Recreating infamous gig that ended in a riot

A Genesis tribute

By Thomas Ledwell
RECORD CORRESPONDENT

The highs of the rock and roll lifestyle inspire many fans to want to step into the shoes of their rock star heroes. But only the rare band of rockers prompts its followers to take the jump from wanting to be like them, to actually attempting to be them.

The '60s-born progressive rock group Genesis left that lasting affect on its fans. The group Turn It On Again – named after a Genesis song, and a greatest hits album – will bring their homage to the great musicians to Sherbrooke's Granada Theatre tonight.

"Back when I was 14, I fell in love with this music. Particularly the character of Phil Collins," said the tribute band's drummer and lead singer, Martin Levac.

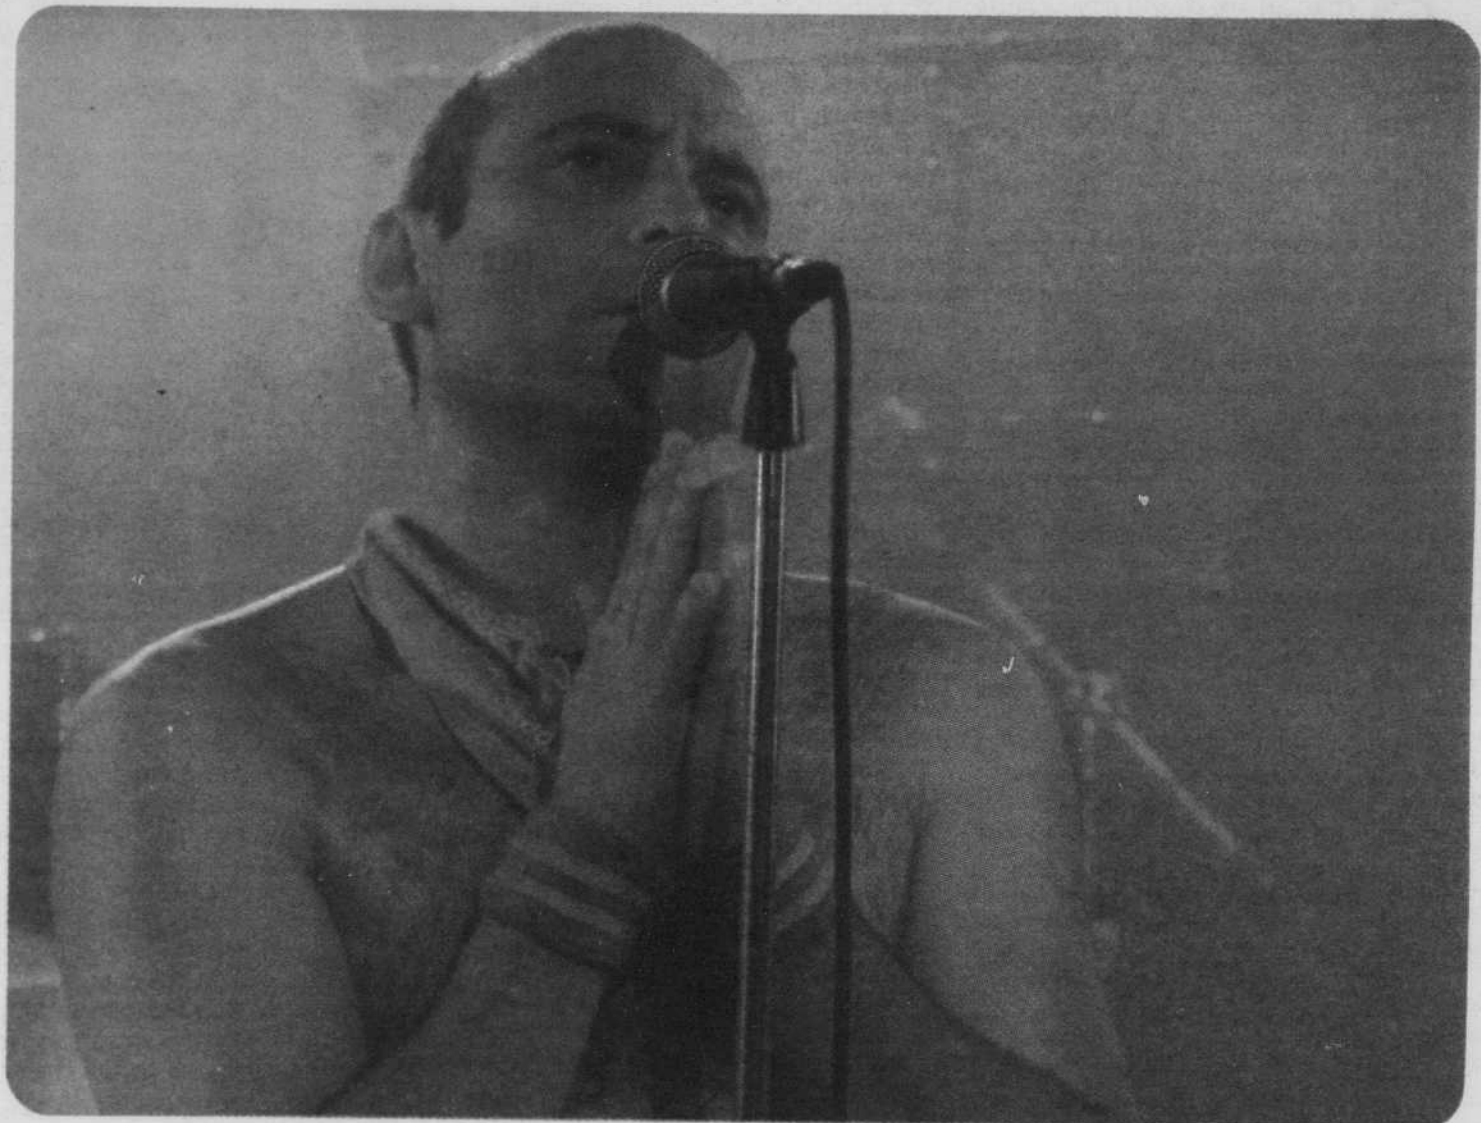

"I was blown away by his performance, his drumming, and his voice."

Levac is a musician at heart. He began playing drums along with his father's records when he was a child, and the love of music never waned. Levac said he ventured into the business to create his own music, and ended up becoming a professional drummer playing a variety of cover tunes.

