Interest High As Shopping Club Competition Progresses

Features Added To Shopping Club Competition To Boost Totals Of The Competitors

Double Votes in Club Stores On Saturday—Double Votes Also On Paid Subscriptions—Keen Competition Shown Among Contestants—One More Week Being Allowed For New Entries of Competitors

The whole countryside is talking . . .!

They're talking about the Chateauguay Valley Good Will Shopping Club Competition.

Interest is running high!

There's $500.00 being offered in cash prizes absolutely free.

There are no strings attached to these prizes. You can win one of them just as easily as the next person.

Competitors are now hard at work securing the votes that will give them the high standing and ultimately the cash prizes. They are scouring the countryside seeking Gleaner subscriptions and also the votes being given out by the club merchants from cash purchases.

Enthusiasm is growing rampant as each day passes. It is plainly evident that there will be some real action in the contest in the near future.

Merchants co-operating in the campaign are reporting increased sales as the competitors and their friends purchase from them and at the same time secure the votes given out which when credited to the competitors gives them a high standing in the contest.

IT WILL BE TO THE ADVANTAGE OF CONTESTANTS AND THEIR SUPPORTERS TO BUY FROM THE SHOPPING CLUB MERCHANTS ON SATURDAY OF THIS WEEK AND ALSO TO PAY ANY ACCOUNTS THAT MAY BE OUTSTANDING. Not only will it be an opportunity to get TWO VOTES FOR ONE ON CASH PURCHASES AND PAYMENTS OF ACCOUNTS, but a number of merchants are offering SPECIALLY PRICED MERCHANDISING.

Positively Last Week for Entries

This week practically the final list of contestants who have entered the field for the fine prize awards given to those who turn in the most votes during the Shopping Club Competition is announced.

However, we would like to see more contestants in the country and should anyone else desire to enter, they will be accepted for one more week and 10,000 free votes will be given on the entry.

Read the advertisements in the Gleaner and patronize the Club merchants for better values. Be sure to ask for your coupons. Merchants should not fail to give out coupons whether asked for or not, as it is to their interest to stimulate enthusiasm.

Special Weekly Prizes

Arthur Brown and Baird Pringle won the two cash prizes last week.

The same prizes, $2.00 and $1.00 cash, will again be given next week for the largest vote returns up to next Monday at 5 p.m.

Merchants Please Note

Club merchants are advised to give out these double votes Saturday on all cash purchases and payment of accounts. However, customers are reminded that should this be neglected, they are entitled to them and should make sure they receive them.

Important Notice to Contestants

1. Watch the special vote features announced for each week.
2. Try to win one of the special prizes offered. Only one first and second of these special prizes will be given to any one contestant.
3. Entries positively close next Monday. If you haven't entered yet and intend to do so, send your entry to The Gleaner Office not later than Monday next.
4. Contestants must remain active by depositing some votes each week.
5. Contestants can assist the Club manager by depositing coupons in quantity, and using envelopes supplied for this purpose. If this is done full name must be plainly written on outside of envelopes and a summary of votes enclosed must be filled in on envelope.
6. Deposit votes in Ballot Box up to Monday at 5 p.m. each week, to secure best chance in winning one of the special prize awards.

Double Votes on Subscriptions

Contestants who go after subscriptions for this week may greatly increase their standing, as we are giving twice the regular vote schedule on each year's subscriptions, new, renewals or arrears, if paid next Saturday or Monday.

Some contestants, who have not received subscription receipt books and supplies, should call at the office as early as possible and receive same. Remember, subscription votes count big and the sooner you get your friends to subscribe the better chance you have to share in the grand prize awards.

Gleaner Office Open Saturday Evenings, 8 to 10

For the convenience of country subscribers and contestants who wish to pay subscription accounts, the Gleaner office will be open each Saturday evening during the balance of the Good-Will Shopping Club campaign between 8 and 10 p.m. daylight saving time.

DAYLIGHT SAVING TIME HERE HAS ONE MONTH TO GO

Daylight Saving Time has approximately one month to go in Huntingdon for this year. On September 24 clocks will be turned back to Standard Time, in accordance with the By-law.

There have been expressions of appreciation and those of non-appreciation of Daylight Saving Time. From general remarks it would seem that those who are not in favour of Daylight Saving Time predominate. Time alone, however, will tell this. The By-law which was passed early this summer in favour of Daylight Saving Time implied that this time would automatically continue on in operation each summer. The By-law also states that after one year Daylight Saving Time can be done away with should the council pass a resolution to this effect or should a new referendum be held in which Daylight Saving Time is defeated.

Uproot 300 Trees For A New Highway

Big Improvements Being Made On Road From Hemmingford To The United States Border

Extensive alterations are being made on the road from Hemmingford to the border, part of the program to make a good highway from Plattsburg, New York, to Montreal.

Fortin and Frere of Hemmingford have the contract for that portion of the road between Hemmingford and the border. It is a $55,000 contract. Work commenced about the middle of July and will continue until the snow flies. Part of this road is being cut right through a bush and all in all the contract calls for the ousting of some 300 trees, many of them quite large.

The width of the road from ditch to ditch is to be 42 feet. Next Spring it will be given a black top. Some 18,000 yards of rock, dirt and filling in general is being used on the road.

When the highway is completed through to Montreal from Plattsburg it will be the shortest route between these two centres by 17 miles. The highway will come to the Caughnawaga bridge.

Observations In Quebec By German Agriculturist

Dr. Ek Seelman, of Berlin, Germany, Prominent German Agricultural Economist, Relates To The Gleaner His Observations of Quebec While On Tour Here

"O wad some pow'r the giftie gie us
To see oursels as others see us!
It wad frae mony a blunder free us,

So wrote the immortal Scottish bard, Robert Burns, many years ago.

Dr. E. Seelman, one of the leading agricultural authorities in Germany who is now in Canada attending the Fifth International Convention of Agricultural Economists at Macdonald College, was in Huntingdon on Saturday evening.

And he spoke not unlike the great Scottish poet.

We do not mean he spoke with the Scottish burr of Bobbie Burns, but rather that he spoke along the same sentiment as is expressed in Burns' aforementioned words.

The distinguished German agricultural economist pointed out, as did Bobbie Burns, that it was a fine thing every now and then to have a stranger tell us what we looked like through his eyes. The stranger could see us in a light that we, ourselves, could never see.

After this prelude the Gleaner as much as said, "O.K. professor, give us the works. What do we Quebeckers look like to you and what strikes you as being odd or unusual about us?"

Dr. Seelman was hesitant for a while. A big, jovial man, he appeared to be somewhat of a diplomat at first who, although he spoke and joked freely, guarded and weighed carefully every word that came from his lips. He spoke with the unmistakable deep guttoral accent of the German. He was most friendly and it was obvious he was on a holiday and did not want to be constrained by any conventionalities. He thought the weather was too warm. He thought it would be well to take off his coat while eating his meal at the Huntingdon Chateau, even though practically all the others were reticent about this and kept their coats on lest it might be some unpardonable breach of etiquette to take it off.

The big German Doctor of Agriculture would have none of this, etiquette or no etiquette. He was uncomfortably warm. So he peeled off his coat. A German colleague seated at the same table, who was more fearful of what others might think if you took your coat off, hastened to warn his frank German friend that he was wearing suspenders and this did not look well. The German Doctor let a disgruntled grunt out of him and proceeded to drop the suspenders from his shoulders.

After he was comfortably settled again, he proceeded to eat and to talk—and to talk frankly.

Observing that the German Doctor was now in a better frame of mind through increased comforts he had established in defiance of any established conventionalism that might exist, the Gleaner once again stated, "Well, Doctor, what strikes you as being different here in Quebec to what you are accustomed to in your native Germany?"

"Well," drawled the distinguished German in carefully measured words, "I naturally see things here as being somewhat different, but on the whole, very fine indeed."

"They say," said the Doctor, "that after being in a new country for three weeks you can say something about it. After that it takes you three years, at least, living in a new country to say something about it and even then you realize you still don't see things as they really are."

The Gleaner agreed with the Doctor, adding that making statements about a new country about which you knew very little was like learning about anything—the more you learn about anything the more you realize how really little you know about the whole thing.

"While I was up through the Lake St. John district," said Dr. Seelman, "I could not help but notice the large families. Ten, fifteen, eighteen in a family was as nothing. I must say it was quite a surprise. Truly, the residents of that part of your Province breed almost as freely as rabbits."

"Generally speaking, you seem to enjoy most comfortable homes. Everything seems to be so complete and so comfortable.

TRANSLATED 80 INDIAN WAMPUMS INTO ENGLISH

For the first time in the history of the Six Nations Indians on the North American continent the laws or statutes governing their conduct since centuries before Columbus discovered America have been translated into the English language. This was the claim made by an Indian Chief on the St. Regis Reservation on a recent visit by the Gleaner.

The Chief brought out a voluminous manuscript of some 30 neatly typewritten pages on which the Indian laws appeared in English. There were 80 statutes, or as the Indians call them, "wampums." The St. Regis Chief claimed that a young Indian, recently graduated from Syracuse University, this spring took upon himself the stupendous task of translating into English from the Indian language these 80 "wampums." He claims that a copy of it has been sent to each of the Six Nations

Hemmingford Forms New Association

Parent-Teacher Association Formed For Better Acquaintance Of Each Other's Problems

At a meeting held in the Anglican Church Hall, Monday evening, Aug. 15th, a group, interested in the development of the best ideals of community life, formed a local Parent-Teacher Association.

Rev. Mr. Howard was appointed chairman of the meeting. A discussion on the reasons for forming the organization and its possible activities followed. The point was stressed that its aim was not to interfere, but to co-operate to furnish an opportunity whereby parents and teachers would get to know each other better and understand common problems, and to provide desirable outlets for the energies of the children of the community.

A committee of five was appointed to make further plans and report at a meeting on August 29, when officers would be elected. It is hoped that there will be a large attendance of all those interested.

Visiting International Agricultural Economists Praise Farms In This District

Farm Experts From Foreign Lands, Attending Fifth International Convention of Agricultural Economists, Visit Huntingdon On Saturday And Sunday

Huntingdon was honored on Saturday evening and Sunday morning by a visit from a party of twenty-five distinguished world agricultural experts here to attend the Fifth International Convention of Agricultural Economists at Macdonald College, in session this week.

The party arrived here on Saturday evening about seven o'clock under the direction of Mr. J. T. Lamontagne of the Quebec Bureau of Statistics. A banquet was held at the Huntingdon Chateau which completed about a week's Pre-Conference tour of the Province of Quebec. This tour started out from Quebec City on Saturday, August 13, visiting the Experimental Farm at Cap Rouge, where the Minister of Agriculture, the Hon. Mr. Dussault, met the party, after having a short tour of Quebec City. From the Experimental Farm they proceeded to the National Park for the evening. Following on from there they visited in turn Herbertville Station, Lake St. John district, Arvida, the Chicoutimi district, Tadoussac, Riviere du Loup, St. Anne de la Pocatiere, Three Rivers, Plessisville, Richmond, Sherbrooke, Waterloo, Granby and then to Huntingdon to visit the dairy farms in this district.

The representatives gathered at the Chateau on Saturday evening for the banquet was most international in character. Among the countries represented were the following: Germany, Poland, Finland, Czechoslovakia, England, Scotland, Trinidad, Mexico, Holland, United States.

With new and interesting sights ever before them the visiting agriculturists had their eyes ever opened and lost no opportunities to ask questions and take notes about this and that which interested them. All of the visitors to the Huntingdon district were profoundly impressed by the excellence of the farms and the beauty of the whole countryside.

One of the German delegates wanted to know just what the reason was for the development of such a fine dairy farm district around Huntingdon. He suggested that possibly it was because a few farmers of a high calibre started it off and their example was closely followed by those who followed. In brief, an example of high standards was set by the pioneers along this line and this was kept up by those who followed, resulting in the excellent dairy farming district it is.

After their visit here the party returned to Macdonald College prepared to deliberate on problems of world agriculture this week. 359 delegates from 19 different countries are registered for the Conference.

The delegates, who are being housed in Macdonald College residences, represent Bulgaria, Canada, China, Czechoslovakia, Denmark, Eire Finland, Germany, Great Britain, Hungary, Italy, Latvia, Mexico, The Netherlands, New Zealand, Poland, the United States and Jugoslavia. Deliberations are being carried on in French, English and German. The International Institute of Agriculture, Rome, is represented by Sidney Freifeld.

The biggest delegation comes from the United States, numbering 210. Canada is represented by 61 official delegates, Great Britain by 22, and Germany by 16. France has no official representatives at the conference. There are four Chinese, all residents of the United States, but none from Japan.

Although from different countries, practically all of the international agriculturists who visited Huntingdon could speak either English or French. English was spoken most, with French second and German third. The Mexican delegate, Senor Ramon Fernandez Y Fernandez could speak only the Spanish. The representative from Poland, Dr. S. Antonewski, spoke only his native tongue.

