H'DON CHATEAU HELD EASTER FESTIVAL

Sufficient Food Prepared For The Serving of 1000 Meals Over Week-end.

STAFF NUMBERED 37.

Entertainers Provided Programme That Pleased Large Number in Attendance.

It was something new for Huntingdon to have an Easter celebration at a local hotel. The new Huntingdon Chateau made the innovation over the week-end and it was largely attended. Few people here realize the work that was entailed in preparing for such an event. In talking to the head chef, Mr. David Connor, he gave the Gleaner some information which we believe will be of general interest.

The kitchen was manned by Mr. Connor and an assistant chef, a butcher, pastry cook and another man who was, practically speaking, continually preparing vegetables. The butcher dressed seven large turkeys, 15 fowls, 36 broilers, six loins of beef, one spring lamb, six hams, four sides of bacon, one pork and 18 fillets. This array of viands when displayed in the cold storage was quite a remarkable sight for a country hotel larder. Besides the meats, were two cases of celery, two cases of lettuce, six gallons of ice cream, ten gallons of milk, two and a half gallons of cream and other foods in corresponding quantities. The vegetables were prepared by machine as much as possible, and in this respect four bags of potatoes were used.

The chef stated that the food prepared was sufficient to serve 1000 meals, and on Tuesday morning there was no excessive quantity of any one foodstuff on hand.

Besides the five men in the kitchen, who were preparing the food were eight women who washed the dishes as they were brought from the dining rooms by the twelve waiters. Over the week-end the hotel staff numbered thirty-seven.

Monday Evening Entertainers.
On Monday evening, Mrs. Lucile Angers-Delarge who is a famed soloist of Montreal, and who according to records, charmed a Huntingdon audience when she sang in Mir-Henderson's "The Passing of Your Window" followed by much applause. Lebrun and Thorpe in their Italian, Spanish and 18th Century dancing pleased the audience beyond a doubt. Mr. P. J. Lefebvre, who is no stranger to any Huntingdon audience, rendered "Greetings" as a solo which was heartily applauded. Miss Shaughnessy of Tupper Lake, who has often been heard over the radio was present and rendered a couple of selections that were also loudly and approvingly received. The dancing orchestra which played under the name of The Huntingdon Chateau Orchestra was directed by Mr. Armand Meerte. The orchestra was present on Sunday, as well as on Monday evening, and rendered an excellent service. The dancers appreciated the entertainment provided, which speaks but gratification for Dr. J. O. Langevin who arranged such.

The management of a hotel on such an occasion is no mean task and in this respect credit is certainly due to Dr. J. O. Langevin and Fred Langevin for its able direction.

TWO BOYS KILLED AT ST. CONSTANT

Were Driving Motor Truck Over Crossing When Struck by Train Thursday Morning.

Two boys were killed when the motor truck in which they were riding was struck by a C.P.R. train at the railway crossing at St. Constant, Que., Thursday morning. The victims are Roy Cusson, 15 years of age, of Delson, Que., who was killed instantly, and Richard Longtin, 11 years of age, of the same place, who was seriously injured and removed to the St. Constant hospital, where he died at three o'clock Thursday afternoon. Death was due in both cases to a fracture of the skull and internal injuries.

According to information received, the two boys were riding away from the Canadian Pacific Railway station at St. Constant, Que. at 10:30 o'clock Thursday morning, with a load of articles which they were to deliver. After they had left the station they headed their motor truck towards Delson, Que., where they lived, and, apparently unaware of an approaching train, they drove over the railway tracks at the crossing.

The engineer of the Montreal to Albany train seeing the vehicle in his path, sounded the bell several times and applied his brakes, but he was unable to halt his locomotive in time. Before the two lads and their motor truck could get out of the way their vehicle was struck and hurled 75 feet away from the railway crossing, being completely demolished while both occupants were buried in the debris.

A search of the bodies was at once commenced by the trail officials who found Cusson's body in the ruins beneath the engine of the wrecked truck. He was dead. His companion's body was found a few yards away and he was unconscious. A doctor was summoned who after giving first aid to the injured boy, ordered his removal to the local hospital, where death ensued a few hours later.

HUNTINGDON
Easter Sunday services held in the United Church were very largely attended. The pastor, Rev. J. H. Miller announced at these services that on Monday morning the church of the church would be celebrated and that the Rev. R. G. Peever, D.D. of Thorold, Ont., a former pastor of this charge, would be the special speaker. Dr. Peever was transferred from this charge in 1912, after four years at St. John's. His many friends of years ago will be delighted to hear of his anticipated visit.

Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Sarrazin and the Rev. Father Carson, parish priest of St. Vincent de Paul of Montreal, were the donors of Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Logan of Prince St. for Easter Sunday, a very pleasant time being spent in honour of their little son Howard's birthday. Other friends from town were present.

Arbor Day In Huntingdon

For the first time in forty years the Town of Huntingdon is to have an Arbor Day. The fruits of the last Arbor day are now to be admired at the Academy, where one sees the majestic elms and maples.

The Arbor Day celebration is being promoted by the board of Trade, which organization is ever willing to do something for the betterment of Huntingdon. The Town Council has promised general assistance and from present appearance it looks as though the afternoon of May 2nd, is going to be one that should long be remembered. The Hon. Honore Mercier, Minister of Lands and Forests will in all probability be present, and will plant a tree in honor of the Provincial Government. Mr. G. C. Piche, Chief of the Forestry Service will plant a tree in honor of the Forestry Service. Around twenty trees will be planted in Prince Arthur Square that afternoon in honor of some group of citizens or other by an interested member of that particular group. The list will be published at a later date. The trees will come from the nursery at Berthierville for this planting. Other trees are to be planted in various part of the town and it is to be hoped the citizens in general will plant trees or bushes on their respective properties where thought advisable.