A little more than five years ago Levac took on the persona of Phil Collins.

"People used to call me Phil, because I was a big Phil Collins fan. I could imitate him quite well. I even switched

For kids Food

Warming up children to nutritious eats

By Shelley Boettcher
CANWEST NEWS SERVICE

Ask most parents about their children's eating habits and chances are they'll have a complaint, or maybe 10.

Toronto moms Eshun Mott and Emma Waverman are no exception.

When their three oldest children were toddlers, they had a long list of what they'd eat and not eat. One child, for instance, wouldn't eat anything mixed together; each food had to be presented separately on his plate. A stir-fry? Out of the question.

One enjoyed cold corn and mashed potatoes — but only if the potatoes were in the pot they were cooked in.

Another didn't like sauce touching his food. One didn't like meat.

And they all went through stages when they refused to eat anything that wasn't white; bread, noodles and milk ruled the day.

Frustrating? Definitely.

No parent wants picky kids, especially parents who make their living in the food industry. Waverman is a second-generation food writer whose mother, Lucy Waverman, is one of Canada's best-known food writers. Mott, on the other hand, is a chef and recipe developer.

The two young moms would get together periodically and, because they're both food-lovers, conversation inevitably turned to what they fed their children, who, at the time, were three and two years old.

"We'd just start to complain about how picky they were," recalls Waverman.

"But all the resources we could find were boring and dry, and made us feel guilty that our kids were eating such limited foods. Nothing approached the topic with a sense of humour."

That's when the subject of a book came up, one that would help other parents figure out how to make and introduce good, nutritious food to their kids.

"Luckily our agent also had a picky eater," says Waverman. "She sent it off to Random House, and the editor also had a picky eater."

A need had been identified and a deal was quickly in place.

This spring, the two friends are celebrating the release of their new book, Whining & Dining (Random House Canada). It's filled with recipes and advice on how to teach kids about the joy of good food.

Not surprisingly, neither Waverman nor Mott subscribe to the "eat everything that's on your plate" rule.

"As a child, I found lots of ways around that, which is why I don't believe in it," explains Mott.

"I'd wait till everyone had left the table and I'd stick it in the plants or flush it down the toilet."

Instead, they get their kids to help buy groceries and prepare the meal. Then, they present it on the table. They don't make a big deal out of it. The food is just there, and everyone is free to eat what they want.

"We've found that the kids who eat the best are the ones whose parents just made dinner, set it down and left it for everyone," Mott says.

Popular choices are homemade pizzas, so everyone can choose their favourite toppings. Fajitas are similar in that everyone can assemble their own with ingredients they like.

Ultimately, the point of the book is to figure out how to get kids to eat a range of healthy foods. Along the way, they hope to make mealtime for Canadian families healthier and less stressful.

So, did it work? Most of the time, they say. The kids now eat sauce — especially when it's chocolate. Another uses spring rolls "as a conduit to get the sweet sauce to his mouth."

"My kids aren't perfect," Waverman laughs. "But I wouldn't say they're on the all-white diet anymore."

"Kids love potatoes, but turnips? Parsnips?" write Waverman and Mott.

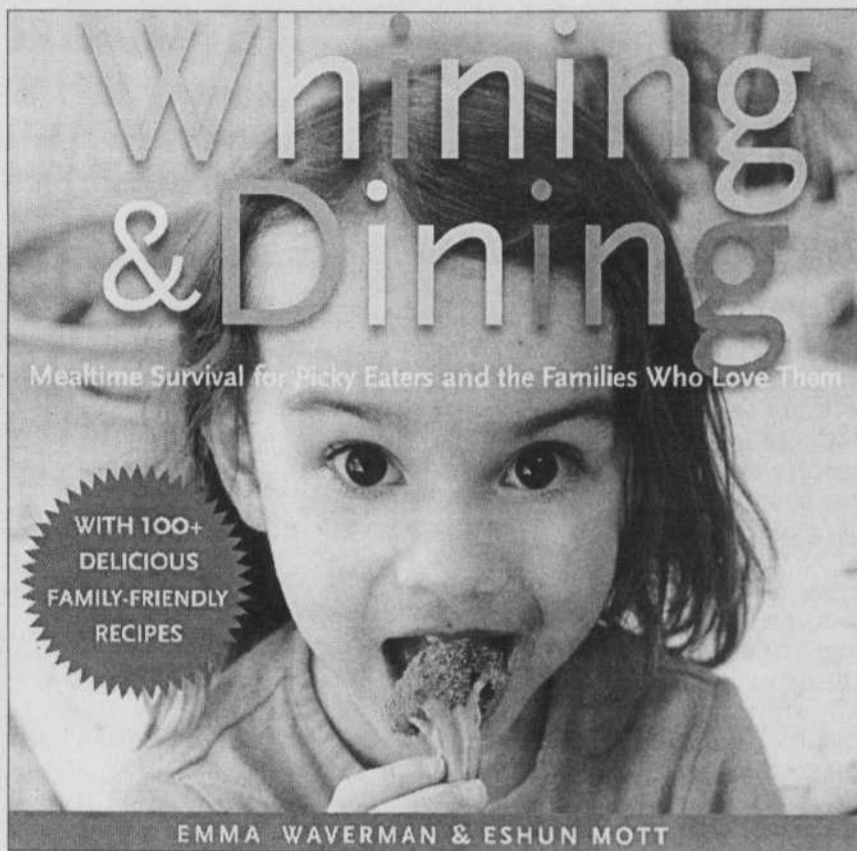

"The funny thing is, these other vegetables in the root family are actually sweeter than potatoes, especially when roasted. So try to sell them on the candy factor."

ROASTED ROOT VEGETABLES

Makes 4-6 servings

1 large white turnip (about 10 oz), peeled and cut into 1/2-inch (1 cm) dice
1 lb (500 g) parsnips (3-4), peeled and cut into 1/2-inch (1 cm) dice
2 tablespoons (25 mL) olive oil
1 tablespoon (15 mL) chopped garlic
2 teaspoon (10 mL) sugar
Salt and freshly ground pepper
3 sprigs fresh thyme
Preheat oven to 425 F (220 degrees C).