At the conference at Macdonald College the language problem will be overcome by a translation system. By merely donning a pair of headphones a delegate may listen to any of the speeches delivered at the conference in French, German or English. The headphones, with which every third seat is equipped, are connected to microphones to the rear of the speaker. As he delivers his address translators with a perfect command of the three languages immediately transcribe it into another tongue. They work at an almost unbelievable speed, and only seconds after the speaker delivers a sentence in German, say, it is heard in French or English. As there are over 45 delegates from non-English speaking countries, such a system is necessary for the smooth working of the conference.

L. K. Elmhirst, of Dartington Hall, Totnes, Devon, England, is president of the conference. Dr. J. E. Lattimer of the department of farm economics at Macdonald College, is the genial and capable chairman of the Canadian committee on arrangements.

Claims Many District Farms Parked in H'don Sat. Night

Jack Patterson Observes Changes That Have Taken Place In Elgin With Passing Of Years

"She ain't what she used to be!"

Genial Jack Patterson of Huntingdon lit up his pipe, picked a nice shady spot near the County Building to sit down, and after getting in a position that was the acme of comfortable contentment he repeated, "No sir, things have certainly changed around this district to what they once were."

Jack puffed thoughtfully at his pipe and as he did so his mind seemed to wander away back over the years to the first concession of Elgin. He was mentally picturing Elgin of about 25 years ago when things were prosperous and everybody was happy. Suddenly he snapped out of his dream and spoke of it as he thought it today.

"Big changes have taken place on the first concession of Elgin in the past twenty years," he stated to the Gleaner. "Drive along out there today and notice the houses in ruin — some falling down and neglected. See the deserted farm houses. And you'll find young people leaving the farm — going to the city or somewhere."

Jack didn't seem very optimistic about the future of the first concession of Elgin. In fact, he ventured a prediction. He predicted that "twenty years from now there won't be five families living on the first concession between the Chateauguay River and Trout River." He qualified this by saying it would be true if things went on in the future as they have in the past.

Right About Face

There was a day when prosperity reigned in Elgin. If a man wanted to get the loan of one or two hundred dollars he could go out to a farmer there and secure it without any difficulty. Today, said Jack, it is a different story. In fact, he said, whereas the farmers from down Valleyfield way once came up this way to borrow money it is now a case of the farmers from certain parts of this district having to go down Valleyfield way to get the loan of money. There has been a complete switching about in the areas where farmers are to be found who have sufficient cash in their pockets that they can loan some without it hurting them too much.

Elgin, it was pointed out, was at one time representative of all that was prosperous and progressive. In fact, it was in Elgin that the first stone roads were built—which move was instrumental in starting off the building of good roads in this district. About 30 years ago these roads were built. During all these years the farmers have been paying for it in taxes. Next year, however, taxes for it will cease and the taxpayers of Elgin will heave a sigh of relief as if to say, "Well, that's over." Despite the cost, said Jack Patterson, the building of this road was a mighty

The Week at Ottawa

President Roosevelt's Impressive Speech At Opening Of Bridge At Ivey Lea—Strong Plea Made St. Lawrence Seaway.

By Spectator

Mr. Roosevelt's visit to Kingston and to the new Thousand Island bridge has been an event that stands out prominently and happily in the public eye. In itself the opening of the bridge at Ivy Lea, Ontario, spanning in an eight mile stretch the picturesque Thousand Island section of the St. Lawrence, is of great importance to the tourist trade. But it is the bridge as a symbol and what was said at the ceremonies during the president's visit that have turned the eyes and thoughts of the world on the two pleasant summertide events of last Thursday.

Words spoken by Mr. Roosevelt when he received the doctor of laws degree from the chancellor of Queens University were received with applause by thousands gathered in the Richardson stadium at Kingston and found a warm responsive echo in the hearts of all Canadians. They were also welcomed in Great Britain and in other countries which foster the interests of democracy. "The Dominion of Canada" he said, "is part of the sisterhood of the British Empire. I give to you assurance that the people of the United States will not stand idly by if domination of Canadian soil is threatened by any other empire". The president reminded his hearers that "for years saluted as North American friends have met they have light heartedly sauluted as North American friends without thought of danger from overseas." Now the situation has changed. "We in the Americas", he said, "are no longer a far away continent to which the eddies of controversies beyond the seas could bring no interest and no harm". The Americas had become a consideration of "every propaganda office and to every general staff beyond the seas". Another very strong point he made was that "we cannot prevent our people from having an opinion in regard to wanton brutality, in regard to undemocratic regimentation, in regard to misery inflicted on helpless peoples, or in regard to violations of accepted individual rights. No country where thought is free can prevent every fireside and home within its borders from considering the verdict for itself and rendering its verdict; and the sum total of these conclusions of educated men and women will in the long run become the national verdict. That is what we mean when we say that public opinion ultimately governs policy". The British and the French press were very favorably impressed with President Roosevelt's speech.

Gleaner Awarded Trophy At Dominion Convention

Printing Staff Of Gleaner Is Honored By Winning Trophy At Canadian Weekly Newspapers Convention, Vancouver

Since the last issue was published, the Gleaner has learned of an honour that has been conferred upon it. This time the management can not lay any great claim to the honour, but is delighted in being able to pass it on to its fellow employees, the printing staff. Mrs. George Legge, Granby, Que., donated a beautiful bronze trophy to the Canadian Weekly Newspapers Assn., as a memorial trophy to honour and in remembrance of her late husband, George Legge of the Granby Leader-Mail. This trophy is competed for by the newspaper publishers across Canada. The contest is for the best samples of printing done in the weekly newspaper offices during the year. This year the trophy was won by The Huntingdon Gleaner Inc.

This contest calls for samples of printing of various types. The samples were duly sent to the C.W.N.A. Convention held at Vancouver and there judged for quality of workmanship. In 1936, the Gleaner scored third position in this contest. It may interest our readers to know just what samples of printing were exhibited by the Gleaner that won the Legge Memorial Trophy for 1938. They were, 1st, a full page sale bill printed for E. Dion, Limited, Valleyfield, 2nd, the menu of St. Francis Rod and Gun Club, Port Lewis, 3rd, the Harnelbel Ayrshire cattle dispersion sale catalogue of Islington, Ont., and 4th, The Huntingdon Gleaner Inc. letterhead.

This trophy was won in 1936 and '37 by the Waterloo Chronicle, Waterloo, Ont.

In the newspaper competitions, the Penticton Herald of Penticton, B.C. was judged the best all-round weekly newspaper in Canada for 1938. The second prize went to the Barrie Examiner and the third to the Simcoe Reformer.

The Newmarket Era was awarded first position in the contest for papers with a circulation under 2,000, thereby winning the Charles Clark Cup. In the contest for papers under 1,000 circulation the Hugh Savage Shield went to the Wolfville Acadian with the Granby Leader-Mail a close second.

An Alderman Writes

THE Bowmanville Statesman, of Bowmanville, Ontario, which paper has been twice honored recently by winning front page make-up and editorial page awards, published an editorial page of real interest recently.

The Statesman invited the Mayor and members of the town council of Bowmanville to write all the editorial for the paper for one issue. This they willingly did. One of the editorials written by an alderman had to do with "Duties of Elected and Appointed Officials of a Municipality." Besides pointing out the duties of the various members of the council the editorial called for the sympathetic co-operation of the citizens themselves. This same point has been frequently raised by the Huntingdon council. The latter points out that each and every member of the council and the mayor put in a great deal of work, striving to do their very best for the interests of the town, yet they feel they get little or no thanks for their efforts. They frequently feel that if the average citizen had a greater knowledge of the difficulties they have to contend with their appreciation of the conscientious efforts of the council would be greater appreciated.

Following are extracts from the editorial of the Bowmanville Alderman on the editorial page written entirely by the council which will no doubt be found of interest here also:

"The ratepayers of any municipality have a large responsibility in the annual election of their officials.

"The council is the prime body in the government of any municipality, and each member of it should stand ready at all times to serve, either in full council, or on any committee, for the working out of the council's deliberations and instructions.

"It is obvious that among this number chosen from the citizens of the town, there is sure to be a variety of ambitions, aims, purposes, tempers, dispositions and ideas, as also religious and political convictions and practices. Yet it is always to be borne in mind, that as the full council sit in special or regular monthly meetings, they convene as one united body, to serve and work out as perfectly as they can, the various problems and affairs affecting the interests of the ratepayers and their families.

"Past experiences in the town do not show that all councils have been able to act as one man on all questions, but in the main, when right motives and ideas have governed, the decision (always by a majority) have been for the common good of all our people.

"The present council, comprised of some old members, and others serving for the first time, are working with the one subject in view, to give fair and efficient treatment to all public affairs and to reduce (as far as in them lies) the burden of taxation now upon the ratepayers.

"If many of the citizens would attend the monthly meeting of your council it would add greatly to the inspiration and encouragement they need in carrying on the work in your behalf.

"The mayor is the chief magistrate in this municipality. He holds the highest office amongst us, his duties are laborious, trying at times and constant. He is, however, authorized to call up others for help, if at any time he needs assistance, in the performance of his many obligations.

"It is he who is called on, in person, by letter or by telephone, when citizens are disturbed or aroused over any question. He must be kindly, considerate and fair with all, even if and when, criticized harshly. So we would say, consider your mayor and his feelings, as also each member of council, encourage and cheer them on in their work for a better town.

"We consider now, briefly the clerk and assessor of a municipality. Their duties are not always as pleasant as they could wish. A provincial official said quite recently he had found 'A good clerk better than a lawyer in interpreting statutes.' A qualified clerk is in much the same relation to a municipality as a town manager would be. How well our town clerk performs his duties, in keeping the financial and other records, may be learned by listening in when the minutes of a previous council meeting are being read.

"An assessor's work is very important, but often difficult and unthankful. He must properly assess each property each year, not merely copy the assessment roll of a previous year, but assess fairly and justly in every case. He needs the goodwill and co-operation of every ratepayer in doing his job. It is strongly recommended, when a good assessor is found, he be continued in office as long as it is possible to retain him.

"Our police department and officers of health also have duties to perform, of a varied nature and require and look for, the co-operation of the people of the town, in carrying them out.

"A decided responsibility rests upon a town solicitor. He is expected and called upon to correctly interpret all statutes, and reliably advise the mayor and council as to the safe and correct procedure in dealing with any problem that may come before them. He too, must be a wise counsellor.

"Our Public Utilities Commission manage all hydro matters and also our waterworks system. Its duties are clearly defined by the statutes.

"Our fire brigade and its captains have a very important part to fill in the town and surrounding community. At the first alarm, rain or shine, hot or cold, day or night, winter or summer, they rush to protect you, your family, home and property, from injury or destruction by fire. The whole townspeople owe the boys our heartiest appreciation for their watchful care and action on our behalf. We join in saying 'Bravo to our Fire Brigade.'

"In concluding this article, we would quote from a recent lecture, given to officials from municipalities from all over the province. The speaker said in part, 'Engender the very best spirit of co-operation among you, act as governing bodies, and not as individuals. Don't abuse each other, but try to understand one another, and thus bring to a higher standard of perfection all the departments of your municipality. Forget municipal glory, and work for the good of all. Never elect or appoint a person from a political standpoint but always for their worth and fitness for service to your community.'"

Have We Too Many Road Signs?

SPEAKING recently at a convention at Atlantic City, a representative of General Motors said that the "average" driver, not the drunken or defective driver, is responsible for motor accidents. In fact, he said, the average driver causes 75 per cent of them. "And most of these," he added, "are the result of doing things we already know are wrong . . . I'm surprised at how many people there are who think they are good drivers but don't know how to take curves, avoid skidding, or handle a blowout." His answer to the problem was more traffic officers and unfixable traffic courts.

Another answer, a writer in Windsor Star submits, is fewer and less standardized road signs. "One standard sign after another is no help at all. The desire to promote highway safety has provided so much help for the driver that his sense of responsibility is reduced and he's made to feel he can drive as he pleases. In fact, the ideal highway would have no warning signs whatever." So he suggests having only necessary signs and making them, by their very novelty, "cry out to the passerby."

The Star man seems to have something there. No one who travels over the highways can have failed to notice how plastered they are with signs. Signs that mark intersections, signs warning of curves, signs marking township and town boundaries, signs that say "Do not pass on hills," signs that read "Railway Crossing 300 feet." Signs to no end —and all of them just about alike. So much, in fact, has been done to help drivers that the average driver gets no help at all. He has become so accustomed to seeing sign after sign that, when he sees one, he thinks—if he thinks about it at all—"Another sign!" and goes on without another glance at it. Just another case of none of them means anything.