Mayor D. J. O'Connor, M. P., has declared Friday afternoon, May 2nd., from 2 o'clock a civic holiday. If the day be favourable a short address will be made at Prince Arthur Square by the Hon. Minister of Lands and Forests, Mr. Mercier. As the programme is completed it will be duly announced.

WILFRED KING AGAIN ACCUSED OF STEALING

Lamb's And Kiepprien's Stores Burglarized Monday Night. Goods Recovered.

Again Chas. Lamb's store was burglarized, but not by any unfamiliar or unexpected person. The accused is Wilfred King who was released from Valleyfield jail about two weeks ago. King was released one month earlier on account of good behaviour. The accused is also charged with burglarizing John Kiepprien's store the same night as Lamb's, viz. Monday night or early Tuesday morning. Admittance to both places was gained through breaking windows. Mr. and Mrs. Kiepprien were in Montreal that night therefore there was no one at home. From the Kiepprien store a small amount of change was taken, etc. At Lamb's two cameras were taken, also two boxes of pipes, a quantity of tobacco, two boxes of cigars, Benson-Hedges cigarettes, etc.

On Tuesday morning the storekeepers notified the Town Council and in short order John Macrow had Wilfred King locked up in the town cells and recovered the stolen goods at his home. Pipes and tobacco were found in a bureau drawer in his bedroom, in the woodshed under the flooring was found cigars and cigarettes. The cameras were also found in the woodshed. Mr. J. G. Laurendeau, K.C. has been engaged by the town to carry out the necessary prosecution formalities.

The deceased is survived by one sister, Mrs. Jackson, who is a resident of the U. S.

TWO MEN FOUND IN CAR UNCONSCIOUS

Clifford Boyd And Friend Injured—Police Believe Auto Struck Pillar.

Two unconscious men were found in a battered automobile parked beneath the C.P.R. elevated tracks at Aylwyn and Rouen streets, Montreal early Tuesday morning. Nothing is known as to what happened, but police think that the car had struck a pillar and caused the men to lose consciousness.

Clifford Boyd, 30, 6022 Jeanne Mance street, and his friend, Alphonse Leclerc, 30, 6797 St. Denis street, were both seated in the front seat. Boyd was badly cut on the face and was suffering from a broken leg. Leclerc had broken his upper and lower jaws, his teeth had been knocked out and his forehead was severely cut. They were taken to the Notre Dame Hospital and treated. They had been on their way to the home of Leclerc.

The automobile, when found, was not touching any of the pillars supporting the tracks and both men are at a loss to explain what happened.

The regular monthly meeting of the Georgetown W.M.S. met in the church on Thursday, 17th inst., 31 ladies attending. The devotional part of the meeting was taken up by different members of the Auxiliary. Mrs. Williams who attended the Annual Provincial Society meeting on Tuesday in the church of St. Andrew and St. Paul, Montreal, gave a very interesting paper on the meeting. Interesting papers were given by Mrs. G. Hope and Miss F. Hunter, and the special music was rendered by Mrs. R. A. Henderson and Miss M. McFarlane.

At the close of the meeting the clothing made during the winter campaign was packed and refreshments served by a committee of ladies. A meeting of the Ladies' Aid followed to discuss business on hand.

Mrs. Percy McCartney and daughter, Verda spent Tuesday in Montreal.

Mr. Ralph Cooper was a caller in town on Monday.

NEWSPAPERS AND THEIR PUBLIC.

The Winnipeg Free Press, the Toronto Globe and the Montreal Gazette form the national newspaper triangle. Let the Gazette treacherously urge some policy and it will be only a few days before the Press Press explodes it, nor does a better fate await a suggestion of the Globe when the Gazette gets a grip on it. As each is an excellently edited journal, the Canadian who desires a liberal education in Canadian policy-making can achieve his desire by subscribing to these three papers.

Nevertheless, we of the country places sometimes feel that our city papers are losing the place they once held in the rural homes, despite the more generous circulation support they now receive. No longer is there an implicit acceptance of the editorial advice, although, as we know, there is today a keener interest in public policies, as distinctive from partisanship, than was the rule a generation ago.

Some weeks ago Mr. Church, M.P., introduced a bill in Parliament for the purpose of requiring all newspapers to publish the names of the owners. The measure was accepted by the House of Commons, but it was rejected in the Senate. The Globe criticized the decision and the Gazette last week replied, declaring: "The newspaper-reading public nowadays are concerned themselves less and less with the political opinions of the journals which they buy, provided they are supplied with the day's news, fully and impartially reported." Excellent and reliable as are the Gazette's, the Globe's and the Free Press' reports of news events, it would be regrettable if our daily newspapers are to be simply glorified news bulletins and advertising broadcasts. Theirs is a greater public obligation.

If our newspapers, with their contacts throughout all the ramifications of our national life, are not prepared to give a lead in constructive thought, the result will be that biased "semi-intellectual" weekly and monthly journals will spring up and, lacking both practical and sympathetic appreciation of the problems of Canadians, will, to be smart, seek to divide us into isms. Our populistic groupings are still too scattered to permit any such testing of the fibre of Canadian nationalism.

CONSIDER THE TOURIST.

The season for tourist travel is soon to open up, and is a matter to be well considered. He may be roaming the country in a fifth-hand trolley or he may be in the palatial Rolls-Royce or in a car like yours or mine. The tourist is a modern problem and should be dealt with judiciously, and fairly if we hope to further develop that industry.

Spots where the tourist lingers begin to flourish for he spills his gold with reckless abandon, that is if the fancy seizes him to get out and stretch his legs. The tourist is a problem, because he defies all economic laws. The only commodities he buys are beauty, recreation and change, but he is willing to pay right royally for these things. He is the reverse of the old-time peddler who hawked his goods from door to door. Instead, the tourist brings his money from town to town, and spends it wherever his interest is attracted.