Combine turnip and parsnips in large bowl. Toss with olive oil, garlic,

Whining & Dining, by Emma Waverman and Eshun Mott

sugar and salt and pepper to taste. Place in a 9-by-13-inch (23 by 33 cm) baking dish and tuck in thyme sprigs.

Roast vegetables, stirring occasionally, for 45 minutes or until tender and browned.

Discard thyme before the children see it, and serve.

OK, your pickiest kid may not love the thought of "sour" cream, but chances are good they'll eat something from this meal, even if it's just a warm tortilla and maybe some grated cheese.

FAJITAS WITH GUACAMOLE, SALSA AND FIXIN'S

Serves 4

2 tablespoons (25 mL) olive oil
1 tablespoon (15 mL) fresh lime juice
2 teaspoons (10 mL) chopped garlic
1 teaspoon (5 mL) ground cumin
1 teaspoon (5 mL) chili powder
Salt and freshly ground pepper
1 lb (500 g) boneless, skinless chicken breasts (two breasts) OR strip loin, cut into 1/4-inch (6-mm) thick strips
6-8 10-inch (25 cm) flour tortillas
Guacamole
1 large avocado (or 2 small)
2 teaspoons (10 mL) fresh lime juice
1/2 teaspoon (2 mL) chopped garlic
Salt
Salsa
2 teaspoons (25 mL) chopped red onion
1 cup (250 mL) chopped tomato
1 tablespoon (15 mL) olive oil

1 tablespoon (15 mL) red wine vinegar

1 tablespoon (15 mL) chopped coriander

Salt

Vegetables

1 tablespoon (15 mL) olive oil

1 small onion, peeled, halved and thinly sliced

1 green pepper, halved, seeded and thinly sliced

1 red pepper, halved, seeded and thinly sliced

Salt and freshly ground pepper

Sides

1 cup (250 mL) grated Cheddar or Monterey Jack cheese

1/2 cup (125 mL) sour cream

Combine 1 tablespoon (15 mL) of the olive oil, lime juice, garlic, cumin, chili powder and salt and pepper to taste in a medium bowl. Add chicken breasts or beef and toss to coat. Allow to marinate at room temperature while you prepare the side dishes.

Heat oven to 250 F (120 C). Wrap tortillas in foil and place in oven to warm.

• Guacamole: Mash avocado with lime juice and garlic; season with salt to taste. Reserve.

• Salsa: Combine red onions and tomato with olive oil, vinegar and coriander. Season with salt to taste. Reserve.

Heat a large frying pan over medium-high heat. Add chicken or beef; saute for 4 minutes or until meat is slightly browned and cooked through. Remove meat from pan and cover to keep warm.

• Vegetables: Add remaining oil to pan. Add onions and green and red peppers. Saute for 5 minutes or until vegetables have softened and are slightly browned, scraping the bottom of the pan to incorporate any caramelized chicken or beef juices. Season with salt and pepper to taste.

Place chicken, vegetables, guacamole, salsa, grated cheese and sour cream in the centres of the warm tortillas. Roll up and eat.

Chickpeas are high in fibre and protein, making these crispy little treats a healthy snack for kids. Caution: these crunchy chickpeas can cause choking, and aren't recommended for children under the age of three.

Sending rock 'n' roll back to school

Music to soothe the savage drop-out rate?

By Maurice Singfield
SPECIAL TO THE RECORD

I was a wannabe rock star when I was in high school, a product of the times. My parents had a space in the basement for me, my brother Bryan and our friends to practice in, and my father would rent a trailer to haul our equipment around from show to show.

The interesting thing about those days — and we are talking about the late '60s — was that we used to play mainly at high school dances and never in bars. Every weekend and often twice, Friday and Saturday, we would play in school gymnasiums or civic centres throughout Quebec. There was never a shortage of work, like young musicians are faced with today.

Our booking agents, Pierre Gravel out of Granby and later Donald Tarlton from Montreal (Donald K. Donald or DKD), would contact student councils throughout the province and book our weekends. It was a great way to earn extra money, gain professional experience and develop our talent while we were still in school.

Gradually, all of this changed as the '60s started to affect the high school scene. By the time the 1970s arrived, dances had become uncontrollable and were pretty much a thing of the past. As a result, young musicians began relying on the bars as their main source of bookings. What a great idea it was to abandon this group of young people for the safety of our schools, only to have them, along with their age group, become part of the alcohol trade!

There was nothing more disturbing to me than having to play night after night for the cash register, in a cloud of cigarette smoke, from 9 p.m. till 2 a.m. Talk about teaching young people bad habits. No wonder there were, and still are, so many underage drinkers in these places. Talk about effective marketing. I don't think beer companies could ever have planned such a successful strategy.

How do we make students feel part of our schools? Obviously not all children are disconnected from them, but when I was on the governing board of Massey-Vanier Regional High for two years in the earlier part of this decade, statistics claimed roughly a 40 per cent student dropout rate, most of the students being boys. When one considers that the majority of young wannabe rock stars are boys, things begin to fall into place.

Radio Communautaire Missisquoi (RCM) wants to help. We want to develop, through community TV, community radio and the schools in our area, a music program that will focus on these

Summer is hear!

A special request

CJMQ attended the garbage pick up day held in Lennoxville last week-end. While the turnout was small in comparison to previous years, the spirit of the volunteers was great.

The Sherbrooke Snow Shoe Club regularly sends in an article to The Record; two weeks ago Cecil Blenkhorn announced the upcoming retro dance, on Saturday, May 12. He went on to make an advanced request for a specific tune that he would like to hear. CJMQ will provide music for this event and I would like to assure Cecil that I found his request and will be pleased to play it.

We are pleased to announce that our seasonal itinerary is filling in nicely and we will indeed be covering a large portion of the Eastern Townships this summer. We are also very lucky in that we have found several people throughout the region who are willing to keep us informed on affairs going on in their area. If you would like to add yourself to this list contact us at 819-822-9600 ext. 2298.

You may have noticed that CJMQ was off the air Monday night for approximately two hours. Since we had our new transmitter installed outages are rare. In fact this was the first we've had since then — and it turned out it had nothing to do with the transmitter.

The next suspect was a faulty generator, but that turned out to not be the case either. The most likely cause of the interruption is a fault in the telephone lines that carry our signal.

I'll keep you updated as we continue to look into what might have gone wrong.