Standardization is good, to a certain extent; but it can be, and has been overdone. If the signs were standardized so that one shape, size or color would warn of intersections, another of dangerous curves, still another of dangerous curves, still another of railway crossings and so on, the different sizes, shapes and colors would soon impress themselves on average drivers' minds and would probably have some effect. Instead of each being just another sign.

Watch Out For Poison Ivy

IT SEEMS that poison ivy has been getting in its usual amount of irritating work in the district this year. Quite a number have come in intimate contact with it to their sorrow.

Poison ivy is an innocent-looking, rather pretty weed, with its bright green trefoil leaves. Hugging fairly close to the ground, it looks as if it would be a nice, cool carpet for bare feet; but if you tread on it with bare feet the chances are you'll wish you hadn't. For poison ivy is "bad medicine."

It will grow anywhere—especially does it seem to flourish at summer resorts—and it has been the cause of a great deal of suffering, hospital and doctors' bills and the ruination of many a vacation. Ivy poisoning is easy to catch, hard to cure and is liable to recur, sometimes for years.

How to recognize it? It is low and bushy; the leaves are smooth and firm to leathery, with coarse-toothed edges and always in groups of three. The Virginia Creeper, for which it is often mistaken, has its leaves in clusters of five.

If you contract a dose of ivy poisoning—even touching the leaves with bare flesh may be enough—you will know it in a day or two by a rash which develops into tiny white-topped pustules which are intensely itchy. But don't scratch! See a doctor and do as he tells you.

To get rid of the weed itself, the good old hoe will help some; but be careful not to touch the stuff; drag it away to some unfrequented spot and burn it. For more permanent results use a chemical spray, of which the best is a solution of sodium chlorate, one pound in a gallon of water. Care must be used, however, as sodium chlorate sets up a fire hazard. The Department of Agricultural issues a valuable pamphlet which will tell you all about it.

Poison ivy is listed as "noxious" under the Weed Control Act; so if you know where a patch of it exists notify the Weed Inspector of the municipality.

Write to Us

IT IS reported that in a certain South Sea island the natives begin the day by selling their hammocks and close it by buying them back. Presumably the pawnbroker's charge for the accommodation is small, so the practice may not be as economically unsound as it appears at first glance.

When nations or businesses follow a similar course, the dangers are more obvious. Great Britain's neglect of armament immediately following the Great War is being felt by her present taxpayers, who must at times wonder whether they will ever be able to redeem the hammock of European security.

The hammock of business, large and small, is the confidence of the public. When everyone is prosperous, the cultivation of friendly relations in business may seem of minor importance in comparison with the jobs of buying, manufacturing and selling. But when the night of depression comes, the item of goodwill, though written down to a nominal value of one dollar, is often the most valuable asset shown on the balance sheet. Companies whose goodwill valuation is truly shown at a dollar discover then that hammock selling is unsound.

Huntingdon Fair Regaining Prestige

HUNTINGDON Fair directorate are pleased to announce that the prize lists are now in the hands of prospective exhibitors. The list shows a great number of special prizes in addition to the society list of cash prizes. The list, to say the least, is most inviting and should certainly attract a large exhibit.

Renovations that are under way at the show grounds show a renewed interest being taken in the Huntingdon Fair. On Friday a second working bee is to take place, and it is hoped the turn-out of willing workers will be large and that much will be accomplished. The buildings, fences and grounds in general require much attention. Through co-operative effort the chore will not be heavy for any one to bear, and the fair property will then be restored to a point where we will be proud to point to the show grounds instead of having little regard for it.

USED TO CRACK-UPS

"Herman Schapansky's homemade airplane has cracked up again," said farm wives passing the word along party line telephones in Weatherford, Okla. "Yes, he had that cow-chasing collie of his with him." For two years the 31-year-old farmer has wished to fly his butter and eggs to market. He has crashed so often he has lost count. The only passenger who has ever accompanied him has been his dog. Folks, Schapansky said, seem to be timid. His latest crash, Schapansky confesses, frightened him a little. His monoplane, patched together from pieces of junked airplanes and automobiles, lost a wheel in taking off from the bumpy cow pasture he uses for a landing field. While Schapansky circled over his farm, near Weatherford, 800 feet in the air, wondering what to do, his wife, Bonnie, went about the routine of hitching the trailer to the family automobile. Since her husband two years ago received four flying lessons for doing chores at the Clinton airport, she has clattered across the countryside helping to extricate him from wreckage and placing scattered airplane parts on the trailer for the journey home. "I held my breath and side-slipped her down easy like," said Schapansky, who knew his gasoline could not hold out forever. "We hit the grass and went wiggling across the pasture like a crippled duck. We crow-hopped about a hundred yards and folded up against a fence." Schapansky plans to have the blacksmith patch up the plane "as good as new."

MONKEY RIDES FREE

A few weeks ago, a practical joker sent a pet baboon aboard the Queen Mary, addressed to a passenger sailing for Europe. The passenger refused the gift. Arriving at Southampton, England, port officials would not let the animal be brought ashore. Back it went to New York city where United States port officials would not let the animal be landed without papers to show its origin and a health certificate. Now Mr. Baboon is on his third voyage across the Atlantic, and members of the crew are talking about making him the ship's pet permanently.

FORTUNE IN BALANCE

Upon the decision of an Oklahoma court will depend whether a bright-eyed Osage Indian papoose named Oscar Whitewing, Jr., will come into possession of a fortune of $100,000 or $50,000 or nothing at all. The case is one of the most sensational courtroom dramas in the fiction like history of the wealthy Osage tribes whose money comes from headrights in oil lands. Oscar Whitewing, member of the tribe, died last November worth $100,000. His widow contends she is entitled to half his fortune because she is of Indian blood, and their son Oscar, Jr. should receive the other half. Brothers and sisters of Whitewing declare that the boy was a foundling at the door of the Whitewings in December, 1935, and that neither is related to him by parentage. Also that there is a question whether Mrs. Whitewing, whose maiden name was Katie Lee, is part Choctaw Indian as she claims. The widow insists she gave birth to the boy on the night of December 22, 1935, and Oscar Whitewing was his father.

DEATH DODGES

When Willard Hyatt, Burlington, Mich., reached his 80th birthday, he was sure he would never see another. His father, mother, three brothers and seven sisters, had all died during their 80th year. So sure was he his death would occur at 80 he had his tombstone cut and inscribed 19 years ago, omitting only the date of his death. But he lived through the year and has passed four birthdays since then, still feeling hale and robust.

YOUTHS LOST ON ROAD

Hitch-hiking has set a new problem for English authorities—that of the men who, by jumping lorries, travel hundreds of miles and lose their identity. That fact was revealed by R. W. Ramsay, president, at the annual conference of the National Association of Local Government Administrators. He urged that registration of youths "on the road" would be helpful.

CURED BY PLANE

The roar of an airplane has cured an Indian banker of his deafness. Six years ago, following an attack of typhoid, his hearing was impaired and doctors could do nothing to help him. At Delhi he went for half-an-hour's joyride in a plane, and on alighting found he could hear perfectly.

WAITS 20 YEARS IN VAIN

For twenty years Marwood Melhuish waited to join his wife in the graveyard at St. Mary's church, Torquay. Last week he shot himself dead in his motor car, just outside the cemetery, a few yards from his wife's grave, and the inquest verdict barred him from ever being buried in the churchyard's consecrated ground. The verdict was suicide while the balance of his mind was disturbed. Melhuish, 58 years old, was a tax collector. He was married in his home town, Torquay, before the war. When war came he went to the front and was taken prisoner. With the coming of peace he left the German prison camp to rejoin his wife in Torquay. But the months of waiting and the growing belief Melhuish was dead proved too much for his wife. She died of a broken hear two days before his return home. The shock made Melhuish an old man overnight. He had to go to Manaton for his health. There he tried to rebuild his life. He started poultry farming, became the local tax collector, and though he smiled to everyone, he could never hide the sorrow in his heart.

FROM TOWN TO FARM

(New York Sun)

In the five years from 1930 to 1935, 2,000,000 persons in the United States left cities and towns and went back to the farm. The Bureau of Agricultural Economics reports that the number of persons moving to farms last year was the largest since 1933, and the number moving from farms was the smallest for any of the past seventeen years, except 1924. Over a million persons moved from the farm to the city last year, but their departure was more than offset by births and migrations to farms.

The major factors to which the bureau ascribes these population changes are the business recession, unfavorable conditions created in areas most affected by the droughts of earlier years, and the increased use of power machinery. Two new types of farmers have made their appearance, it appears, the "suitcase farmer" and the "sidewalk farmer." The bureau reports that the appearance of the latter variety, especially in some winter wheat areas, is an outgrowth of the adoption of power machinery. It explains that the "sidewalk farmer," as distinguished from the "suitcase farmer," lives in the nearby village or town and drives to his farm or farms. "The use of power machinery frees him from the necessity of remaining on his farm except when his presence is needed in connection with the growing or harvesting of his crops." A University of Michigan junior, William Yorks, who has paid the greater part of his college expenses for the past five years by raising strawberries and peas, asserts that summer farming is about the only hope for the average college youth who can find little or no work in office, shop or factory in summer.

Of this number, 470,190 cards were issued to Smiths, most numerous of all. Second are the Johnsons, 348,530. The Browns are third with 253,750. Then the Williamses, 249,310, and Millers, 238,980. The longest name for which a number has been issued is Xenogianokopolous; the shortest, just one letter, E.

Roosevelt statnng she was sorry previous engagements would prevent her stating she was sorry previous enthe Rissinger home. ## MODERN MATILDA

Sunshine Salad

Peel, stone and halve yellow peaches. For each salad prepare one. Peel orange with a sharp knife cutting through inner skin. Slice each orange in four thick slices—providing 2 slices for each salad. Fill cavities in peach with cottage cheese—perch a maraschino cherry or blackberry on top of cheese. Overlap slice of orange in centre of bed of lettuce—placing stuffed peaches on either side. Serve with

Banana Mayonnaise

Select a large ripe banana and mash it to a pulp using a fork. Moisten it with a little fruit juice—peach, pineapple or orange will do. To it add ½ cup genuine mayonnaise and a little heavy cream—pass at table. This dressing is full flavored and delicious with pineapple or any other tart fruit salad.

Tart Fruit Cream Dressing

Beat 2 eggs together until very light then slowly add juice from 1 large lemon, 2 tablespoons sugar and 1 tablespoon butter. Cook stirring over hot water until it thickens. Cool well, then beat with rotary heater and fold in 1 cup cream whipped stiff.

Blended Fruit and Nut Salad

Pare and cut in small pieces 4 apples (red August apples will be best), add 1 cup inner celery stalks chopped finely, 1 cup imported grapes or dates or green gage plums (we prefer the tartness and color of the plum in this salad), 1 large orange cut in dice, (1 cup pineapple is optional), 1 cup sliced peaches, ½ cup pecans or almonds, 2 tablespoons sugar. Prepare these just before needed, and mix with Banana mayonnaise (see above) or

Honey Salad Dressing

Three tablespoons salad oil, 4 tablespoons honey, 1 tablespoon lemon juice, ⅛ teaspoon salt. Mix these well, then fold into 1 cup heavy cream whipped. If you omit the cream you have a nice dressing for fruit or some vegetable salads for those who are found of the consistency of French Dressing.

Fruit Salad Notes

For those of you who have an eye on your waist line and must needs deny yourself the pleasures of toast and jam, your jams and jellies can be used to grand advantage on fruit salads, use them to fill the cavities in peaches and pears. Red currant jelly makes a grand garnish around the base of a pear porcupine. Grape jelly is delicious as part of a banana salad, when the bananas are moistened with Honey Salad Dressing and rolled in chopped walnuts or pecans.

Never let combined fruits stand after they are moistened with mayonnaise or other dressings. If the fruits must be prepared beforehand, store them in covered separate dishes and combine them only when ready to serve with dressing.

Lettuce for fruit salads should be well cupped and dried thoroughly.

Pickled Onions

Peel small white onions, cover with brine, allowing one and one-half cups salt to 2 quarts boiling water, and let stand 2 days; drain and cover with more brine; let stand 2 days and again drain. Make more brine and heat to boiling point; put in onions and boil 3 minutes. Put in jars interspersing with bits of bay leaf, whole clove, slices of red pepper. Fill jars to overflowing with white vinegar scalded with sugar allowing 1 measuring cup of sugar to each gallon vinegar. If you want your onions sweet increase amount of sugar. Seal while hot.

Ethics of Etiquette

PLANNING THE SHOWER

All showers are not unwelcome that come in the springtime. So the bride-to-be will tell you whose hope chest is filled to overflowing with showers of gifts from her friends.

April, being the traditional month of showers, is the ideal month in which to shower the June bride. It is not too early to include gifts for the trousseau, nor too late to interfere with the wedding plans. Showers should always be given as soon after the announcement of an engagement as possible, so that guests will have ample time to buy or prepare gifts.