There are figures regarding the tourist's buying power. Last year, something like $300,000,000 was spent in Canada by this tribe. From which, it will be gleaned that the tourist is a major industry.

Huntingdon is well located to take advantage of the tourist industry, but so far what move have we taken to stimulate this business for the benefit of Huntingdon? Beauty figures first, in the mind of the tourist, so let us see, or point out a few cases that might be touched upon. Entering Huntingdon it would be most fitting to see the filter plant property generally improved upon. The Town Council expect to dispose of the old house and have the grounds generally improved. That is one act about to be created that will make it such, that the tourist will be favorably impressed with the water supply system. Next in line is the entrance to the Town. The main street and station streets in particular should always be kept well swept and the properties facing same well painted. Several properties have been purchased and are being torn down and sites beautified. These things appeal to the tourist and when Huntingdonians get into conversation with tourists it is but fit and proper they should tell them about these civic improvements; they will make the tourist feel favorably disposed to remain in Huntingdon and see the town and district. The tourist will be favorably impressed if the business places will condescend to set out several window boxes of flowers in the month of May.

As to recreation for the tourist our townspeople would do well to be generous in extending invitations to them to visit the bowling greens or tennis courts when they are in operation. Suggest that they spend a day at Port Lewis or St. Anicet. Many tourists are interested in "Better Agriculture" so why not direct them to drive through some of our immediate rural sections. These little acts of kindness are appreciated and will have a tendency to put Huntingdon more on the map than has ever been the case heretofore.

THE START OF ORMSTOWN EXHIBITION.

The "Little Royal" as the Ormstown Show was called last year by several agricultural publications is now about to send out its 1930 premium list. The Ormstown Show is now to be known as Ormstown Exhibition, not that the name is going to make it any better, but it was generally thought, more fitting. The Ormstown Exhibition is the greatest advertising medium for the livestock farmer and this year's premium list is certainly made very attractive to the exhibitor in the matter of premiums. Besides the $17,000.00 that is being given in prize awards, the array of special prizes open to the District of Beauharnois exhibitors is unusual. The local breeders of livestock who have not regularly exhibited stock at Ormstown Exhibition would do well to now enter the ring. If our farmers are going to hold back from exhibiting and let the "big fellows," so to speak, take all the plums, what good will Ormstown Exhibition achieve for our District. On the contrary, it would mean developing a bigger opposition outside our District. The farmers here should grasp the situation and show their stock, and eventually they will be top notchers and then, make the outside of the district exhibitor take the lower rating in the classes. The demand for headers is ever prevalent, may our livestock breeders ever maintain this position, that has so long been enjoyed in this District. Had it not been for such men as Ness, McMillan, Sangster, Cunningham, Logan, McCormick, Cavers, Wylie, Budge, as well as many others, who regularly exhibited on various show circuits, it is very questionable if our District would have become so famed as a livestock center from which to make purchases. Our District is just as Dr. Barton said, "not so exclusive as it used to be, for other livestock centers are growing up by leaps and bounds." Let every farmer who has a creditable animal in his herd exhibit it at Ormstown Exhibition. If the animal wins a prize it is certainly enhanced in value, let alone the indirect benefits the exhibitor will attain through exhibiting his stock.

SCHOOLS AND BUSES.

In this column of the last issue of the Gleaner appeared an item under the above heading. Exception has been taken to statements made therein by the gentlemen who circulated the petitions against school consolidation. The Gleaner made its statements founded on what it then believed to be reliable facts. Since that date we have learned that the statements were founded on hearsay and not by the gentlemen who circulated the petitions. At no time does the Gleaner ever want to make wrong accusations or to misinform its readers, therefore we would respectfully ask that the alleged statements be properly credited, and not to the representative petitioners.

The item pertaining to children who belonged to families who signed the petition for and against consolidation, is also doubted. The Hinchinbrooke School Board will of course have to analyse the petitions, and when made available will be duly published in these columns. The petitioners against consolidation believe there are 250 children in the families who voted against consolidation, and of this number 115 are presently attending schools in the township.

No Peeping Law.

However undesirable the condition may seem there is no law in Tennessee to prevent curious persons from peeping in windows, the State Supreme Court recently held in reversing a conviction of J. L. Neboard, Newport.

Right-of-Way.

Funeral processions will in future have the right-of-way on all Ontario highways, it has been announced at a meeting of Central Ontario Funeral Service Association. It was stated the Provincial Government has promised to reinsert a clause in the Highway Act making it illegal for automobiles to cut in on this sort of procession.

Cooper's Letter At $42.

A letter of James Fenimore Cooper to Gen. Lafayette was worth only $42. on the Paris market. This sum was recently paid for an authentic letter of the novelist Cooper to the soldier Lafayette when it was put up for auction in one of the largest art auction rooms of Paris. The letter was dated December 5th., 1826, and conveyed the sorrow of the American novelist at the news of the death of Lafayette's son-in-law.

The Handcuff Market.

How can Birmingham boom its trade in handcuffs? Its gun industry has been badly hit by disarmament. The jewelry trade has been badly hit because modern husbands prefer to buy their wives motor cars instead of pearl necklaces and diamond bracelets. Now the handcuff industry is suffering through a slump in crime. Handcuffs are made almost exclusively in Birmingham. The war provided the greatest boom period, for the thousands of military policemen had each to be supplied with "bracelets." The police forces are the main customers today, but, sad to relate, the gyves last a long time. Handcuffs are not a thing one can advertise on billboards with a snappy slogan. A slide shown in a movie theater would leave the audience—except for one or two guilty people—absolutely cold. The handcuff trade advertises, therefore, with dignity in trade papers, and unofficially hopes that the criminal world will do its best to increase the demand.

No Italian Women There.