I would like to once more thank everyone for the warm support we received in our recent financial campaign to raise $70,000 to replace our broken transmitter. Thanks to you our new transmitter is humming along and we can look forward to many years of reliable service out of it.

The next piece of equipment to change is our Ultramod unit. The cost of this piece of equipment was already factored into the initial campaign so we already have the funds to replace it; we have been deciding on what to replace it with. Once that is done we will proceed with the purchase and installation.

What does this mean to you, the listener? The Ultramod controls the basic sound of the station. Our old unit requires a different input from the phone lines than what we are able to supply, so it is running at the limit of its capacity, which means it's hard to get good sound out of it. What you will notice once it is replaced is a livelier sound with more distinct highs and more defined lows. We expect to have the new module installed by the end of May.

We still haven't corrected the problem in our antenna array; the required replacement part is proving to be harder to find than we expected, but I'm sure persistence will pay off. This piece of equipment doesn't directly affect our sound so you won't notice a difference when we change it. The most notable aspect of this part of the project is the three hours that we will be required to be off-air in order to change it.

We schedule repairs like this for the wee hours of the morning, so the vast majority of our listeners won't experience an interruption in service.

Next week I will submit photos of the new transmitter that all of you helped us buy. It is a thing of beauty and should grace the cover of Glamour Magazine... but then again, others may not agree.

Summer is hear (not a typo!), so get out and enjoy it but take your portable radio with you and keep it tuned to CJMQ 88.9 FM. We are a great companion as you work around the yard, in the flower bed, or even while sitting on the porch.

powerful ballad of gratitude and love that will bring tears to your eyes.

There's also the first single released, 'Love Sweet Love', an upbeat number which is doing very well on the country music charts. Through the entire album, the listener can feel that Reid is more confident than ever and totally in control of his artistry.

Whether you are listening to 'Out of the Blue', 'Feelin' Alright Today' or 'That Kind of Lonely', you'll go to familiar places in your own life. You'll also find answers to questions you sometimes ask yourself in more introspective moments.

Everyone will surely recognize 'Darlin'', a great cover of an old Tom Jones hit. Reid makes it sound fresh by making it his own.

The title track, 'Kicking Stones', takes us to a very personal place in Johnny Reid's life. It's about the years he spent in Scotland as a child and the memories — good and bad — that stayed with him.

Set to a lush musical backdrop of pipes and a B3 (used in most R&B recordings), the result is phenomenal and haunting. This is a song that reminds the listener that Reid has roots in Scotland but also that no matter where your own roots might be, childhood memories are often similar.

This album is about love and hope. It is very true to who Johnny Reid is, as a man as well as an artist. Many fans would love to hear him cover more traditional country music because he does it well, but this album shows a lot of integrity and talent and that's what counts the most.

Reid will perform Saturday, May 19 at 2 p.m. and 8 p.m. at The Piggery (in North Hatley). For reservations call 819-842-2431. Don't miss this wonderful performance: Reid has always been an entertainer with a lot of energy and soul to spare.

Church Street Café's last hurrah

The final Church Street Café of the season will feature folkies Bill Garrett and Sue Lothrop.

Lothrop began her career in Lennoxville while studying at Bishop's University in the 1970s. When not playing festivals or recording, she does music therapy with seniors.

Garrett is a partner in Borealis Records, a recording company devoted to folk music, and in 2003 the two musicians released Red Shoes on Bo- realis.

The title track was written in memory of Lothrop's mother, who grew up in Lennoxville. Another song, The Hill, has Lothrop recalling her Sherbrooke childhood, meeting friends and walking up those long hills.

Garrett and Lothrop will perform at the Church Street Café (in the church at the corner of Queen and Church streets in Lennoxville) on Friday, May 4. Doors open at 7 and the music begins at 8 p.m. Tickets at the door; call 819-875-5696.

from righty to lefty to adapt my drumming to be more like him," said Levac, who bears an eerie resemblance to the old rocker when he was in his prime.

The self-described Genesis freak cringes at the term "tribute band", suggesting the goal is literally to recreate a "freeze frame", a moment in time in the history of Genesis.

"It's a reconstruction," Levac said, adding Turn It On Again recreates the infamous performance in Montreal's Jarry Park on Aug. 2, 1982 that ended in a riot. "We have a mission. This mission is to reproduce — as much as we can — the real thing, and make people believe they are in front of Genesis and Phil Collins in 1982. That's the goal."

The musical tribute has won over die-hard fans of the band across North America and Europe. It has also gotten the attention of the man at the centre of the original band: Phil Collins himself.

"He came to play with us," said Levac, noting Collins had spent the afternoon hanging out with Turn It On Again before eventually taking the stage with them at a show in Geneva, Switzerland.

"He was stunned. He told me, 'You're just like me. It's like looking in a mirror.'" Collins watched most of the performance from the audience, and then swapped places with Levac to anchor the show.

"Watching my own band — all my friends on stage — and watching Phil Collins behind my drum kit, I realized it was quite an achievement for a bunch of Canadians in a cover band," Levac said, adding with a laugh: "I could have died after that."

Phil Collins and a handful of original members of Genesis are touring once again, and will be stopping in Montreal next fall. Levac said what his group does is different.

"People who see the Genesis show in September might be disappointed, because they're not going to get what it was in '82."

Levac was too young to be in the audience at that original concert himself, but he says his performance is meant to best represent the band as they were.

"People want to see what they missed, or want to see again what they had the chance to see back then. I don't know what it's about, but it's in the air."

Levac doesn't lament the fact he set aside his own solo career to play someone else's music, and step into Collins' shoes. He still writes his own music, and releases the occasional album, but being Phil Collins is his passion. It's play time, all the time.

"I'm like a kid when I play Genesis. I'm 13 years old again. I get up on stage and pretend to be the guy two hours in the day. That's cool."

Turn It On Again will perform the music of Genesis at the Granada Theatre on Friday, May 4 at 8:30 p.m. Tickets are $29.50.

young people who have been left out of the "big" picture. If asked, they will tell you that the most important thing in their lives is their music and that their two biggest problems are trying to find gigs and getting media exposure.

Being Who We Are is the name of RCM's music program. It's a TV show produced for community TV, a kind of "Star Search" thing that will pick the finest young aspiring artists out of the Townships music scene. It will be an on-going process. Each challenge (lasting four months) will include six bands that will play off for the three top spots. These bands will be included in a pool of musicians who will eventually make up a top 30 play list of independent artists for RCM's CIDI 99.1 FM community radio station, when up and running.