The shower is usually held at the home of a friend of the bride-to-be. Invitations may be by note, telephone, or they may be given orally. The person for whom the shower is being given should not suspect, as that would spoil the fun. She should be invited simply "to tea" and her invitation should be for an hour later than the time set for the other guests to arrive. No elaborate decoration is necessary, nor is it advisable to plan any sort of entertainment, for the chief entertainment of the afternoon is the opening by the bride-elect of one package after another, disclosing the gifts and thanking the donors.

FISH RISES TO IT

Captain Harold Thomas, of Saranac Lake, New York state, has trained a fish to rise to the surface of the lake at a given signal. He also claims the fish—a bass—allows itself to be taken from the water, weighed and returned without getting flurried.

Dahlia's Whatnots

What's in a Name?—

Did I hear some one say that she disliked my name? I am not surprised. When I asked a near and dear relative for her opinion of it, she declared with an amount of heat which, if distributed amongst half-a-dozen of those lukewarm Ephesian church-members, would have gone far towards redeeming their reputations: "I just hate it!" Sometimes I think that two of the reasons why the Creator has set the children of men in families are firstly, that we should always have somebody to tell us to our faces those wholesome truths which outsiders say only behind our backs; and, secondly, that everybody might have his own share of loving hearts to plead for him at the throne of divine grace.

You will not find me listed as an ornamental dahlia, for, as a rule, I can undertake to do little more than the light labor of dusting my shelves, although I always feel repentant after writing anything that might "raise a dust."

Drier literature may be found than the names of flower varieties given in the seed catalogues. Dramatic stars, inventors, church dignitaries, royal personages, famous generals, sport champions, may all be met in such lists. Sweet peas, charming if small, are suitably named Mary Pickford and Shirley Temple. Dahlias take on literary airs, what with Kathleen Norris and Treasure Island, have flights of fancy to the Full Moon coming back to The World, daring even to class Satan along with the Bishop of Landaff. In the montbretias Lady Hamilton and Lord Nelson help to immortalize England's naval supremacy and a hero's illicit romance.

The frequency with which my own name occurs suggests the idea that Mr. Mine (I declare to cater to his masculine vanity by any more explicit publication of his name) was a noted gardener and probably a successful exhibitor at flower shows. He appears to have been a family man, for there is a Mrs. Mine in the Oriental poppies, a Ruby Mine in the irises and a Margaret Mine in the hemerocallis list, while the family name is appended to an anthemis and others, these, I suppose, being especially tributary to the floods of honors due himself.

But little inventive genius is required to conjure up the famous gardener's family. I can imagine him clever, boastful, smart, and lazy, getting his wife, Mrs. Mine, to weed, and his spinster sister, Margaret Mine, to hoe, while little Ruby helped to tidy the walks. He could wheedle them into doing most of the work by promising to name certain flowers after them. One thing we may be pretty sure of, viz., if spinster sister did not do all the hoeing, she at least would have the hard end of the row to hoe.

Spinster at first meant what it says, a woman who spins, because every young woman at one time was busy spinning linen with a view to her marriage. Then, I dare say, if she never married, and if she was like the modern "unappropriated blessing", she kept right on through the years spinning for younger sisters and nieces. The name has lost its literal meaning, but has taken on a figurative significance rich with the labors of love, and redolent with the incense of self-sacrifice.

Under the Mosaic dispensation the firstborn sons were consecrated in an especial manner; throughout more modern generations the first-born daughters seem oftenest to have laid their lives on the Altar of self-immolation. They have stayed with aging parents, shouldering the duties of younger sisters and brothers whom they have helped in the attainment of their ambitions. Meanwhile they see receding from them the opportunities of making a happy home of their own as they serve more self-seeking friends, while a drab future clouds their horizon.

Some of like temperament have found scope for their sympathies and talents in educational, religious, or social work. Yet again these have often given up congenial pursuits to mother orphaned families and keep the home fires burning for them and their bereaved father.

Not only have they served their own families, but they have afforded comfort to neighbours, in practical ways, and in their faithfulness in guarding the heart-scalding secrets which other women in distress confided to them, knowing that it would not be proclaimed from the housetops, nor repeated to another dear friend.

Their characters have not been flawless, but they often have been strong enough to remain sweet under disappointment and ingratitude, while their sisters, married and independent, have turned into sour, disgruntled shrews.

Then give them credit for their unselfishness, you critic, who have never put forth your hand in life's banqueting-hall except to help yourself.

It is well that unselfish souls do for others without thought of reward, and that there are starry crowns awaiting them on high, for ingratitude is too often their portion here. It seems hard enough when a man leaves his widow some of the earthly goods with which he endowed her at the altar, only on condition that she never re-marries. But I know a case in which a sister was willed a legacy by the invalid brother whom she had tended for years, on condition that she never married. In the latter case, the bequest was to revert to other relatives. Believe it or not, such a gift to my mind, ranks with poisoned candy. Would any one think of treating a male relative in this way?

Facts of Interest to Movie Fans

Carole Lombard will be 30 next year. She was born in Fort Wayne, Ind., and how proud that town is of her! The townsfolk knew her as Jane Peters. But she's had her professional name, Carole Lombard, legalized at the Los Angeles Hall of Records. A lot of people are willing to believe that she'll change it some day to Mrs. Clark Gable.

She's lived in Los Angeles and Hollywood since she was 7, when her folks moved there. After she landed a five-year contract with Fox she was badly scarred in an automobile accident. A plastic surgeon made her almost as beautiful as ever. Then she went to Paramount and called herself Carol Lombard. At the suggestion of a numerologist she changed again to Carole.

Co-starred with William Powell in "Ladies' Man," married him in 1931 and divorced him in 1933.

Olin M. Hayes is still a junk dealer, but he is working in an entirely different way. Familiar with the practice of miners, who pile up scrap metal from the mines, he bought up the junk piles of several oil mines near San Jose, Cal. Then he loaded them into a concrete mixer, ground off all the rust, and panned the latter for gold. He says in four months of hard work he recovered bullion worth $5,500.

Boys And Girls in Holland Write Exams re Milking

Subject of Milking Cows is Regarded as One Of Great Importance in Holland

Dairy problems in Holland were related before the Ontario Creamery Association at Kemptville, Ont., recently by P. J. Bogaerts of Carleton Place, a Government Dairy Inspector and a native of Holland. His address in part was as follows:

Farm dwellings are somewhat different there than in Canada. Here, the barn is usually some distance from the home, but in Holland the farmers' living quarters and the stables are usually under the same roof. This means clean stables, and everything about the house and barns is kept spotlessly clean, even the roadway in front being swept every day. All places where food products are handled are rigidly inspected, and farms and dairies being visited oftener than in this country.

Holland is particularly well-known for its black and white cattle, commonly called the Friesland breed, representatives of which have spread all across the world. In England they are known as Friesians, in Canada as Holstein-Friesians.

Except for a small section called Zeeland, not greater than the smallest county in Ontario, whole milk is shipped to the dairies. In Zeeland the milk is separated on the farm and nothing but sweet cream is accepted at the creamery. As in this country, trucks are used to pick the milk up at the farms.

Most of the dairies in Holland are run on a co-operative basis. Factories are owned by the producers and several such plants form an association with head office in a central city, with which is connected a fully equipped laboratory where association members can have their products analyzed. Upkeep of the laboratory is borne jointly by the association and the government.

As in this country dairy instructors assist farmers and factories with their work. Dairy products and milk delivered by farmers is regularly inspected and any milk not coming up to standard is reported, and an inspector or instructor visits the producer. Co-operative buying of farm equipment and necessities is also a valuable feature of the co-operative system.

Milk for human consumption is hauled along the same lines as in Canada using the same type, and in many cases the same makes of equipment as used here. Milk is sold from wagons on town and city streets but there is no early morning delivery. While pasteurized milk is sold in bottle, it is permitted to sell raw milk in bulk. The milkman carries with him either a pint or a quart measure and measures the amount required into the customers' jug or dish. Horse drawn milk wagons are not as common as here, push carts or tricycles being most commonly used.

Wide Variety

Among the products sold from these vehicles are raw sweet milk in bulk; pasteurized in bottles; buttermilk and skim-milk in bulk; buttermilk porridge in bottles, oatmeal porridge made with either whole or partly skimmed milk, raw cream of various types, sour cream, yoghurt milk, butter, cheese and eggs.

Practically all butter factories handle fluid milk. Creamery equipment is slightly different to that in use in Canada. The simplex churn is used almost universally while in an odd case the old-fashioned dash churn may be seen. The quality of the butter made in Holland might be put into second grade by our Canadian graders.

Samples of butter examined showed free moisture and a weak, open texture. It had a high, rather pleasing aroma and flavor, due to the fact that starter is used. All butter except that made for export is unsalted. In most Canadian creameries the acidity in cream is reduced by the use of neutralizers, but in Holland culture is used to develop an acidity of .45 to .55 per cent at time of churning. Practically all factories have mechanical butter printers and wrappers.

Holland is also famous for its Gouda and Edam cheeses. Considerable cheese is made on the farm, much the same as farmers over here make dairy butter. Farm cheese is more popular than factory made over there.

As in this country the government is striving, through demonstrations and literature of all kinds to help the farmer produce better milk. Milking demonstrations in the rural districts are a big feature of such work.

Boys' and girls' clubs are formed which meet regularly to hear lectures on the care of milk, its composition, bacteria, care of utensils, stables, and practical demonstrations in milking. The latter subject is taken most seriously. From time to time examinations for diplomas are held when the following items are noted: regular milking, condition of hands, including fingernails, how milking is done, position of the cow, finishing, holding the milk pail, handling the udder, appearance of the milker, etc. In this way the government hopes to have all farm youngsters holding such a diploma, and that farmers will demand that all their employes have one.

Strict Regulations

In Holland there are also strict regulations covering the sale of dairy products. To qualify to sell them licenses are issued which demand that the store be at least ten yards square, the entrance lead directly from the street, have plenty of windows, be open at least five hours a day and have milk on sale all that time. Of course such stores must have suitable refrigeration for storing milk, and must not sell gasoline, coal oil or fresh raw meat.

Since the World War Holland has changed considerably, has modernized itself a great deal. Although in the rural districts wooden shoes are seen everywhere and the picturesque native costume is the rule rather than the exception, elsewhere the Netherlanders have adopted many American ideas. Visitors, however, will still find courtesy and politeness everywhere, and if they will but get out into the rural districts they can still find that beautiful scenery famed the world over in story and picture.

NOVA SCOTIAN NUT BREAD ~ ~ ~

A Recipe from Pictou, N.S., sent in by Mrs. Howard McDonald

Ever since the young folks of Pictou, N.S., can remember (and as far back as the older ones want to) Mrs. McDonald has been winning first prizes with her nut bread at the Pictou Fair. She has kindly sent in the recipe so that you may try it, and if you follow her directions and heed her advice there's every reason to believe that your nut loaf will be as good as hers.

Better When Made With Robin Hood Flour

Mrs. McDonald earnestly advises you to use Robin Hood Flour for her Nova Scotian Nut Bread. "I'm always telling my friends how wonderful this flour is," she said. "In fact, my family thinks that not only my nut bread, but everything else I bake, is so much more satisfying when I use Robin Hood Flour. I know also that a bag of Robin Hood makes more bread than I can get from the same amount of any other flour and it's so much whiter and smoother to work with."

Just treat yourself to a bag of Robin Hood Flour and make this nut loaf or perhaps some favorite recipe of your own. This is the one sure way to convince yourself that Robin Hood Flour gives you better success and finer flavor in all your baking. Always remember that the wheat used for Robin Hood Flour is scrupulously washed in water before being milled. There is no dirt or grit in this pure, clean flour.

Mrs. Howard McDonald

Observations In Quebec...

"Often I came to a little village with a dozen or so small houses and a none too prosperous district around it. Yet in the middle of this village I saw a comparatively magnificent church. I wondered how such a fine church could be built there and how the residents of the village could afford such a fine structure. Time and again I noticed this.

"Very frequently I noticed through the Province many crosses, and things depicting religion. I thought these rather odd, as if the whole thing was somewhat overdone.

"Everywhere I went I heard people complain of being overtaxed. I don't think you people know what being overtaxed means," said the Doctor.

The Gleaner pointed out that Canada was the most overgoverned country in the world, and as a consequence, overtaxed. Canada need not have nearly the governing staff it has and all the heavy taxation that goes with it.

Dr. Seelman persisted that Canadians really did not know what high taxation was and that if they lived in Germany, England or France they would have something to complain about. "I would say you have a very happy situation here, indeed, and I think you are very, very fortunate on this side of the water." Dr. Seelman, throughout his entire conversation gave the word "happy" a heavy run. Every hundred words or so seemed to contain the word "happy" in one way or another.