The "Tribuna" of Roma explains why no delegation of Italian women has gone to London to support the Italian attitude at the naval conference, as American and Japanese women are doing for their respective delegations. The Fascist attitude, it points out, is the attitude of the head of the Fascist system, and therefore of the whole Italian people, without distinction of party or sex. The women of Italy have no special thesis to support, whereas the American and Japanese women have evidently undertaken the journey because they knew that their delegates would not otherwise have supported the reduction of armaments. But the overwhelming reason is left to the end: "And finally, the Italian women, worthy of their name, are staying at home to mind the children."

That Spring Feeling.

Spring called with insistent voice to Ellis Bartheois, 29, a sculptor of Brooklyn, N. Y., when he awoke at his home. He should dance, he felt, to show his appreciation of the season. Neglecting to attire himself in any garments whatsoever, Bartheois rushed to the roof and there prouetted and danced. He flung his arms to the north, he flung them to the south. He flung them east and west, too, and he tripped an ecstatic measure. All would have been well had not a housewife gone to an adjacent roof to hang out what Bartheois was so evidently lacking. She was unsympathetic as, gasping, she ran back to her apartment and notified police. Patrolmen Simmons and Mulvy responded, and they also felt that Bartheois was too enthusiastic. They arrested him and took him to the station house, first wrapping him in a sheet.

Died On Birthday.

Two sons of John L. Mitchell, Bedford, Indiana, have died on their thirty-fifth birthday anniversaries. The latest death was that of Cecil E. Mitchell, conductor, killed when run over by a train at Terre Haute. His brother, Edgar, an engineer, was killed in a wreck at Jerome, Ark., six years ago.

Won't Travel To Fires.

Homes and factories may burn, but the shy firemen of Cardigan will answer no more alarms. They were ashamed to be seen with their antiquated hand truck, two horses and one ladder. "We refuse to make a laughing stock of ourselves," said the company commander when D. G. Jones of Verwig rode, clad only in shirt and mackintosh, to summon the company to a fire on his farm. Jones had to ride ten miles more to find a less sensitive group of firemen.

Stole Her Own Silver.

Berlin society has been profoundly shocked by the sensational discovery made recently that the mysterious thief who during the past few months has repeatedly stolen table silver and other valuable from the palace of the Governor of Potsdam is none other than the lady of the house herself. The governor's wife, Frau Dr. Momm, after casting suspicion on various members of her household, made a full confession to the Berlin detectives who have been entrusted with the investigation of the case. Her husband, one of the most respected members of Potsdam society, broke down completely on hearing the terrible news, and has already sent in his resignation. The thefts had become the talk of Potsdam. On several occasions, at the close of the big official banquets given by the governor, at which from 200 to 300 guests were present, Frau Momm purloined various cases of her own silver, and on the following day took them to a pawnshop in an obscure alley to sell them, without, as it now turns out, even taking the trouble to wash from them the remnants of the previous meal. On each occasion she had assembled the servants of her household and furiously enumerated the silver knives, forks and spoons that must have been stolen. On each occasion one or other of the hypothetical culprits was dismissed forthwith from the palace. At the beginning of last week a new sensation occurred. A large sum of money which had been handed over to the governor the day before for distribution to various charitable institutions disappeared during the night. A broken window some 30 feet above the ground apparently pointed to the means by which the thief had gained entrance, but the surrounding wall and the ground below showed no sign of any ladder having been used. A detective found in the corridor no track of a man's boots, but on the paint of the door of the room, which had been opened by cutting out the lock, the police were astonished to find the imprint of a woman's hand. Gradually the chain of evidence tightened, and the detective charged the governor's wife point-blank with having stolen her own silverware, as well as the money entrusted to her husband.

Back To The Farm.

This back to the farm idea is more than a theory to Elinor Free of Americus, Georgia. After 10 years on Riverside drive, she has turned her back on New York to run a 1,200-acre Georgia farm. She drives a truck, paints and varnishes, hammers nails, rides a horse for hours supervising farm work, directs a sawmill and feeds the chickens. Ten years ago, at the age of 19, Miss Free inherited a considerable sum from her mother's estate in Texas and went to New York. She maintained a residence on Riverside drive and spent her summers in the Catskills and her winters in Florida. Her hobbies were aviation, which has yielded her a pilot's license, and photography. But she tired of Gotham's gaiety, acquired 1,200 acres in South Georgia and settled down to steady farming. First she built an 11-room house, drawing the plans herself. Then she built a sawmill which has turned out some 200,000 feet of lumber. Her laborers are brought from among the white farmers of Texas instead of depending on Dixie's Negro labor. Her crops, however, are all native to this section—corn, cotton, peanuts, oats and rye. Miss Free's love for rural life dates back to her childhood in Braunfels, Tex., near San Antonio, where she learned to ride almost as soon as she could walk and knew how to handle firearms before she started thumbing her first primer. She quit college at 18 to become deputy clerk of her home town.

'Dead' Youth Resuscitated.

Into the land of death—and back. That was the experience of John Abbenhous, 17-year-old automobile mechanic of Seattle, Washington, who owes his life to the tireless efforts of a fire department rescue squad. Young Abbenhous was overcome by carbon monoxide gas from an automobile on which he was working. For hours he lay as dead until he was found slumped down in the front of the car by the manager of the garage. Although rescue appeared hopeless, an inhalator crew went to work on the unconscious form. For more than an hour and a half they labored over him without the slightest sign of returning life. Then, almost imperceptibly, the still body began a labored breathing. Life had won over death.

All Over A Button.

Male resentment of the collar button's proclivity for losing itself reached a climax in Vienna some days ago when a chauffeur gave it as his reason for attempting suicide. Fritz Mimmeler tried to jump from the window of his third-floor flat. A policeman who had noticed his preparations caught him by the waist and hauled him back into the room. Mimmeler told the officer that he had tried five times to fasten his collar. Finally the stud fell out and rolled out of sight and he decided to depart for a better world where there were presumably neither collars nor collar buttons.

Interpreter At Nine.