In the meantime their music will be included on RCM's monthly audio magazines; CDs that contain 80 minutes of CIDI programming, including music and interviews with locals, speaking directly to issues that concern us all.

Each four-month challenge will produce four TV shows, one a month, with two bands playing off on each of the first three shows. For the fourth month, a final play off will take place between the top three bands from the three previous performances. A panel of judges and an Internet voting system throughout the challenge will decide the first, second and third place winners.

All of the shows for now will be recorded, video and audio, at Studio d'Enregistrement Musical 1492 in Waterloo. In the future, we hope to bring the final show of each "Being Who We Are" challenge to different schools in the region and begin the process of bringing our young musicians back to the schools and making our schools, once again, the main venue for their talents.

I could never have imagined playing in an auditorium, when I was a young musician, like the ones in today's regional schools, cégeps and universities, with proper lighting and sound reinforcement. We need teachers, students and parents interested in the recording and performing arts and sciences to be able to pull this off. Why leave it up to the bars and beer companies to do it?

Please contact me at 450-539-2098 if you feel you have something to contribute to this project and RCM. At the moment we are looking for music teachers and professional musicians who would be willing to become members of our panel of judges. Also, we are looking for any students who might be interested in participating in the video and audio production of the "Being Who We Are" music challenge.

Needless to say, there wouldn't be a contest if we didn't have musicians, so if you can sing, play and write great songs give me a call or send your music to: "Being Who We Are", PO Box 277, Waterloo, JOE 2N0. In order to qualify you need to have original material.

Your new HDTV?

It's already out of date

CanWest News Service
VANCOUVER

That high-definition television set you bought for Super Bowl? Already outmoded. The HDTV you're about to hustle home with to watch the Stanley Cup playoffs? Yesterday's set within a few months.

Recognize the pattern?

It's the market-driven, upgrade-centric one you've experienced when you go to buy a computer. And you'd better get used to it, according to the HDTV research group at the school for interactive arts and technology (SIAT) at British Columbia's Simon Fraser University.

"Our guess is that the days of stable video technologies are long gone," said assistant professor and media scholar Jim Bizzocchi, one of the four researchers who make up the team.

"The good news for consumers is that picture quality will continue to get better and better for the foreseeable future," added Bizzocchi, also a cinematographer. "The bad news is that you're always going to be caught in a purchasing cycle if you want the latest and the best television."

There are three areas where improvements are most likely to take place; and not only consumers, but producers and broadcasters will be scrambling to keep up:

- HD picture standards, which just recently made the leap from 720p (720 lines of vertical display resolution) to 1080p — the latter usable only if you watch HD DVDs, will likely continue on to a standard called 4k, or almost four times 1080p.

- Increased dynamic range which allows for vastly superior contrast and approaches what the human eye can see in terms of detail that can be seen in shadows and in highlights.

- Increase in frame rates — now at 60 frames per second for 1080 — which would also offer a better picture.

Another area, being investigated by computing science professor Tom Calvert, is that of three-dimensional television.

"All of these things tend to make the screen disappear," said Bizzocchi. "And instead of staring at a screen you're looking through a window."

As well, picture size will get bigger. "And these new visual capabilities will get rolled out incessantly, just like new computer capabilities are rolled out incessantly."

Advertising, as it is with other high-tech gear, will focus on specs — like 1080p — that will soon become part of the vocabulary of TV buyers everywhere.

Just as with computers, said Bizzocchi, the adoption of the television breakthroughs will be on a broken front.

"When you buy the latest machine with the latest technology there's going to be limited content available and the innovators and the early adopters will go for that. Then, gradually, more and more people in the mainstream will buy it and gradually there will be more and more content available."

Then mainstream purchasers will come into the market and prices will drop and then there will be new innovations for the early adopters.

"We believe this cycle will continue," said Bizzocchi.

Although broadcasters, especially those in Canada, have not been swift to adopt new standards such as HD, they won't have any choice in the future.

"What does broadcasting mean now? Well, you've got cablecasting, satellite-casting and you've got Internet broadcasting," said Bizzocchi. "So, just as the world of standards in video technologies is long gone I think the orderly broadcast universe is long gone or is in the process."

A major influence on this is the mandated move to digital TV in the U.S. by April 2009, said fellow researcher Belgacem Ben Youssef, an assistant professor at SIAT.

"And that's a factor that's going to help converge the technology from broadcasters and TV studios, you name it. And Canada will follow suit."

One of the areas the SFU group is investigating is the use of television to provide art for people's living rooms and other areas in their homes.

"We will use this beautiful screen, this elegant screen in our living room for living video paintings," said Bizzocchi.

Art images that will appear on consumer's home screens will likely be in three areas:

- Generative art, somewhat similar to that of the screen saver or the music visuals produced by the Windows Media Player or iTunes.