"In Germany," said the Doctor, "every little property seems to be well fenced off. Yet here I notice they do not bother with fences a great deal. You will see a nice, green lawn in front of a house, yet no fence around it.

"I was much surprised to see so many French flags flying here in Quebec. The people seem very proud of their native country France. I was wondering for a while if this was Canada or France.

"Your Province of Quebec here is about as large as all Europe. Naturally it seems rather strange to travel long distances, yet still be in the same Province of one country. In Germany you get a single map for every few miles of country, but here they show you one map and it is for the length and breadth of Canada."

At this point one of the party brought out cigarettes and a small box of Eddy's matches was produced. "Look at that waste," said Dr. Seelman. "What waste?" the Gleaner asked in surprise. "Look at all the waste of wood in that match. There is no need of it. There should never be so much wood in one of your matches. It is nothing but sheer waste." None of Dr. Seelman's statements were made with any spirit of hostility, whatsoever. He is just a genial, frank and likeable personality who complied with the Gleaner's request that he speak of whatever struck him as odd in this country.

A cigar was brought forth and it had cellophane wrapped around it. "More waste," proclaimed the Doctor. "We would never think of using valuable cellophane to wrap cigars with in Germany."

"Never before did I have those things with cream on them as I did at Waterloo in Quebec," said the genial Doctor.

"What things?" asked the Gleaner.

"Those . . . . oh, I forget what you call them . . . the mushy things . . . . I think you call them here toadstools or is it mushrooms . . . . yes, that's it . . . . mushrooms and cream. I never heard of having mushrooms with cream before I came to Waterloo, Quebec."

While visiting the city of Sherbrooke, Dr. Seelman saw his first baseball game. Talking of it to the Gleaner, Dr. Seelman expressed himself as being quite amused about the whole thing. He thought it made a lot of fun, especially the way the people cheered. He never knew why they were cheering, but it made a lot of fun anyway. He didn't know why the men ran and what they were running for. He couldn't understand why some big fat man with a wire mask over his face stood behind the place where a man with a big stick tried to hit a ball and waved his arms like a big teddy bear. Some time when he waved his arms the crowd of people shouted nasty things at him and at other times they cheered him loudly. But he didn't seem to mind what they called him. He just went on waving his arms every now and then. "It was a funny game," said Dr. Seelman, describing it in a way that is difficult to reproduce here. He kept those having dinner at his table in peals of laughter as he described the game in a way that seemed to make of it some activity not unlike a strange negro war dance in darkest Africa. He is still trying to figure out why the spectators did such lusty cheering. He doesn't understand it, but it made a lot of fun.

On Sunday morning it was our privilege to drive Dr. Seelman and his German associates into our rural community. They were impressed with our fine farms, but commented on the barns not being painted. They thought the farm homes were lovely, and especially so when compared to the homes on European farms. The superior grade of livestock that was seen in the fields was highly praised, especially Gilbert McMillan's Ayrshire bull. "That bull is indeed the finest we have ever seen anywhere in the world." Silos, and the great amount of sunlight in the cow stables were highly commented upon.

The mail boxes along the roadside appealed to the Germans, so they stopped at T. B. Stark's and photographed it so that they might show the picture in Germany in hopes that some such system of mail delivery might be accorded the German populace, in place of having the mail delivered to the houses, which of course takes much more time and is more or less troublesome to the peasants.

good move and there are few if any farmers who really do not think that way.

The Good Old Whey

Back in the good old days woodlots did considerable to add to the prosperity of Elgin. And as for creameries, you could find one on about every crossroad in the township, making cheese and shipping it to Montreal. From these creameries whey was brought back. And a whale of a lot of whey was brought back. This was turned over to the custody of the pigs, calves and poultry on the farms and they showed their appreciation by growing up into nice big animals to sell at a nice profit and make their owners completely satisfied about the whole thing.

"Yes sir, thirty years ago people were making money in both Huntingdon and the district," said Jack Patterson.

"But who the h--- is making money in Huntingdon today," exclaimed Jack.

The Gleaner representative confessed he wouldn't know.

"No one," was the confident declaration of Mr. Patterson. "They're all broke."

"Do you know where most of the farms in this district are to be found," continued Jack?

An obvious answer seemed to be that the farms were to be found in the countryside, but this did not seem to be the case, apparently.

"The farms in this district are mostly all to be found on Chateauguay Street, Huntingdon on Saturday night," claimed Jack. "They're all there in the form of cars."

Jack sighed for the good old days when the people were all healthy and strong. They never needed doctors then, he said.

When People Were Healthy?

Although the Gleaner agreed there were many healthy, strong men in "them there days gone by," it must be remembered it was pointed out, that actual insurance and medical records showed that many diseases more or less prevalent then are not so prevalent now and also that the average span of life is more now than it was then and it is increasing all the time due to the marked progress of the medical profession So the actual health of the people today is better now than it was in the pioneer days.

Jack more or less conceded this point but injected the following parting shot to the question. "If the people of those days had the doctors to look after them they had today they would have lived to about 200."

Jack recalled that if a person was ill back in the old days the woman of the house just gave the patient a good dose of salts and left the rest to good fortune. "If they died, they died; that's all there was to it," said Jack. A pine box painted with lamp black and oil was prepared. The neighbours turned out and helped to dig the grave. And that was that. What else could be done?

Jack Patterson has lived in Huntingdon for the past ten years. He came to Huntingdon from Valleyfield where he was located for three years. Originally Jack came from his beloved first concession of Elgin and there he farmed for a number of years. From the farm he went to Jamieson's Line where he operated a store for about 8 years before going to Valleyfield.

Always he looks back to his old farming district and thinks of what it used to be. "Today you can buy land up there for taxes," he bemoaned. "But 25 years ago it was a prosperous district," he added. "Today government officers have the jobs and the money and the residents are poor, but in the old days the people had money and were prosperous."

What was the reason of this prosperity, the Gleaner asked.

"Well, for one thing business was done back and forth across the line to the advantage of both. There was free trade and there was prosperity as a result."

Mr. Patterson recalled the establishment of the Hornerites in his native district about 18 years ago. He stated they were started by a man from Ontario by the name of Horner and were evangelistic in nature along the line of the old Methodists. Today there stands at Powerscourt the church erected by them which cost in the neighbourhood of $1,500. The congregation of this church has fallen off in numbers and the church is today more or less neglected.

The Hornerites

Mr. Patterson stated that before anyone could join this church they had to pay their back debts to everyone. Jack humorously recalled one pious couple who decided they would join the church. This couple realized that they really owed the customs officers something for goods which they had brought into Canada and had forgotten to pay the required duty on. They could never join the Hornerites with a guilty conscience of not having paid the amount of customs they owed in the past.

So they took the matter up. How much should they really pay for all the stuff they had brought in without paying duty. The husband suggested $100. "Oh, no," said the wife reproachfully and somewhat surprised to think that her husband could ever consider thinking of going righteous to the extent of $100. "Then, how about $75," the husband meekly suggested. The wife was still in favor of being a Hornerite and still thought it the right thing to do to pay for the goods they had brought into Canada without paying duty, but the sum of $75 was still too big a price to become righteous and belong to the Hornerites. Finally the wife stated about $5 would be about right and the husband was required to fall in line with the wife's suggestion. So the sum of $5 was paid to the customs as conscience money and a big load of guilt was removed from the minds of the prospective Hornerites. Of course, the sum of $5 would not begin to pay the duty they should rightfully have paid, according to Jack Patterson, but going through the act of paying $5 seemed to do the trick of relieving their conscience and making them righteous Hornerites. So the money was paid and the Hornerites had in their midst two new members.

They were the good old days," reflected Jack Patterson. A philosopher and a keen observer always of the trend of the times, Jack Patterson looked to the future—looked to the year 1958—and said, "Twenty years from now the people will look back to these days of a so-called depression and say, 'them was the good old times."

The Week at Ottawa

guards of honor, with Mounted Police lining the approaches and a huge crowd in attendance, Mr. Roosevelt on behalf of the United States and Prime Minister Mackenzie King cut the silken cord of the great bridge across the St. Lawrence, opening it for the traffic of future years. "It is a joy to me" said Mr. King "to be able to join with the President in drawing to the attention of the citizens of other lands as well as our own the wide significance of today's proceedings." "The new bridge", he said, "was another bond between two peoples who rivalled one another not in armaments but in devotion to the ways of peace". It was fitting that on the new bridge the representatives of the two countries should celebrate anew more than a century of peace between them. He cordially endorsed and reciprocated the good neighbor policy, which was so near to the heart of the President and "I might add to the hearts of all of us". The government and the people of Canada, said Mr. King, were profoundly grateful for the President's many expressions of friendship and goodwill.

St. Lawrence Seaway

The President's strong plea for the early construction of the St. Lawrence waterway to the sea, with its power development, raises a question on which there is quite obviously in Canada some difference of opinion. At the bridge opening the President said, "Between us we stand as trustees for two countries of one of the richest natural assets provided anywhere in the world". The plain people of both countries, he thought, agreed that it was ordinary "common sense to make use of it". He urged the deepening of the system to 27 or 30 feet making every great lakes port an ocean port. He warned against the dangers of private monopoly of electric power. He looked forward to the day when "a Canadian Prime Minister and an American President can meet to dedicate not a bridge across this water but the very water itself to the lasting and productive use of their respective countries." The President's plea will doubtless, it is expected, give renewed vitality in Canada to the question of the construction of the waterway. The Prime Minister of Ontario, however, has been opposed to the idea for the present at least, on account of the power situation in Ontario and its possible effect on the railway traffic. There is a consensus of opinion here at Ottawa that the United States will make a strong effort to persuade Canada to join hands in the construction of the project which can be accomplished only with the accord and cooperation of both countries, but Ontario is the province most vitally interested and its consent is essential to the fruition of the plan.

H'don Fair Working Bee On Friday

Holstein Club To Promote Judging Competition At Fair — Sports Programme Well Under Way.

Huntingdon Agricultural Society Div. A. held a meeting of the directorate on Saturday evening. Present were R. A. Arthur, President; Wm. Graham, T. L. Irving, F. Stark, A. B. Elder, D. J. O'Connor, W. Arthur, N. J. Fennell, Mac Ruddock, R. G. Kelly, Cecil Anderson, directors, and the secretary, John Smaill.

The repair committee's action in accepting the tender of J. A. Elliott for cementing floor in red building for the sum of $105, was approved.

Tenders for the serving of the Fair dinner are to be called.

Wm. Graham was asked to seek prices for an orchestra for the Fair Night dance to be held on Sept. 9.

Andrew B. Elder, president of the Holstein Breeders' Club stated that the Club wished to stage a judging contest during the Fair. This contest is to start at 1 p.m. on Thursday. Two contests will be held, one being for boys and girls aged 12 to 20 years of age, the second contest is for adults. The club is donating $10 in prizes.

The Agricultural Society is to hold a dance in the Dining Hall on Friday evening.

On motion of D. J. O'Connor, seconded by J. J. Murphy, it was decided a working bee should be held on Friday of this week, when necessary repairs will be made to fences, stalls and buildings on the Fair grounds. The bee is to start at 1 p.m. and all willing helpers are asked to come at that hour.

R. G. Kelly reported having purchased the trophy from W. S. Brown for the softball tournament to be played for by teams from Ormstown, Valleyfield, Kensington and Huntingdon.

The secretary was instructed to engage Peter Shearer, who has a power whitewash spray, to come and do work at the Fair grounds. If the work seems satisfactory after the first day's work, the work will likely be extended.

The Secretary reports that since the meeting was held on Saturday night the Federal Government special grant of $600., arranged through Mr. D. E. Black, M.P., has been received. The Society is indeed indebted to Mr. Black for this special grant.

Each member present voiced their appreciation and enjoyment of the week by meetings held during the winter months.

On behalf of the F.C. one of the group then presented Mrs. Pollock with a silver cream and sugar set as a small token of their regard and appreciation of the good times enjoyed together.

Although overcome by surprise she feelingly thanked the members for their gifts and invited all to visit her in her new home.

DUNDEE GIRLS' SOFTBALL CLUB SPONSORS SUCCESSFUL FIELD DAY AND TOURNEY

Riverfield Girls' Team Win L. A. Forsythe Trophy At Dundee Tourney Saturday

Dundee Girls Win Exhibition Contest From Montreal Maroon Girls, 15-10—Many Attend Second Annual Field Day And Tournament—Six Teams Entered—Races Are Closely Contested

Dundee's second annual field day on Saturday afternoon was a decided success. People lined both diamonds during the afternoon to watch the games between the different girls' aggregation of the district and the races.

Games started shortly after twelve o'clock and proceeded until the champion team of the day was presented with the trophy. The Riverfield Girls and the Cornwall club met in the finals for the championship of the day. The Ontario girls, who were then playing their third game of the afternoon, could not hold the powerful Riverfield sluggers from scoring in each of the five innings that were played in this contest.