Language experts around a police station at London, Ontario, were put to shame not long ago when a little nine-year-old Hungarian girl, Carrie Simon, spoke perfect Hungarian, perfect English and then surprised the court by announcing that she could converse fluently in French. The incident came to light when Lawrence Simon, her father, was facing a charge of passing a stop sign. He could speak very little English and the court was getting nowhere with the case. In broken English the father asked that his little daughter be allowed to come into the courtroom and answer the questions. Wearing a small blue coat, a toboggan cap down over her ears, her large brown eyes startled by the appearance of the court-room and all the constables in uniform, the little child informed the court that she would translate the questions to her father. She did, and in a manner that surprised everybody. When the case was concluded the father, with a broad smile on his face, informed the court, "she is a very smart girl."

Son Loses $1. Bet.

Because of a boy's faith in his mother, young Medill McCormick, 13-year-old son of the Illinois Republican senatorial nominee, is out a dollar. And the family chauffeur is in that much. Mrs. Ruth Hanna McCormick told Medill she would lose in the primary race. He believed it and bet against her with the chauffeur. Medill told everybody about his bet over the radio when a microphone was set up at Union Station for the informal "home-coming" reception for Mrs. McCormick on her return from Illinois.

Balm And Annulment.

Margaret Edwards' action in filing one suit against Albert George Edwards in Los Angeles, for breach of promise and annulment of marriage apparently wasn't as unreasonable as it sounds. In brief she charges in one action that when they were married in July, 1929, he already had a wife. That accounts for the annulment. Then, she alleges that in December, 1929, after he was divorced and was legally free to wed her, he wouldn't do it. That explains the $40,500 breach of promise suit.

She Won't Obey.

Violet G. Lorimer refused to "promise to obey" when she appeared with Frank L. Holm to be married by G. W. Highsmith, justice of the peace at Colorado Springs. The justice used the expression "fitting obedience" and that permitted the ceremony to proceed.

And What Next?

A new use for divorcees has been discovered in Moscow. A big increase in the number of those seeking divorcees, but still living with their ex-mates, led the secret police to dig into the cause. They found that heavy taxes on the ex-tradesmen were responsible. Under the law, a wife is responsible for her husband's taxes. The business men would transfer their holdings to their wives, get the wives to divorce them, and then plead poverty as a means of avoiding the taxes. The wives, being divorced, were not forced to pay.

Nickle Raises.

At Amherstburg, Ont. in the county of Essex a snappy auction sale was held a few days ago, in front of the Imperial Bank. Ed. Cummings the local auctioneer undertook to auction off a seized car. The "Echo" says "the bidding was hot at about nickel raises." The car was knocked down at $8.00 to I. S. Brown although it was considered worth a hundred more.

Beer Store on Campus.

The Liquor Control Board of Ontario is vexed, and Toronto University officials are perplexed, all due to the movement of the students to have a beer store established on the campus. The students, through an undergraduate newspaper, voted in favor of the store, 1,300 to 882. Apprised of the movement, Sir Henry Drayton, chairman of the control board, said: "Establishment of a store on the campus is against our policy." Students intend to press the matter, it was reported.

BREAST-FEEDING

To nurse her baby is the first duty of every mother. Fat is required to build up fatty tissues, and to provide energy and heat; carbohydrates (sugar) are required for the same purposes; and proteins are needed to build the tissues of the body. These elements are present in mother's milk and are there found in a proportion suitable to the infant and in a form that makes for easy digestion. Mothers' milk is a perfect baby food because it is perfectly adapted to serve as nourishment for the baby.

It is much easier for a mother to nurse her infant than it is for her to prepare artificial feeding properly. To prepare feedings takes a great deal of time because of the amount of care which must be given to cleaning bottles and utensils, and to making the frequent changes necessary to adopt the feedings to the needs of the growing child.

Breast-milk is sterile. There is no danger of disease germs being picked up and spread by its use. It carries with it to the infant some protection against the communicable diseases. Success in nursing depends upon a determination to do it. A half-hearted attempt, with an idea that it will meet failure, generally does lead to failure. Even if it is not possible to completely nurse the child, breast-feeding should not be given up, because even the smallest amount of breast-milk is of real value to the baby.

Breast-feeding is often given up because of a mistaken idea that the child is not thriving, or that he would do better on some artificial feeding. It is a serious responsibility to wear a child because it takes away from him what he needs most. It is true that infants are often brought up successfully on artificial feedings, but taking it by and large, the strongest, healthiest babies are breast fed.

There is less sickness, there are fewer deaths among those infants who are so fortunate as to be naturally fed. It can be stated with confidence that there is no other factor of such great importance to the health of babies as natural feeding. If every infant were to be breast-fed, at regular hours, the problems of infant hygiene would be well on the way to solution. It is the right of the child to receive the food intended for him, and it is the mother's pleasurable duty to see that he gets it. Questions concerning Health addressed to the Canadian Medical Association, 184 College St., Toronto, will be answered personally by letter.

BOOK REVIEW

By HOWARD ROSS, of Montreal.

The Stock Market Crash and After
By Dr. Irving Fisher,
Professor of Economics, Yale University.

On September 6th., 1929, the most rapid and precipitous decline of stock prices in the history of security trading began. It continued, with minor recoveries, until November 13th. The value of stocks listed on the New York Stock Exchange dropped in price twenty-six billion dollars while Canadian securities dropped from nine and one-half billions to five and one-half billions.

What really were the causes? Professor Fisher makes an unemotional assessment of the panic in terms of cause and effect. He discusses the extent and implications of the crash and then discusses various events and movements such as Scientific Research and Invention; Industrial Management, Labor's Co-operative Policy, Prohibition and Stable Money. Later chapters deal with The Flight from Bonds to Stocks, Speculation, and Broker's Loans. Finally he turns his attention to Preventatives of Panics and Remedies.