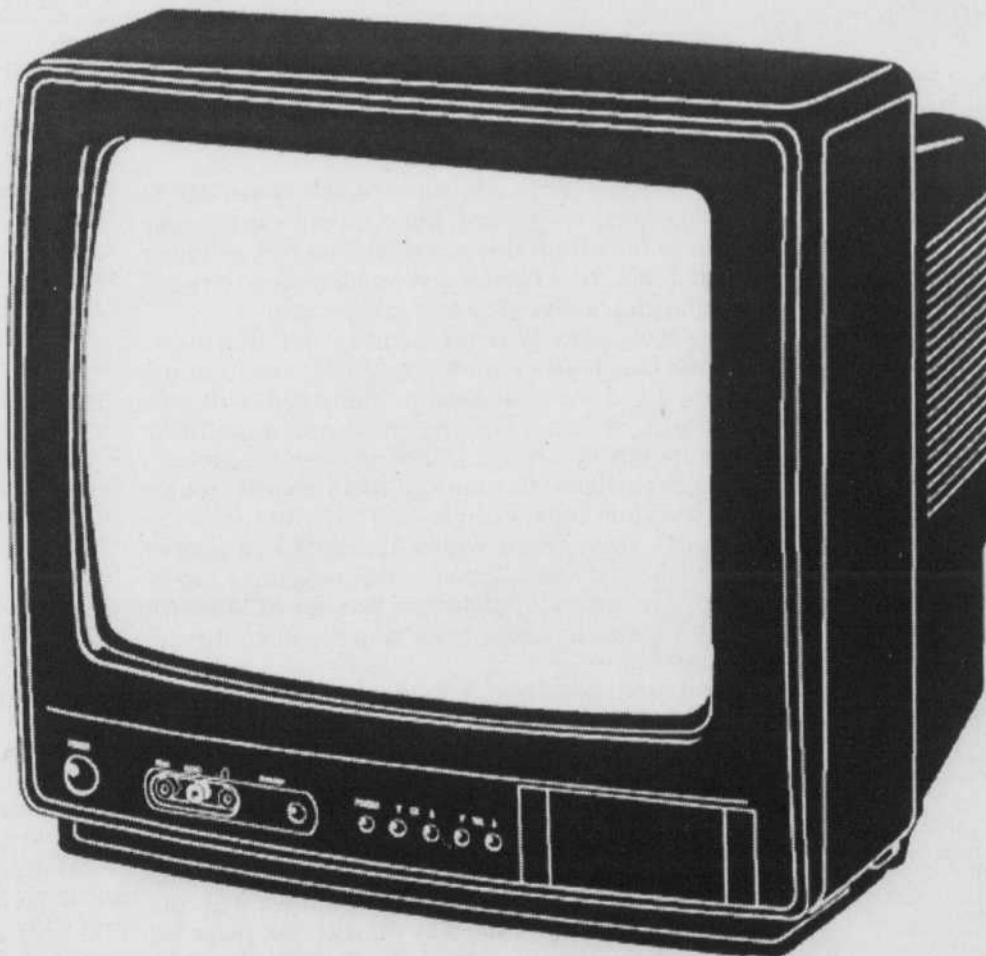

- Interactive art will be produced by sensors either in the television screen itself or placed around the room. The images, which might come from a data base of themed photos, could change according to how people were seated in a room or how they moved about.

- Purely cinematic art with no interactivity and no generation of changing imagery, but a film, with sound (which could be turned down) that could either be watched or simply become part of the room's ambience.

"They're not narrative and we're not required to watch it, but any time we do watch will give us visual pleasure," said Bizzocchi, who added that artists in the future, who create for this medium, will need to work in co-operation with computer scientists such as Ben Youssef, in order to help get their creative ideas across.

He said the same type of collaboration was happening within the HDTV Research Group at SFU as they developed their ideas on the future of TV.

The fourth researcher at SIAT is director John Bowes, who is looking at the policy implications of the introduction of technology into society.

Master of the macabre

A Poe for the 21st century

This week's pick demonstrates just how far a skilled writer can take readers into unfamiliar territory and terrifying events, and get into their minds. A gripping storyline, combined with believable characters and a strong sense of place, lift this novel out of the ranks of the commonplace and into the very top tier of contemporary crime fiction.

In the process it raises an intriguing question: which is more fearful — death, or dying?

PETER JAMES

To say that Peter James has led an interesting life would be something of an understatement. Born in 1948, James graduated from Charterhouse (a prestigious independent British school whose roots go back to the early 17th century), and Ravensbourne Film School. To date, his 13 novels have been translated into 28 languages, include number one best-sellers, and have garnered multiple international prizes. In addition to his writing credits, James has also produced several films, including The Bridge of San Luis Rey, starring Robert De Niro, and The Merchant of Venice, starring Al Pacino, Jeremy Irons and Joseph Fiennes.

Since its publication, Dead Simple has won both Le Prix Coeur Noir (2006) and Le Prix Polar International (2007). James was also awarded the Krimi-Blintz prize in Germany for Best Crime Writer of the Year.

Peter James divides his time between a Georgian manor house in Sussex and a flat in Notting Hill, London, and shares his life with Bertie and Phoebe, respectively a Hungarian Puli Sheepdog with dreadlocks and a German Shepherd with a fondness for rabbits. When not writing he collects classic and modern cars.

DEAD SIMPLE (PAN BOOKS, 2005)

Michael Harrison is one lucky guy. Senior partner in a successful property development firm, he's just days away from marrying the breathtakingly beautiful Ashley Harper. But before that happens, Michael's mates — Josh, Robbo, Luke and Pete — take him on a traditional Stag Night Out.

Well, maybe not quite so traditional. Three nights before Michael's wedding, after getting him pleasantly sozzled, his friends drive Michael to a remote spot in the Sussex countryside and place him in a coffin, with only a breathing tube, a girlie magazine, a flashlight, a bottle of whisky, and a walkie-talkie for company. Then they bury him in a shallow grave and set off for the nearest pub in their borrowed green transit van.

The idea, of course, is to let Michael sweat: payback time for the various practical jokes he's played on his mates in the past. But fate has a way of having the last laugh. On the road the lads taunt Michael with their walkie-talkie, the other end of his lifeline. When the driver is distracted the van is involved in a terrible road accident, a head-on crash with a large lorry. Three of the four lads are killed instantly, and the fourth winds up in hospital, comatose and on life-support. When a tow-truck driver arrives at the scene, his intellectually-challenged son Davey finds the walkie-talkie, but does not realize its significance. Afraid his father will be angry with him for keeping it, Davey hides it in his room and does not tell anyone about his puzzling new friend on the other end. And as the batteries weaken in his flashlight, Michael discovers a new horror: groundwater is infiltrating the coffin.

When Michael does not appear the following day, his fiancée learns of the road accident. She is desperate to locate Michael, but the police have little to go on. The plot thickens when Michael's business partner, Mark Warren, learns about the accident. Originally part of the scheme, he had been delayed from participating due to a business trip.

Mark realizes that Michael's misfortune might be his good luck. All he has to do is profess his ignorance about Michael's disappearance, and remain silent. Assigned to what seems to be a simple missing persons case, Detective-Superintendent Roy Grace risks his superior's wrath by calling on the skills of a local clairvoyant to help find Michael before it is too late.

Maybe Michael is not so lucky after all.

MY RECOMMENDATION

A well-paced, skillful blend of police procedural and gripping suspense. James's use of the omniscient point of view is key to his creating a sense of urgency to the plot. His description of Michaels' desperate attempts to escape his grave is eloquent in its sense of urgency:

Michael pressed the talk button. 'Davey?' Silence.

He pressed the button again. 'Davey? Hello? Davey?'