The biggest surprise and upset of the afternoon was the decisive victory of the Dundee Girls over the once provincial girls champion, Montreal Maroons. The local team, with the support of all their fans, played one of the best softball games ever seen in Dundee and their victory over the metropolitan team is an indication that they played heads-up ball. The score, after nine innings of play, was 15-10 in favor of Dundee Girls.

Janet Fraser, who officiated on the mound for the winners, was well seconded in her efforts by her teammates who batted at will the three different pitchers used by the Montreal aggregation. Dundee's biggest inning was in the seventh when they slammed out six safe hits, gathered two bases on balls, reached first base thrice on errors to account for eight runs. The Maroon team scored most of their tallies at their last attempt at bat when five Montreal runners crossed the plate.

The first game of the day was played between the Ormstown and Riverfield teams when the latter walked away with the game. The score was the highest seen around this locality in recent years, 53-27. The second contest was won by Cornwall who defeated Huntingdon's entry, 22-18. The St. Regis Indians came from behind to defeat the Kensington girls by a close score.

In the semi-final game between the Cornwall Girls and the Indians the score was 30-13 in favor of Cornwall. The winners of this semi-final contest were entitled to meet the Riverfield Girls for the trophy donated by Mr. L. A. Forsythe.

Riverfield started hitting at their first time at bat in this final contest. In the third and fifth they scored a total of sixteen runs. The game was called by umpire Faille at the end of the fifth frame on account of darkness. The beautiful Forsythe trophy was presented to the Riverfield captain by Mr. McBride, of Dundee.

The result of the races which took place in between the softball games in the afternoon follows:

Potato race, boys 8-12—Harlan Platt.

100 yd. dash, girls 14-18—Marjorie Watterson.

100 yd. dash, boys 10-16—David White.

100 yd. dash, free for all—Phyllis Anderson.

Blind race—David White.

Girls and boys, 3-legged race—Norma Steele and Phyllis Anderson.

Total proceeds of the afternoon amounted to about $160.

CITIZENSHIP AT LAST

When a slice of Prussia was awarded to Poland by the Versailles treaty after the World War, it made Bernard Malkowski, born in a Prussian village in 1907, a "man without a country." Returning from a sea voyage neither Poland nor Germany would receive him as a citizen, so he resumed his sailoring. In 1933 he went ashore in Baltimore and managed to be left behind. There he took out first citizenship papers and thought he had finally found a homeland. But because part of his papers had been falsified, he was denied citizenship. So off to sea he went again and has since made 12 trips around the world on freighters. Last month, he went ashore in New York City to renew his efforts to become an American citizen. Immigration authorities have indicated that if his papers are in order this time, they will grant his long quest in citizenship.

Martin had Whitehead 25 to 8 in the 14th end but in that end Whitehead romped home with a 6 end count. The game ended 28 to 16 for Martin. (1) The blind race saw many of the contestants change the course of their directions and land at their starting point, thinking they had reached their goal. (2) The Huntingdon-Cornwall game was at its best in the fifth inning when the former team came within a few points of Cornwall who won the fixture. The older people had to keep a close eye on these kiddies who attempted to drag their apparently weaker opponents to the end of the field.

H'don Bowlers Win Over Ormstown

Bowling League Standing Shows Valleyfield To Again Hold The Trophy

The last of the bowling league games between Ormstown and Huntingdon took place in Ormstown on Thursday evening. For 1938 Valleyfield will again be able to hold the Cup, having won three games whilst Huntingdon won two and Ormstown one. The bowlers are regretting that the season is drawing to a close, for in 1938 they have had more enjoyment and pleasurable entertainment than heretofore. The jovial spirit that it exemplified at all games is indicative that the bowlers are all having a good time, and that means an increased membership as time goes on.

Had Hugh Chambers, Ormstown, not given F. J. Montle, Huntingdon, a good trimming to the tune of 19 to 5, Huntingdon would have romped home with a sizable score for a victory. As it was G. C. Stark of Huntingdon trounced S. J. Cottingham, Ormstown, 22 to 7. On the third green a gentleman's game was played, the score being 14 to 17. In the aggregate score Huntingdon won 40 to 44.

The teams and scores were:

Dundee Holds Successful Field Day and Tournament

Dundee's second annual field day and softball tourney on Saturday afternoon was a decided success both financially and otherwise. The several hundreds of fans who attended the races and girls' games that day certainly got their money's worth in both action and thrills. The biggest upset of the day, not to our locals however, but to the Montrealers, was the decisive defeat of the Montreal Maroon Girls' team by the Dundee clan. It was apparent at the beginning of this contest that the Maroons had the game "in the bag" and that Dundee would never have a chance of even getting close to them. The Montrealers were disappointed and for more than one reason. Dundee girls played very cautiously, taking no unnecessary chances while their opponents took things easily until it was too late to overcome the lead taken by the local team. Three pitchers took their turn on the mound for the visiting team and even the starry Gladys Gwinnel, reputed the best pitcher on the Island of Montreal, could not stop Dundee from securing safe hits at the most opportune time.

This will undoubtedly be a good lesson for Montreal and will make them realize that country girls softball teams are in some cases as good, if not better, than teams that reach headlines daily. Dundee worked hard for their victory and they had every reason to be proud of it.

The organizers of this field day and girls' softball tournament are worthy of congratulations as everything during the afternoon went in order and to the satisfaction of all the sport fans who were there that day.

Gleaner and Shawinigan Teams in Semi-Finals

As a result of Chateau's victory over Shawinigan on Monday evening, the Gleaner will meet the Shawinigan on Friday in the first game of a series best out of three and the winner will meet the potential Chateau aggregation for the championship of the League. The semi-final series should be very interesting as both clubs have well balanced teams. The Shawinigan, with Gavin, Hunter, Kirnan, Lepage and Tedstone in the infield and Houle on the mound, forms one of the best infields in the local loop. On the other hand the Gleaner will line-up, it is presumed, the following players in the infield: G. MacDonald, catching; Prevost, pitching; F. Lalonde, first base; "Red" White, second base; Z. D'Aoust, short-stop; L. Lalonde, third base. The Gleaner outfielders will be selected from the following: Bruce Kelly, Rene Senecal, P. Lefebvre and Pat Ross. The Shawinigan outfielders are A. Lefebvre, Gohier, Duncan, Ellis, Barr.

Both teams have good starting pitchers but they are always under high tension when they are in a tough spot. One has to be controled during the whole match while the other blows up at different intervals and especially when the team is going well. The managers will have to use strategic measures to keep their respective teams in the lead as they are both out to win the semi-final series in two straight games. The Gleaner is reputed to be a strong defensive team while the Shawinigan has sluggers who can be depended upon when safe hits are wanted.

Whatever the issue may be, the boys have been warned to put a good brand of ball and to take their losses as victories and to make sure the fans enjoy the contest without too much clowning. If a team is down a few runs, this is no reason why the pitcher should not be given the required support. Approximately 150 or more people attended the Shawinigan-Chateau game on Monday and they will come en masse for the semi-final and final series if the boys play heads-up ball. Both these teams can furnish such a brand of ball and they will be supported and not booed if they do so.

Gleaner, Shawinigan Teams Meet In Semi-Final Series Best Out Of Three Games

Both Teams In Good Condition For Opening Game Of Series Friday Evening—Kensington Girls Defeat Athelstan—H'don Win and Lose Games To Pepsi-Cola

Chateau won their last regular league game in the Town League on Friday evening when they defeated City Gas team. Emile Senecal's spectacular catches in centre field saved the Chateau from losing the game on two different occasions. The score at the end of the seventh was 14-12.

A nine run rally in the first half of the fourth inning accounted for the Chateau's victory over the Shawinigan nine in a most important game played on Monday evening at the Fair Grounds. The game decided which team would be in first position with the losing team meeting the Gleaner nine in the semi-final series. The score in this contest was 17-14 for Chateau.

Four walks and three errors in the first three innings accounted for six runs in favor of Shawinigan in this game and it looked as if the then leaders would walk away with the contest but the Chateau sluggers came back strong in the fourth frame to take the lead and never lose it again. Three homers were credited the Chateau team in this game when Chick Fortune, George Hingey and J. C. Lefebvre rounded the diamond. Kirnan of Shawinigan was the only player on that team to be credited with a four-bagger.

The Shawinigan will meet the Gleaner team on Friday evening in the first game of a series best out of three games and the winners will meet the league-leaders, the Chateau, for the championship of the Huntingdon Town League.

Saumier bagged the game for the Chateau in the seventh inning when he grasped Gavin's line-drive at short stop to retire the side. It looked as if it was going for a double until Saumier reached to one side to make the catch.

The Englishmen beat the Frenchmen over the week-end in the first game of a series best out of three. The losers will purchase the Electric Sandwich Toaster which will be drawn for on Friday. It is rumored the score was 33-16 in favor of Kelly's nine.

Huntingdon won and lost a game to Valleyfield Pepsi-Cola in regular S.W.Q. softball league fixtures over the week-end. The first contest ended 7-4 in favor of Valleyfield while the visiting team won the last contest of the afternoon, 12-8. Robb and Prevost officiated on the mound for Huntingdon, Beauchamp and Rapin were the pitchers for Pepsi-Cola.

The game between Rufus Kelly's Englishmen and Jos. Demers' Frenchmen over the week-end was played at St. Aniect in the early evening. Details of the game were not available but it is stated the game lasted four innings or maybe more, or less and the boys decided to end the contest with a swim . . . Both teams complained of the slippery nature of the soil where the game was played. None were hurt in sliding around the bases.

Huntingdon's pick-up team, managed by G. Hood was again defeated over the week-end by Kensington in a softball exhibition. This is the third straight win for Kensington against this Huntingdon team. The score was 20-16.

A distribution of horseshoes to the Montreal Maroon Girls' team prior to their exhibition at Dundee on Saturday, did not bring them the expected result. They lost 15-10 and it was a decisive victory for Dundee.

Verdun girls lost to the Maroon Girls at Ormstown Saturday night when they played their exhibition match under flood lights. The score was 13-5. The Ormstown Red Wings were unable to stop the Ormstown seniors from winning the second game of the evening when the latter won 7-5.

Ormstown is holding its sixth annual field day on Labor Day, September 5. The number of entries received to date is very encouraging and the directors expect to have more than any previous year. Many attractions will be featured at the Ormstown Fair Grounds on Labor Day and the many thousands who will throng the spacious grounds will certainly have their money's worth of fun.

"The Ticker Tape Murder"

— By —

Milton M. Propper

I see," he replied, as though accepting his defeat, and you had no further association with Mr. Nixon?"

Nothing at all, upon my word of honor." Russell Stirling glanced at his wrist watch and rose with a gesture of dismissal. "I would be glad to help you, but I know nothing further, and it is getting quite late. If there is nothing more, I would ask you to excuse me, and"

"Yes; there is just one thing more. Would you say that you were sufficiently familiar with Nixon that he would borrow, or take from you, an article of clothing—say an overcoat?"

There was no denying the apprehension suddenly mirrored in the other's eyes. They wavered and lowered to sweep the ground in confusion. Stirling dropped back into his chair, as though for support; and, when he spoke, his voice quivered uncontrollably.

"Borrow an overcoat from me?" His effort to seem bewildered was not quite successful. "What a peculiar question, Mr. Rankin! What in the world do you mean?"

Rankin unwrapped the overcoat he still carried, but now wrapped so as not to be seen till he was ready to spring his trap. He regretted the pause that gave the broker the opportunity partially to regain his balance.

"This overcoat, Mr. Stirling, is what I refer to. You lost this, did you not? It was in your possession two days ago."

"I... I... no, I lost no overcoat..." He was striving desperately to control himself. "Wherever did you get such an impression?"

"Whether you lost it or not, it belongs to you." Rankin stated bluntly. "And we found it on Philip Nixon's dead body."

Checkmate

"Is that so? No, it doesn't belong to me, as far as I'm aware. May I see it?" Thank you." For a full moment he inspected it, his manner was tantalizingly suave. "My name is not in it, and as I always put it in for the sake of identification"

"You deny, then, that you own this coat? There is evidence to link you with it, beyond a doubt."

"I can only say that your source of evidence is in great error. Wait, I think we can settle this matter to your satisfaction, easily enough."

Stirling rose, and pulled a thin dangling cord near the draperies, summoning the butler, Higgins.

"Elbert, will you please look carefully at this garment and tell the gentleman whether or not it is mine?"

Higgins complied. "No, sir," he said finally, in positive but mechanical tones. "That is not your coat."

"You know my wardrobe, Higgins. Have you ever seen it before?

"No, sir, I have not; it is absolutely strange to me."