In his opinion the British crash dating from August 30th, and starting a week earlier than the American break plunged common share averages to a lower level on the London Exchange than in New York. "The extreme range on the American decline was 16 per cent less than the fall of stocks in London. It was a world crash in stocks which started, not in New York, but in London, wrought havoc in Paris and Berlin as well as on the American Exchanges."

In discussing the importance of scientific research he quotes Dr. Robert Millikan one of the world's foremost physicists who quoted in an address at a meeting of the New York State Chamber of Commerce the words of Pasteur: "In the century science is the soul of the prosperity of nations, and the living source of all progress. Undoubtedly the tiring discussions of politics seem to be our guide-empty appearances. What really leads us forward is a few scientific discoveries and their application."

He discusses the new Mason Process of drying alfalfa which makes it possible to make hay while it rains and to keep three animals in prime condition on one acre. He refers to the book of Dr. Orrin Wilcox, "The Great Food Problem and Its Solution" and his prediction based on scientific calculations that the earth's population may increase in almost unbelievable numbers through the application of recently discovered laws of plant growth, chemical fertilization, and transmutation of food properties. These combined with selection of plants with highest power to absorb nutrients from the soil may permit a maximum density of population of ninety-six thousand persons per square mile. In Canada we have 3 persons to the square mile. He expects as great advances in other basic industries.

"An unusually high price relative to current earnings nearly always represents a new and very promising invention. Those who have bought the stock and put its price so high are not so much the ignorant public as the insiders, who have carefully measured the future prospects and bought the stock when the current earnings were near zero making a price-earnings ratio of even over 100 to 1 for the time being. That is what happens whenever one "Gets in on the ground floor." The more recent the invention, the higher the ratio of price to earnings is apt to be, because in its early stages the earnings have not had time to develop. With the increased application of research, American investors are justified in greater expectations of future dividends. In discussing Labor's Co-operative Policy he quotes with approval President Grace of Bethlehem Steel who stated that "High standards of living are based on the greater earning power of labor, and, second, that continued prosperity and high wages go hand in hand." In the opinion of Professor Fisher "the end and aim of production is to produce goods that will sell, and not be piled up in warehouses and stores, and that high employee earnings per year may actually mean low labor cost per piece, and, consequently, low prices, large sales, and large profits."

When discussing The Dividends of Prohibition he wrote: "Another basic reason for the new plateau of the stock market is to be found in expectation of future dividends because of prohibition a highly controversial subject, but not on the economic side. Whatever else we may think of prohibition, there is no gain saying its economic value; although we may, of course, differ as to how great its economic value is—whether it is over six billion dollars a year, as I suggested in my book Prohibition at its Worst, or larger or smaller."

He finds that investment trusts prosper weathered the panic in much better condition than the speculative pools and individual operators, chiefly through their steady reliance upon the principle of diversification and skilled scrutiny in making and changing their investments. He adds: "I still hazard the statement that in spite of the tremendous harm that has been done to common stock during the panic of 1929, investment trusts have made it safer to invest in common stocks than ever before."

A New Method of Financing Security Purchases.
Professor Fisher has worked out an option agreement which made it possible for him to secure control of a block of stock that was entirely undisturbed during the decline.

In a margin account the purchaser of the security obtains a loan against the security as collateral, this loan being subject to call at any time. Theoretically such a loan is the safest type, since the lender may at any time demand repayment and falling payment, he may sell the collateral on the market. But it was found that during the panic it was impossible to sell at such short notice all the collateral that stood behind weakened loans, therefore many lenders were forced to abstain from calling their loans, or take serious losses. The securities behind these loans hung over the market to be sold as soon as prices rose sufficiently to liquidate the loans. In ordinary times the collateral loan may be perfectly safe, in times of panic it is not.

The call loan because of the ordinary safety is made at a very low rate of interest. If the lender accepts the minimum of risk he should get only the minimum return.

In Professor Fisher's option agreement the acceptor assumes a share of the risk and a relatively high payment. The purchaser assumes the larger part of the risk and receives the larger profit in the event of an advance in price. He is willing to pay more for funds since he will not be sold out in the event of a decline. It is not suitable for the trader who wishes to be in and out of the market. There is more long term holding and if the margin loan could be avoided there would be little opportunity for a break of large magnitude to develop. If it did develop, the makers of the proposed option agreements would find their holdings undisturbed. If this idea gains favor or the agreement will no doubt be simplified and estimate the risk attached and fix a rate which will absorb these risks and yield a profit.

The Suggested Option Agreement is Given in Full.
According to its terms the vendor would sell to Smith 1000 shares at $20. per share, much below the market price—$30. The vendor would have the right to re-buy at $21. within six months, at $22. within twelve months, at $23. within eighteen months, and so on, at an advance in price of $1. every six months during five years, at the expiration of which the contract would automatically terminate, and the repurchase price at that time would be $30. In addition the vendor would guarantee

Smith a dividend return of 7 per cent on the $20,000 received from him. The advance in the repurchase price means that, if the option is exercised, Smith would receive not only 7 per cent, but $2. per share per annum above the original purchase price of $20.; that is 10 per cent per annum in addition to the 7 per cent, or 17 per cent per annum altogether.

The chance that Smith would not get the full 17 per cent is simply the chance that within five years the stock would be below $20. when Smith received the stock. The only chance that Smith would not get back his principal is the chance that the market price would be below $20. at the end of five years. In that case he would lose on his principal the difference between $20. and whatever the stock would be worth at the end of five years. Smith by taking these small chances of loss, has the guarantee of 7 per cent per annum, and the probability of 10 per cent more; while the vendor is enabled by thus distributing the risk, in small lots among Smith and others, to avoid a large debt. The plan is really a sharing profit or loss with others, instead of giving to the creditor a rigid lien and has many good features to commend it as a substitute for broker's loans.