White-satin silence. Complete and utter silence, coming down from above, rising up beneath him, pressing in from each side. He tried to move his arms, but as hard as he pushed them out, walls pressed back against them. He also tried to spread out his legs, but they met the same, unyielding walls. Resting the walkie-talkie on his chest, he pushed up against the satin room inches from his eyes. It was like pushing against concrete.

Dead Simple is not for everyone — in particular readers who are claustrophobic. But get beyond that and you'll be richly rewarded with an engrossing, original, and exquisitely-crafted tale of love, trust, greed and betrayal, with an action-packed surprise ending. Peter James is a master of the macabre, a 21st century Edgar Allan Poe, and Dead Simple is quite simply one of the finest crime thrillers I've read in a very long while.

The second novel in the Roy Grace series, Looking Good Dead, spent seven weeks among the top 10 books in Britain's Sunday Times, and has been shortlisted for Britains' Crime Thriller of the Year. On June 1, Not Dead Enough, the third novel in the Roy Grace series, is scheduled to be released.

A great adventure took place

By Katherine Monk
CANWEST NEWS SERVICE

America was in decline. The King of rock 'n' roll was found dead on the floor of his Grace-land bathroom. Groucho Marx had his last laugh. The American economy was sliding and the New York blackout left nine million without power, throwing a hint of doubt into the great Empire's image of technological superiority.

Making matters all the worse, then-president Jimmy Carter warned Americans of a "national catastrophe," saying citizens must respond with "the moral equivalent of war" in order to make "profound changes" in their oil consumption.

According to most historical accounts of the day, 1977 was not a good year for America. Yet, amid a wasteland of political paranoia, cultural transformation and technological change, there was A New Hope: Star Wars Episode IV.

At the time of its release 30 years ago, May 25, 1977, the movie — which was then simply called "Star Wars" — was considered little more than popcorn matinee material.

Despite the success of Steven Spielberg's fear-driven phenomenon Jaws, most Hollywood power-brokers believed the great white shark spectacle to be a fluke — a strange coincidence that brought movie magic, behind-the-scenes bickering and technological bravado together in one splendid monster movie. But when Star Wars turned on the warm jets and made the summer of '77 a steaming whirlpool of box-office profit, Hollywood changed forever.

"I was right in the middle of the action when Hollywood first spun off its axis," says Variety editor Peter Bart in his book Who Killed Hollywood?

"Unexpected blockbusters such as Jaws, Star Wars and E.T. forever changed the way the film factories were regarded by the moneymen. Watching the lines wind around the block at theatres in the U.S. and overseas, the Michael Eis-ners and Rubert Murdochs of the world recognized that movies were not just a business but a downright bonanza. If a film could make $500 million almost inadvertently, why not build an assembly line that would systematically tap into those markets?"

Bart's observations about the defining moments in late-'70s cinematic history are clearly set in a specific light (as suggested by the title of his book), and infer a negative read of the franchise that made Star Wars creator George Lucas the undisputed King of Nerdsville to an entire generation. But whether you mark the mid-'70s as the beginning, or the end, of American cinema is really just a matter of opinion and esthetic.

The truth remains: Hollywood changed forever in the wake of a mechanical shark and an interstellar western, heralding the arrival of tentpole "event movies" that managed to achieve universal appeal, and set the movie industry on an increasingly corporate course where art would always take a back seat to profit potential and baseline sensibilities.

While Spielberg, Lucas and James Cameron are typically fingered as the central villains in the art-versus-commerce debate, it seems unfair to tar and feather them in isolation. A film, like any artifact, is an expression of its era and contains within it a million reflections of the world that spurred its creation.

Quite simply, Star Wars could not have achieved its towering success without appealing to the specific needs of the Zeitgeist, and with that in mind, let's take a timely look back at the reality that gave us the ultimate fantasy.

America was in a death spiral: Rising oil prices, the loss of militaristic self-esteem in the wake of Vietnam, a frosty Cold War, the Watergate hangover, and increased social tension as the result of continuing feminist and ethnic pressure to make the corridors of white-collar power accessible to all, pushed

Movies

America into a moral corner.

Needing to see itself as a world hero, yet increasingly aware of its own social injustice, the American psyche was demonstrating signs of bipolar disorder — even on the movie screen. From the manic, fantasy-driven highs of Star Wars to the bleak depths of Julia and mixed emotions in Annie Hall, the year in movies seemed just as fragmented as America itself.

Lucas probably had no intention of creating a moral time capsule of his era when he set out to make Star Wars. The director was still largely associated with the success of American Graffiti — a small film steeped in Americana with a hint of edge.

As a result, the USC film school grad was seen as a "next-generation" auteur alongside Martin Scorsese and Francis Ford Coppola. Only a fool would have spotted him as the next Cecil B. DeMille.

Even the budget for Star Wars looked relatively modest — especially by today's standards — at just over $11 million. But just weeks into its theatrical run, it was already showing signs of accelerated growth — eventually raking in $1,172,026,900 US worldwide (in adjusted dollars), making it the second-most successful film of all time (according to ticket sales and adjusted dollars) after Gone With the Wind, which raked in a staggering $1,329,453,600 US over the course of its domestic and international release.

Though Hollywood insiders and studio executives are always loathe to see the larger reasons behind a film's success — hoping to hog the credit for themselves and their keen eye for timely material — historians know there's no such thing as an isolated cultural phenomenon.

Gone With the Wind tapped into an audience of more than a million book-lovers who lapped up every sticky word of Margaret Mitchell's prose, but it also played to a rising sense of pre-War xenophobia, as well as epic greatness. The movie was a technological and sociological event that remains the high watermark of Hollywood's Golden Age — even though it dealt with the ugliest chapter in the nation's history: The Civil War.

The success of Star Wars can be seen as the result of similar social and technological factors.

