
- Alice Munro, Lives of Girls and Women
- Margaret Atwood, The Handmaid's Tale; Cat's Eye; Surfacing; Alias Grace
- R. Davies, What's Bred in the Bone
- Gabrielle Roy, The Tin Flute; Children of my Heart
- R. Mistry, Such a Long Journey
- Roch Carrier, La guerre: yes sir!
- André Langevin, Poussiere Sur La Ville (Dust Over The City)
- M. Ondaatje, The English Patient
- Carol Shields, The Stone Diaries
- Lucy Maude Montgomery, Anne of Green Gables
- Farley Mowat, Never Cry Wolf
- M. Tremblay, Les belles-soeurs

TV WEEK

Unforgettable Journey to air without commercials

Peter Donaldson stars as Jamie Tyrone, a cynical alcoholic, in Long Day's Journey Into Night.

The world television premiere of the award-winning film Long Day's Journey Into Night takes place on Sunday, March 30, at 8 p.m. on CBC.

This three-hour special presentation of Eugene O'Neill's compelling Pulitzer Prize-winning drama, directed by David Wellington, will air without commercial breaks.

Set in August 1912 at the Connecticut summer home of the Irish-American Tyrone family, the film is a heart-rending portrait of a dysfunctional family, haunted by its past.

Long Day's Journey Into Night reunites the original cast of the Stratford Festival's two-season, sold-out production, including William Hutt as James, family patriarch and once-acclaimed Shakespearean actor; Martha Henry as his desperate, morphine-addicted wife Mary; Peter Donaldson, as the elder son Jamie, whose failures have made him an alcoholic cynic; and Tom McCamus, as the younger son Edmond, once a sailor but now a seriously ill consumptive.

The Tyrone family confront each other with the many guilts, fears and resentments that have distorted their lives. Yet at the centre of the maelstrom of blame, condemnation, anger and self-deceit are moments of incredible compassion, understanding and love.

In the end, it is the profound love the family shares that remains a compelling testimony to the ties, both tender and tragic, that bind them.

Long Day's Journey Into Night, O'Neill's autobiographical masterpiece, lays bare his father's bitter frustration and miserliness, his mother's descent into madness and addiction, his older brother's self-loathing and alcoholism, and his own struggle to survive not only his illness but the torment of his alternating hate and love for his family.

The film won four 1996 Genie Awards including Best Actor (Hutt), Best Actress (Henry), Best Supporting Actor (Donaldson) and Best Supporting Actress (Martha Burns).

EASTER WITH THE WALTONS

Michael Learned and Ralph Waite reprise their roles in A Walton's Easter, a new made-for-TV movie which reunites the Waltons just as John-Boy (Richard Thomas) is about to become a father. It will be broadcast on Easter Sunday, March 30, at 9 p.m. on CBS. Also reprising their roles from the long-running multiple Emmy Award-winning series The Waltons are Ellen Corby (Grandma Walton), Jon Walmsley (Jason), Judy Norton (Mary Ellen), Mary McDonough (Erin), Eric Scott (Ben), David Harper (Jim-Bob) and Kami Kleeb as the charming and eccentric Baldwin sisters, and Lynn Hamilton as Verdie Grant. Series creator Earl Hamner narrates.