Ships and Planes May Look Alike But They Aren't!
A good order secured recently by a shipyard in the Old Country for the building of three "sister ships". This means that these vessels will be identical in every respect—the same design, size, tonnage, engines, and general construction. So they should be as alike as three peas.

But in actual practice they will be alike in outward appearance only, according to an article in Answers. As far as their way of sailing and behaviour at sea is concerned they will be utterly different. It is one of the mysteries of ships and shipbuilding that nowhere in the world are there two sister ships afloat which sail the same way. Invariably there are great differences, so marked, in fact, that it is difficult to believe that the vessels were created

Would Revive Cornish
The Federation of Old Cornwall Societies, research antiquarian organizations that have done much work on the folk-lore of that little-known part of Great Britain, are endeavouring to bring about a revival of the old Cornish language. Cornish has practically disappeared, even more so than Welsh or Irish. Whereas these two languages can still be heard in remote communities where English is rarely used even in West Penwith district, Land's End, the most obscure part of the Duchy of Cornwall, the language is no longer spoken, though individual words still remain in the English speech of the inhabitants. The last person to speak the language fluently is said to have been Dolly Pentreath, who died in 1777. An inscription in Cornish on her tombstone records this fact but it is probable that the language was in use somewhat later.

It is a good thing to live in the country, to escape from the great brickery we call the Metropolis, or so Mrs. Sparrowgrass and I thought as we opened up our summer home at Chateauguay.

On our first Sunday in Chateauguay, we put into practice "our new thoughts and new deeds" and went to our church friends at St. Andrew's Church. The services were good and as it was Communion Sunday we stayed and had the additional pleasure of seeing the newly ordained elders, Messrs. Cox, Holmes and Watt, officiating at the service.

We missed the genial organist, who was prevented from doing his usual duties by an hospital operation from which we are glad to know, he has entirely recovered.

Mr. and Mrs. James Henderson and family of Chateauguay, N.Y. visited at the home of her mother, Mrs. A. Small on Sunday.

How well you look!

"I am writing you again to express my sincere gratitude for the continued success I have maintained through my daily dose of Kruschen. Only last week a man met me (who saw me a few months ago when I was crippled and emaciated). His first remark was 'how well I look!' I replied, 'Yes, I have only taken Kruschen Salts to thank. He said he was feeling 'off colour' and would start the Kruschen habit next day. I always recommend Kruschen Salts."

Kruschen Salts is obtainable at drug and department stores in Canada at 75c a bottle. A bottle contains enough to last for 4 or 5 months—good health for half-a-cent a day.

FRANKLIN CENTRE

Divine service was conducted at Franklin Centre at 10 a.m. the minister, Rev. H. H. Athling Gillingham, B.D. taking for his text, I Cor. 15-57. "Thanks be to God which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

Before Communion service the following persons were received into church membership: Miss Margaret Dunn, Miss Dorothy Sharpe, Clarence Dunn, Keith Dunn, Ross Dunn, Leslie Frier and Milton Sharpe.

A large congregation worshipped at Gore United. On Sunday, May 11th. Holy Communion will be administered.

At Rennie's United, Rev. Gillingham was assisted by Rev. J. H. Miller of Huntingdon, who preached an appropriate sermon explaining the origin and value of the Sacramental service.

Six persons were received as members of the church: Mr. George Leggett Sr., Mr. and Mrs. Verden Leggett by transfer, Mr. Albert Travisee, Mr. and Mrs. Otis Travisee by confession of faith.

Following the reception service, Rev. J. H. Miller ordained George Leggett, Orville Gamble and Dr. E. N. Moore as Elders of the Congregation. At the close of the service Holy Communion was administered to the large congregation.

All the services were inspiring and a fine feeling of friendliness suggestive of the Easter spirit was everywhere in evidence.

Mrs. Cassie McDonald of Montreal spent the Easter holidays at the home of Mrs. Norman McPhee.

DUNDEE

As Miss Flora Fleming is leaving this community the Y Society gave her a farewell party last Friday evening. The evening was spent in dancing and playing cards. Lunch was served and then Flora was presented with a beautiful silk umbrella as a token of remembrance from the society. Dancing was then resumed until the wee hours of the morning.

When I first took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I had been married about a year and my strength was leaving me on account of my condition. I was only 19 and it was my first child. My mother told me I needed something to steady my nerves and a girl chum told me to take the Vegetable Compound. I am so thankful I did because it strengthened my whole system and now I feel perfectly well and have a sweet little baby boy."—Mas. J. B. STALKER, Bancroft, Ontario.

10,000 stings by mail

With the improved technique which has been developed for handling of package bees it is now possible to send them by mail, and the bee experts of the Dominion Department of Agriculture find that very satisfactory results are obtained by apiarists through the use of package bees to replenish weakened colonies and to establish new ones. The bee package is wire-covered wooden frame work, usually containing two pounds of live bees. There are some of five thousand bees to a pound. A shipment by mail is now possible and should a package of bees become broken open in transit ten thousand stings is the potential result.

THE LATE MRS. GEO. BOULTER

Mrs. George Boulter, one of the few "Old Resident" of Chateauguay Basin, died at the residence of her daughter, Mrs. Wallis Drummond St. Montreal, on Thursday morning, April 17th.

Mrs. Boulter was the wife of the late George Boulter of the firm of Silverman & Boulter, leading furriers of Montreal and each year the Boulter family spent the summer months at their country house, the Willows, the old homestead of the Boulters, leading farmers of the county of Chateauguay. Mr. George Boulter, a younger member of the family, early left the farm for a business career in which he was eminently successful.

Mrs. Boulter was known throughout the country as an genial and friendly neighbour and an interesting and interested woman in all that concerned the social life in Chateauguay, and her desire up to the last was to once more be in the old house which she called "home."