"That will be all," Stirling said, and when the butler had retired, "You see, Mr. Rankin, there is some mistake; I regret that I cannot satisfy you by claiming ownership. And now, you really must let me complete my dressing, or I shall have a time explaining my tardiness"

And Rankin had, perforce, to permit himself to be ushered out. It was checkmate—a cleverly executed bit of fencing in which the stock-broker was the victor of the first tilt. But at the same time, the detective knew that, for all his cleverness, the man had been falsifying. He had lied as to his relationship with Philip Nixon; his refusal to admit proprietorship of the coat was a lie. And the entire scene in which the butler had backed up his master's denial was too obviously planted to be natural. More than that, actually, Stirling had been maintaining a colossal bluff; he knew a good deal more about the case than he was willing to admit.

The detective was not discouraged by his defeat. It was just a temporary setback; when he returned the next time to confront Russell Stirling, he would have evidence and proof that the broker could not escape. And Gilmore, when the two met at headquarters later in the evening, was only too willing to give him charge of that phase of the case, at least until he had produced something more substantial than mere suspicion. His own hands were sufficiently full.

CHAPTER 13

The Chauffeur's Story

At noon of the following day, as Gilmore sat engrossed in deep thought in Captain Thomas' office, Detective Smith entered with a message to interrupt his reverie.

The inquest in Camden was just over and Gilmore was in no pleasant frame of mind. It had been a perfunctory affair, and had been adjourned for two weeks to give the police time to acquire further information. Dr. Curtiss had been called to relate the events leading up to the discovery of the body—his journey to Cape May on the 9:45 train, his joining Gilmore and how they were seated together when the train had abruptly halted. Then he told of his having volunteered his services at the conductor's request, and described the scene of the crime as fully as he could. His testimony ended there; the medical details and the causes of death were narrated next by Dr. Ralston in a manner comprehensible to the Coroner's jury. Then Bennett was called to identify the body, and further investigation was postponed for a fortnight.

As if Gilmore needed more time to pile up further evidence! It was with some bitterness that he reflected that what he had already collected, so seemingly uncountable in amount, so inextricably tangled in detail, was a useless mass, a jumble of puzzle pieces that did not fit anywhere. The Ferris gang threatening Philip Nixon's life, the financier's Journey by machine to Rockton, the bullet holes and Arthur Stahl's cap in the machine, and the overnight bag in Ike Morin's possession; Philip Nixon in a black car with two strangers, reaching the Marley farmhouse, the Marleys with their sinister threats against him, taking his money and afterward concealing these things; Gardiner's behavior, the alibi he had prepared, his concealed past, his journey to Cape May, and his quarrel with the financier; finally, the latter's body in Stirling's overcoat, while the gray one was at the Marleys'. Here was merely a series of endless complications, no single one of which dovetailed with any other. When, Gilmore asked himself, would this thread of trails begin to wind itself in an orderly fashion?

Parker Talks

And then Smith brought him the message.

"I've been working on Stahl and Morin for some time," he informed Gilmore, "but nary a word out of them. But Parker says he's willing to talk, if that'll help him out any, though only to you. He won't breathe a word to any one else."

The other could hardly refrain from shouting. Perhaps matters would now take a turn for the better and clear themselves up.

"He'll talk, you say? Great heavens, Smith, send him in quick before he changes his mind . . . It's a wonder that anybody will open his mouth in this damnable affair!"

In a few moments the chauffeur was ushered in, even less dapper than when Gilmore had last interviewed him; two days and nights in prison had not served to improve him. Besides being badly in need of a shave, when he spoke, his voice was hoarse and dry.

At Gilmore's order his handcuffs were removed and then Smith retired.

"You have something to tell me, Parker?" the detective asked, when he had motioned the chauffeur into a chair. "Smith says you have some sort of a proposition to make with me."

"Yes, I have; I've been thinking it over in jail," Parker replied, "and I decided I'm not going to play a martyr for anybody. I know some things, but I don't know anything about Nixon's death. There's no reason why I shouldn't save my own neck; so I'll talk on one condition . . ."

"And what is that?"

"You play me fair, when my case comes up. You've got me on some charges, but I'm going to prove to you that I'm no murderer. Understand, I won't turn State's evidence against Morin and Stahl—I'm not a squealer. But I've got to get out of this jam myself, first, and I'll make a statement if you promise to do your best for me."

Gilmore was only too willing to agree to such a natural request, if it gave him any aid. Without the statement, he might never get any further with the case; and he was certain that Parker's desire to talk was sincere.

"The proposition seems reasonable enough," he replied. "You have my promise to see what I can do for you . . ."

"I guess your word suits me," Parker returned huskily, "because I know you're straight. Understand, this spiel isn't for the purpose of getting into a worse jam; I'm letting myself out."

"You can't object, then, to another witness, so that both of us should be on the safe side. You won't be able to deny anything you have said and I won't be able to claim you said anything you didn't."

At the chauffeur's nodded acquiescence to this proposal, Gilmore opened the office door with the intention of recalling Smith. Outside he discovered Dr. Curtiss standing in the entrance, about to knock.

"Are you busy, Sergeant?" the physician asked. "Captain Thomas told me I could find you here, and I thought I might have a few words with you before leaving. I've just come from the inquest."

Judicial Murder

"Come in, doctor. As a matter of fact, I am busy, but . . . you'll do, as well as any one else. You know a good deal of this affair already; there's no reason why you shouldn't listen in on this."

Briefly Gilmore explained the situation, and when the doctor had expressed his willingness to act as a witness, led him into the room. And when both were seated, he said:

"All right, Parker, go ahead. You mustn't expect me to believe everything you say, without trying to check up on it. But I'll hear it all before I draw any conclusions, you can depend on that."

Without further ado, the chauffeur plunged into his narrative. The first part of it concerned matters regarding which Gilmore had already drawn certain conclusions; but it was valuable that these should finally receive definite verification. Parker admitted that he was a member of the Ferris gang, and had been for some time; but he was shrewdly careful not to admit an active part in the Nixon robbery. Aware that the police had thus far been unable to connect him with it as the fourth member, he spoke, as he had just informed the detective, only to free himself from his present difficulties.

The whole trouble began, of course, with Lew Ferris' capture and sentence. They had all been well satisfied with their leader; he had treated them fairly, and always divided equally with them the profits of their various ventures. His capture had been a terrific blow, but it could have been borne had his punishment been reasonable; the rest of the gang could have shifted along till he had served his term. But due to the financier's power, and the money he spent to make an example of the wrong-doer, the twelve-to-fifteen-year sentence had been meted out.

And the sentence was Ferris' death warrant; for years, he had been consumptive, so that it was practically certain that if he was forced to serve his term, he would never leave prison alive.

"And that's murder, too," Parker cried angrily, forgetting himself for a moment. "It's judicial murder, Gilmore. A hell of a penalty to pay for a robbery! We couldn't sit by and let the law kill him when he didn't have a thing to do with shooting that woman."

Accordingly, with Morin and Stahl, he had schemed to compel the financier to free the prisoner. When the opportunity offered he was selected for the position of the financier's chauffeur. Though Stahl was the better mechanic, both he and Morin had been identified by the police, whereas Parker was unknown to all parties concerned. Through a forged recommendation for which Morin was responsible, he got the job. His work was to arrange things from the inside and report the progress of matters to his colleagues. They were going to try threats first, then turn to more stringent methods; ending perhaps, if forced to it by Nixon's stubbornness, by abducting him or the daughter he loved so fondly. But, Parker took his oath, murder was the last thing they desired, for it would destroy every expectation of ever saving their leader.

Except for the fact that Nixon had disregarded their first two messages, everything had gone smoothly enough until the day before the murder. And then a very serious obstacle was encountered. The financier had been driven home unexpectedly from work in the early evening by a friend, after he had announced he might not be home till late. And, going to his room, he had discovered Parker there. The chauffeur was merely looking about—his ultimate object was too important for him to succumb to the petty temptation of stealing. The position in which he was found, however, was as compromising as though he were guilty of burglary, with the result that, after the hectic argument in the conservatory, he had been summarily dismissed. But then Nixon informed him that he was to stay over till the next day because, as Gilmore now knew, he needed the chauffeur for the purposes of his journey to Rockton on that day.

Our dairy rations are well balanced, made with the best ingredients, as per approved formulas. While increasing milk production these mashes also contribute greatly to the health of cows, containing a correct proportion of minerals as well as laxative and invigorating nutriments. Considering the low prices of our "CHAMPLAIN" dairy rations and results obtained, they certainly represent the best values compared to cost, and consequently are the most advantageous to feed.

On 2,500 Mile Trip.—

Mr. and Mrs. James Barrett have returned after a two weeks' holiday trip to Gaspe and the Maritime Provinces in which they covered about 2,500 miles. They were accompanied by Dr. M. T. Barrett of Philadelphia, brother of Mr. James Barrett, and Mrs. Barrett. They were impressed by the beauty of the Gaspe district. What was quite unfavourable in the Gaspe, however, was the condition of the roads. In time they will be fixed but at the present time they are not at all inviting to tourist traffic. The party noticed on the north shore road at Gaspe a one horse wagon repairing the road, one which seemed quite inadequate and out-of-date to repair roads. In the Maritimes much work was in progress on the roads. While in conversation with a resident of Nova Scotia Mr. Barrett was surprised to learn that the resident knew someone up in Huntingdon County. Rev. Dr. Maclean. The Nova Scotian informed Mr. Barrett that at the time Rev. Mr. Maclean was only a few miles away, at his home in Hopewell, Nova Scotia. In another part of Nova Scotia the party met a minister whose home was at Westchester, Penn., only a short distance from Dr. Barrett's home, Philadelphia. By this time they were beginning to think that the world was sort of a small place after all.

Special ceremonies will be carried out at St. Joseph's Church on Sunday next when the brothers of the St. Viateur Congregation will be officially welcomed to Huntingdon. As was stated a few months ago, brothers will form the teaching staff at St. Joseph School in the forthcoming school term.

The Late Mrs. John Beattie

This community has been thrown into sorrow again with the news of the death of Mrs. John Beattie, who passed away on Saturday night, August 13th at 9 o'clock. Mrs. Beattie had been a sufferer for some time from that dreaded disease, cancer.

Mrs. Beattie was 70 years of age, was born at Covey Hill, being one of the children of the late Mr. and Mrs. John Perry. She was married to the late John Beattie in 1898 and they spent their entire married life here with the exception of a couple of years spent in Montreal. Her husband pre-deceased her three years ago.

Always in a cheerful mood, she was a devout and fervent Christian and an example to all. She was a kind neighbour, also a kind parent. During her illness her faith in her Heavenly Father was very strong; also she was greatly interested in all her neighbours and friends.

She leaves to mourn her loss one daughter, Ella, and one son James, who cared for their mother most tenderly during her illness, two sisters, Mrs. Wm. Horne, Mrs. Scott Simpson also two brothers, William and Edward.

The funeral service was conducted on Tuesday afternoon in Knox church by the Rev. V. Rose, assisted by the Rev. R. MacLean. Mr. Rose spoke very highly of the Christian principles of the deceased.

The choir sang: The Lord's my Shepherd, Travelling towards life's Sunset Gate, and Abide with me.

Interment was in the family plot, the casket being covered with lovely flowers. The pall-bearers were neighbours chosen by the deceased: Walter Sample, Robt. Blair, Emmett Clelland, Frank Perras, Fred Sweet and Wm. Churchill.

The funeral was one of the largest ever held here, some coming from Ottawa, Montreal, Lachine, Ormstown, Franklin, Burlington, Vt., Winchenden, Mass., Plattsburg, Mooers and other places to pay their respects to the departed.

The following are the tributes: Pillow, the children; wreaths, brothers and sisters; W. H. Stewart and Miss A. Wiggins, W. B. # STUDENTS PREPARE FOR RE-OPENING OF SCHOOL

Schools Are Just About Ready For Their Re-opening

Many Schools Have Been Repaired and Repainted In Preparation For The Forthcoming Scholastic Term—Huntingdon, Dundee To Re-Open On Tuesday, September 6th

Most of the schools in the Chateauguay Valley will re-open for the scholastic year, 1938-39, either on Thursday, September 1st or on Tuesday, September 6th, following Labor Day.

In preparation for this event most pupils are making arrangements so that they may arrive at school the very first day and not one week later. The attendances in each of the country and town schools are expected to be as high as in past years and in some cases, it is stated, more pupils than at any other time will arrive to school on opening day. Outside students have nearly all made their entries and it looks as if they will be present in as great a number as previously.

School buildings have been altered in some cases with most schools reporting having practically completed their inside renovations. Painting, dividing school-rooms, additions to the actual physical training equipment, etc., are also to be noted in many instances.

The lists of the teaching staffs of each of the schools in Huntingdon were not available for this issue, save those who will be officiating at Huntingdon Academy. They are: J. B. Macmillan, Principal; L. C. McOuat, assistant-Principal; Miss McLellan, French Specialist; W. J. Miller, Misses Elsie Salter, M. O. Pringle, Eleanor Moody, Ruth Dennison, Mabel McMillan, Mabel H. Ellicott, Ruby Tate and Marjorie Salter.