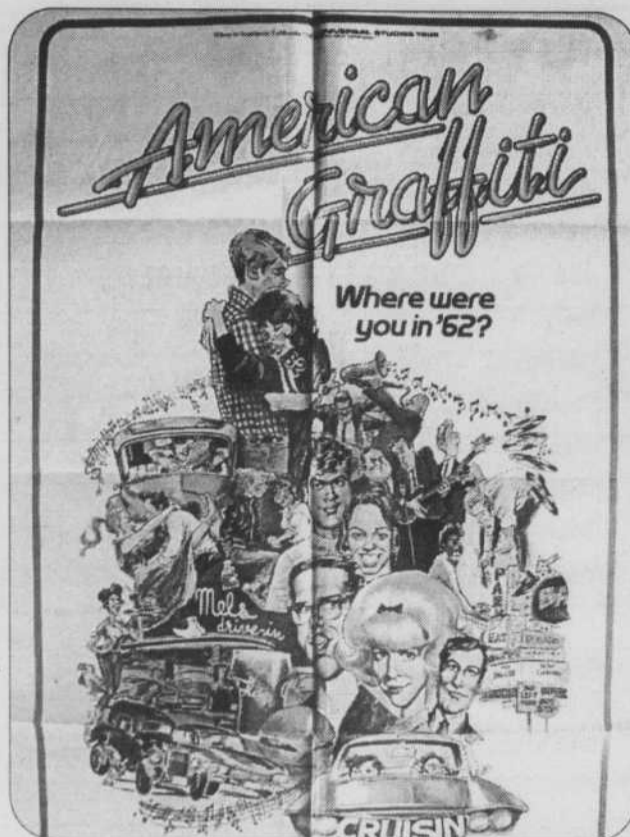

For starters, the science-fiction genre had been legitimized the decade before by the likes of Stanley Kubrick, who crafted an elegant and abstract space movie in 2001: A Space Odyssey, as well as Jean-Luc Godard (Alphaville, 1965) and Francois Truffaut (Fahrenheit 451). In addition to authors such as Kurt Vonnegut, who also brought mainstream and academic appeal to the science-fiction genre, America was already familiar with images of real astronauts on television as a result of the very real "space race."

From being the black sheep of the American film genre family in the 1950s, science-fiction was no longer the idiot cousin of real drama when Lucas started writing his space saga.

If anything, the form was poised to take advantage of recent film innovations such as computer-assisted cinematography, Dolby sound and early digital effects. Fantasy didn't have to look cheesy anymore. It could tell its story without tripping over awkward costumes and jiggling miniatures.

Lucas not only took advantage of every current technology, he invented more of his own, perfecting sound-delivery systems and developing computerized shots that made matting and bluescreen scenes appear seamless.

Yet, all the technological advancements in the world couldn't have made Star Wars the success it was had it not struck a populist chord and touched something deep inside the American psyche. After all, very few films find their way into a presidential lexicon, but Star Wars seemed to guide Ronald Reagan's speechwriters, who used the film to promote moral certainty with the line "the Force is With Us" and grabbed the Star Wars moniker for the Strategic Defence Initiative (SDI).

For film historian Joseph Sartelle, the success of Star Wars and other blockbusters of the era were the result of America's craving for jingoistic junk food.

"The Star Wars and Indiana Jones movies, for example, were allegories of international relations: They sought to restore faith in the American ability to compete and perform successfully in a global political economy," says Sartelle.

"The Star Wars trilogy imagined the Cold War as a battle in which the Rebel Alliance — composed of white heroes and their differently speciesed (sic) helpers in a pastiche of American pluralism, prevails over the evil Galactic Empire, whose military men wore uniforms that looked suspiciously like those of the Soviets."

In short, Star Wars allowed Americans to buy back into the romantic dream of David-vs-Goliath greatness — where they were the David, and not — despite ample evidence to the contrary — the Goliath.

In this regard, it's no wonder Star Wars became the psychological aloe to soothe a sunburned soul, but the ultimate reason for Star Wars' success comes down to sheer escapist delight — be it escapism from a political reality, or a personal one.

"Everyone who sees Star Wars has precisely the same experience," declared film theoretician David Cook, who mourned the subsequent loss of ambiguity in American film. Where 2001 showed man in a somewhat existential relationship to his universe, Star Wars threw him into the familiar black-and-white terrain of the old western.

Yet, despite the film's formulaic narrative and simplistic moral view, even The New Yorker magazine found something to love in Lucas' array of "strange spacecraft, shaped like opened grape scissors, silver platters and crossed fish forks."

Said critic Penelope Gilliatt, summing up the reasons for Star Wars' success in one sentence: "The movie is exuberantly entertaining."

Johnny Reid comes to The Piggery

We own a piece of his heart?

Johnny Reid will perform a benefit concert at The Piggery Theatre in North Hatley on Saturday, May 19. It will be the third time that Reid graces the stage of The Piggery, and each visit makes for a lot of happy fans.

The young man was born in Scotland, moved to Ontario with his family when he was 17, and now resides in Nashville. He also spent a few years studying at Bishop's University in Lennoxville, which has created a special bond between local country fans and the artist. We like to think that we own a piece of his heart — and I think that we do.

Back when he was a student, it was a common thing to see him on the streets, in the restaurants or again to catch him playing a gig in one of the local bars. Back then, the goal was clear: he wanted to pursue a musical career. He has come a long way since the days when we could hear and see him perform at the Golden Lion Pub.

Now he's back in town with a brand new album, Kicking Stones, and a few hits under his belt. Hard work, determination and lots of talent took him there.

This second effort from Reid is slightly different from Born to Roll both in style and emotions. The first collection was much more about the road and not as close to home, while the new album features Reid opening his heart to sing about life, love and memories.

Many of the numbers found on the album offer a strong R&B flavour, complete with the horns and back-up singers. It might sound less country, but the soul feel of the album suits Reid's style perfectly.

He is a passionate, honest and genuine artist, who has very strong family values as well as roots deep enough to stand tall on his own. These qualities enable him to translate into words feelings and life experiences that we can easily relate to.

The album was recorded in Nashville and produced by Grammy winner Brent Maher, known for his work with The Judds and Kenny Rogers, just to name a few. Johnny Reid and Brent Maher co-wrote many songs on this album, which could explain how Maher manages to capture Reid's essence as a singer.

As opposed to Born to Roll, the instrumentation gets a lot more attention. Recorded with Mark Knopfler's touring band, the album offers the kind of energy you usually find in a live show.

Of course, the uniqueness of Johnny Reid's voice has a lot to do with his success. It is raspy and sexy and he there's an easiness when he belts out lyrics, that he can also make tender and soft.

He has grown as a songwriter and as a performer, which you can hear on the beautiful "Thank You", a song inspired by his wife on Valentine's Day. It is a