St. Joseph School and Huntingdon Convent announce a change in their personnel but again this was not definite for the present issue. Next week, however, the Gleaner will endeavour to give its readers a complete report on the local school situation and the personnel of each of the Town of Huntingdon schools.

Ormstown High School is adding a new course to the studies for the forthcoming school term when the pupils will be taught the art of sewing and mechanics. This will be of great value to the students attending this school as these two courses are valuable at any time in life.

Huntingdon Academy will open its doors to pupils on Tuesday, Sept. 6th, and the same day the pupils will undergo a medical examination. The Principal of the School, Mr. J. B. Macmillan will receive in the school buildings on Monday, one day previous to the school opening, parents and pupils who would like to interview him.

The pupils who intend to attend Ormstown High School this year are advised that its opening date is on Thursday, Sept. 1st, when the Principal of the School, Mr. David C. Munroe, will welcome the students.

Dundee High School starts its activities for the 1938-39 scholastic term on Tuesday, Sept. 6th. A larger attendance than in previous years is expected at this popular institution.

Pupils are requested to attend school the very first day and not wait until September has passed before registering. In such cases, if a failure is registered at the end of the year, parents in many cases will blame the situation on the teachers and not on the students who had to catch up on the others after the scholastic year had begun for a period of weeks.

Education Statistics For Quebec

Bureau of Statistics Issues Interesting Figures

Governments grants for educational purposes reached $5,408,649.48 in 1935-36, compared to $5,235,004.63 in 1934-35. The total revenue from all sources (municipalities, independent institutions and the Government), which in 1934-35 had been $33,257,466.06 amounted to $34,019,479.23 in 1935-36.

These facts are demonstrated by the report on "Educational Statistics for 1936-37" just issued by the Quebec Bureau of Statistics. This report contains valuable information pertaining to education in our Province. For instance, we find that the number of schools of all kinds numbered 9,112 in 1935-36, an increase of 114 over the previous year.

The institutions are divided as follows: 8,374 Catholic, 690 Protestant and 48 schools providing a business course. The number of Catholic schools was increased by 120 whereas the number of Protestant schools showed a slight decrease.

In 1935-36, the enrolments amounted to 700,259, an increase of 8,615 pupils over 1934-35. The average attendance was 83.80% of the registrations, compared to 84.17% in 1934-35.

The teaching staff, which numbered 27,610 in 1934-35, increased to 27,999 in 1935-36. It comprised 2,683 lay teachers in the Protestant primary schools and 10,670 lay teachers in the Catholic primary schools, as well as 2,099 lay professors and teachers attached to the universities, colleges, normal and special schools and 12,547 professors and teachers, members of the clergy and religious orders.

The scale of salaries of the teaching staff in primary schools has been reduced every year since 1930. The average salary of male lay teachers in Catholic primary schools which was $1,459 in 1934-35 was $1,441 in 1935-36; that of female teachers was $316 in 1935-36. In Protestant primary schools the average salary of male teachers was reduced from $2,034 to $1,971; for female teachers the amount was reduced from $980 to $972. In country Catholic primary schools, male teachers are paid $562, while female teachers, in the same schools, receive $210 per annum.

In rural primary schools, where the teaching is entrusted to religious, the salary for male teachers is $484 and for nuns $269.

In Protestant primary schools in the country, male teachers are paid an average salary of $787 and female teachers $483. In urban centres, Catholic primary teachers are paid the following average salaries: male lay teachers, $1,551; male religious, $581; female lay teachers, $691; nuns, $417.

In urban Protestant primary schools salaries average as follows: male teachers, $2,267; female teachers, $1,172.

All those who are interested in the question of education in this Province will also find a number of other useful items of information in "Educational Statistics".

Mr. Albert Plouffe, Head of the Bureau of Statistics, has just submitted the Report to the Honourable Joseph Bilodeau, Minister of Municipal Affairs, Trade and Commerce.

BARLEY WORLD AREA

The world area under barley, which has fluctuated irregularly since 1930, appears to have increased in 1937, states the Imperial Economic Council, as compared with 1936, but precise comparisons with earlier years cannot be made in the absence of recent figures for the Soviet Union. The British Empire area, which comprises about one-seventh of the world total, declined until 1933-34. Recent years have shown a slow expansion, due partly to the recovery in Canada. The chief markets for imports of barley are found among the European countries, though large quantities are exported from Canada to the United States, which in 1936 took 70 per cent of the Canadian shipments.

Schoolboy Howlers

Unintentional humour on the part of school pupils writing examinations is really good at times. Glance over a few of the following answers turned in by junior pupils.

Visions of a tottering general who would make Methuselah seem a mere youth, going successfully into battle, are conjured up by this statement: "Sir Isaac Brock, born in 1608, defeated the Americans near Detroit in 1812."

An unrevealed phase of the life of a great Canadian statesman was brought to light in this howler: "It was brought up in the House that John A. Macdonald receives brides for building the C.P.R." John A. figured in another error—or was it an error?—"John A. Macdonald had much to say in collision government."

Pity the poor Scotch: "Lord Selkirk made a Scotch settlement at the bottom of Lake Winnipeg."

The student who wrote the following will probably become an author if imagination counts for anything: "D'Arcy McGee was shot by a red-haired, Irish, Fenian butcher." Another student said of the Irish-Canadian parliamentarian: "D'Arcy McGee was one of the best fathers in Confederation times."

It is rather difficult to determine what this student was thinking of: "Lord Selkirk took care of the stray people who so often got lost in the great gold rush."

Not a howler, but an instance of how even common words may be mis-spelled is the student who wrote hoarces for horses.

"The climate of South Africa is the kind you earn your living by mining" — "In Spain it is nearly all desert so they use camels for travelling use. Alexander is the capital" — "The surface of South Africa is simply a red hot dessert."

Still other boners include:

Maisoneuve founded Ville Marie in 1492.

The people of South Africa are all mixed up.

It is said in some parts that the people live like cannibals in South Africa; this we do not know.

The climate of Newfoundland is affected by the Labour Air.

The climate of Africa is very cold in winter, and the snow makes good roads for lumbermen.

France exports iron horses.

Names of air movements are ocean currents.

The Gulf Stream flows through Newfoundland.

The Pacific Ocean moderates Ireland.

Between the Equator is an equal amount of space.

An example of what a mistake in spelling can do is contained in this one: "The people are mostly bores in South Africa."

Another mistake is this one: "The gnats are mountains in India."

This pupil took no chances as witness the answer: "The climate of South Africa is extreme, it being very dry in some places and very wet in others."

On June 21 at the Tropic of Cancer the days and nights are equal, each 24 hours long.

The air moves towards the Equator because it needs it, it is so hot there.

South Africa has a suitable climate.

Winds blow to the Equator because there is more space there.

Air moves toward the Equator because the cold air wishes to meet the hot air.

The Labrador current creeps down the coast.

Belfast is in Northern Ireland on the northeast bump.

The sun and moon meet and move to the Equator.

The Union of South Africa has few rivers suitable for agriculture.

U.S. SILVER CACHE

A United States gold treasure house was recently completed at Fort Knox, Ky., and now has almost $13,000,000,000 worth of the yellow metal cached in it. A similar impenetrable fortress for the nation's supply of silver is now nearing completion on the U.S. army reservation at West Point, N.Y. As soon as completed, the surplus of silver now in government mints at San Francisco, Denver and Philadelphia, with an estimated value of $2,850,000,000, will be stored in this stronghold.

Answers To BRAIN TEASERS

Answers to Test Questions

1. Capital G in French is G grand. Lower case a or small a in French is a petit. Consequently, Ga is read G grand a petit, or J'ai grand appetit.

2. History has conferred the title of "Great" upon: Alexander; Constantine; Alfred; Peter; Frederick; and perhaps others. Charles the Great is always referred to as Charlemagne.

3. Lightning is practically instantaneous. The individual spokes of a rapidly moving buggy can be clearly seen by a flash of lightning on a dark night during a thunder storm. The flash reveals the spokes in one position. The blur caused by the rapidly revolving wheel during the day time is in the retina which retains any image for an appreciable time.

4. A pint is to a gallon as a gallon is to a bushel; 100 pints equals 12½ gallons and 100 gallons equals 12½ bushels.

5. A house all four of whose sides were to face south would have to be constructed on the North Pole.

Covey Hill

Before leaving here to return to St. Lambert, Miss Christie learned of the critical condition of her cousin, Mr. Alan Cameron. He is one of the most brilliant members of a talented family. A sculptor, his model was accepted from a large number of competitors for the statuary on a fountain for horses and dogs installed in Orillia, Ont. This work was presented to the town by a citizen as a memorial to his mother and carries out the idea of motherhood; the piece represents a mother with her boy and girl, all helping to pour out the water. The lifelike carving of the hair and features is strikingly beautiful.

The sculptor's father, Mr. Tom Cameron has made a success on the dramatic stage, and taken a prominent part in the St. Lambert Dramatic Club. The latter's sister, Miss Christina Cameron, and their niece, Miss Katie Christie, both have cultivated and pleasing alto voices. Miss Cameron and Miss Jessie Christie have been devoted in their lifework of nursing, the aunt having served in the Great War. All three ladies are amongst our summer visitors to the Hill, and Miss K. Christie's talent as accompanist has been appreciated on more than one occasion.

The Presbyterian W.M.S. will be entertained at the home of Mrs. W. E. Sutton on Wednesday afternoon, August 31.

On Tuesday evening, Mrs. E. E. Perry was summoned to Methuen, Mass., on account of her mother's fatal illness and arrived shortly before the end came Wednesday morning. The funeral was held on Friday afternoon. Those who had the privilege of knowing Mrs. Blanchard were impressed by the way in which her strength and sweetness of character combined to make her a pleasant social companion and a source of support and comfort in a time of trouble. To her latest years she radiated energy and cheer. She was a habitual reader of good literature and kept in touch with current events. Her more than average store of knowledge of the domestic and healing uses of herbs and plants she gathered during her life in a rural area of Maine, where she spent her youth and earlier married years. There Mr. Blanchard ran a milling business, and there they were bereaved of their only son. The family later settled in Methuen, Mass., where Mr. Blanchard died a number of years since. The deceased is survived by her daughters, Mrs. Frank Gordon, whose home she shared, and Mrs. Perry, with whom she spent her summers, until prevented by infirmity from making the trip to the Hill. Mr. and Mrs. Perry had an opportunity last autumn of visiting Mrs. Blanchard and Mr. and Mrs. Gordon. The departed mother was 85 years of age.

Mr. Duncan MacLaren of East Orange, N.J., has been a visitor with Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Barr and Mrs. Susanna MacDiarmid. His mother was formerly Miss MacDiarmid of this place.

Prize List Ready For H'don Fair

Long List of Attractive Prizes Offered At H'don's 105th Annual Fair

Huntingdon's one hundred and fifth annual Fair will take place this year on Thursday and Friday, September 8th and 9th, when 250 special prizes will be distributed to the many entrants in the various classes.

As usual, Huntingdon will have attractions that will make a success of the day's proceedings. The number of entries received to date by the secretary-treasurer is most encouraging and it is hoped they will surpass other years.

The directors of the Fair are kept busy these days completing the repairs on the premises so that both exhibitors and visitors may have an ideal and enjoyable time during these two days.

The rules and regulations of the exhibitors at the Huntingdon Fair are similar to last year's. The prize list was issued last week and any person wishing to receive one can do so by writing or calling the secretary-treasurer, Mr. John A. Smaill.

An interesting feature at the Fair this year will be the exhibition of amateur photography by local talent. The prizes allotted for this section are most appealing and should bring snapshots from all points within the Chateauguay Valley. This section is a novelty for Huntingdon and all persons having ordinary or outstanding photographs taken within the past twelve months in the district, should make it their duty to enter the amateur photography class.

That Huntingdon is situated near beautiful Lake St. Francis has prompted the directors of the Huntingdon Fair to ask exhibitors to show Model Sailing Yachts. The prizes for this class are money prizes with a miniature model of the "Endeavour" as first prize.

Huntingdon Fair is never complete without a sports programme. On both days, the large crowds that will flock to the exhibition grounds will have the opportunity of witnessing class A softball games. On the first and second day teams from Ormstown, Huntingdon, Kensington and Valleyfield will fight it out for a beautiful cup which is donated by the Huntingdon Agricultural Society. The last Fair day game will feature the well-balanced Dundee Girls' Softball Club against the Ormstown-Riverfield Girls, winners of the Dundee Tournament on Saturday. Softball equipment will be given the winners.

With such an elaborate program, the success of Huntingdon's 1938 Fair is practically assured and with favorable weather friends will again make it a point to renew old acquaintances at the Fair.