She leaves a family of five children to mourn her demise, Regine, Mrs. Wallis, Mrs. Runciman and Miss Bessie of Montreal, and Miss Olive, Superintendent of the St. Catherine's Hospital. The sympathy of the community goes out to the bereaved family in the loss of a dear mother whilst deploring the great loss to the community.

Its uniform leavening qualities give the same satisfactory results with every baking. 3 out of every 4 Canadian housewives,* who bake at home, say they use it because it does give consistent, better baking results. If you bake at home, the New Magic Cook Book will furnish you with dozens of attractive baking suggestions.

Try this Recipe for Muffins
1 tablespoon butter
2 tablespoons sugar
2 eggs
2½ cups flour
3 teaspoons Magic Baking Powder
½ teaspoon salt
1 cup sweet milk

Cream butter and sugar. Add eggs one by one, beat well. Sift dry ingredients together and add to first mixture alternately with milk. If batter not stiff enough, add a little more flour. Put in well-greased muffin pans and bake for 20 minutes in a quick oven.

*This fact was revealed in a recent Dominion-wide investigation.

"The Shining Talent"

"Molly darling, you didn't come to quarrel with me?"

"I didn't come to be insulted either," she said, and bit her lip on an angry little sob. She patted the brief case in her lap. "I've got here on a play, Jack. Don't you want to hear it?"

"Why, of course I do. Are you honestly writing a play, Molly?"

"Well, I'm writing it," she confessed, "but the idea wasn't mine. You know Red Flynn—I mean I've written you about him. He gave me the idea, and we're collaborating on it."

"You're not falling in love with him, are you, Molly?"

"She threw back her head and laughed.

"In love with Red?" she cried. "When I've a sweetheart like you? Why, honey, Red is homely and crude, and—oh, my goodness, he's nobody a girl would look at twice. But he's awfully nice."

"She was so excited to eat, but told instead of the night that Red and Slim found Perry Mingersoll. Then she took the papers from her brief case, and read aloud what she had written. Jack listened with ill-concealed annoyance.

"I don't like it, Molly," he said flatly, when she laid the sheets aside, and turned her little radiant face to him. "It's not like you, writing filth and muck. Good heavens, what's come over you?"

"I don't understand," she faltered.

"Oh, you understand all right. A sweet little kid like you, running round with police reporters, wanting to write a play about a courtesan and a murder?"

Molly's painted lips trembled. Silently she shuffled her papers together.

CHAPTER XIV

The week end in New York constituted two days of wretchedness. Molly had expected praise and encouragement from Jack, and she received instead disparagement and censure. He disapproved strongly of her work. He was jealously resentful of Red Flynn, and hated, he admitted, the ways of all newspaper men.

"Why don't you write something worth while, Molly?" he pleaded.

"What would you suggest?" she had inquired, frigidly polite.

But Jack was vague. "Oh, something nice," he floundered.

"I want to write sweet little verses. And I bet you could write pretty stories for children. Then there are all the high class magazines. My gosh, Molly, you don't have to write for such a screaming newspaper?"

"But I want to earn money, Jack," she had defended herself. "Poetry doesn't pay anything. Besides, I'm no poet. As for children's magazines—she fluttered her little white hands despairingly. "I'll write something steady job on a newspaper is best. It assures an income, you see, and does not prohibit me from taking a fling at your high class magazines. Or even trying my hand at a play."

Jack groaned. "That play against of all the sordid, rotten themes, you picked the darndest. If you want to write a play, why don't you write about something decent?"

"It doesn't pay," she informed him tartly.

"How about Peter Pan?"

"But that was ages ago, dear. Eugene O'Neill doesn't write fairy tales, nor Charlie McArthur and Ben Hecht. Take the outstanding successes. Crime plays, or sex plays, all of them."

"So that's what you want to do?" he demanded disagreeably. "Write crime and sex?"

"I want to make money," she told him wearily. "to buy all the lovely things I dream about, and go all the lovely places I've read about. But it isn't only money that I want. I want to be somebody. Not just little Molly Burnham who writes the nice young man, Jack Wells."

"Don't let me cramp your style," he injected bitterly.

And so they quarreled and bickered, and Jack never guessed that womanlike Molly would have sworn all her dreams of wealth and fame for a man who could dominate her. So he criticized and found fault and adopted quite the wrong tactics, until Molly was a glad when it was time to leave.

"It hasn't been a very nice week end," she confessed penitently at parting, "and I feel as though it was pretty much my fault. I guess I'm awfully selfish. I love you with all my heart, Jack. But getting married to cook pot roasts and darn socks, and budget on $45 a week, doesn't sound half so romantic as it used to. I've had my taste of independence, and found it sweet. Do you hate me, darling, for being modern and hard-boiled, and all the horrid things you abominate?"

"Hate you?" he cried. "Oh, Molly dear, if I were only good enough for you, and clever, and rich!"

She put her fingers to his lips.

"Sh! Honey, we're both going to knock 'em dead!"

In the morning Molly went directly from the train to the courthouse. As she approached the building she was conscious of a curious atmosphere of suppressed excitement. Flairclothes men lounged on the courthouse steps, while others in uniform, kept curious pedestrians moving. In the corridor she met Slim Boynton.

"There's hell to pay," he told her grimly. "And if you don't get jacked for contempt of court, you're luckier than you deserve. One of the jury-men got hold of a story you wrote. Of course they're not supposed to look at the newspapers, but this bird did. And now he admits that he's all set to find Mandinello guilty. Attorney for the defense have petitioned for a mistrial, and the judge is considering the evidence now. You'll probably be called to his chambers any minute. It's Wharton's fault. And now the whole outfit's liable to go to jail!"

"Slim! You don't mean it!"

Molly experienced a dreadful sinking feeling, and her knees became suddenly weak.

"Sure I mean it. What do you think I am, a practical little joker? Ask any of the boys. Look in the courtroom there. It's empty, isn't it? Wharton's been phoning all morning. Wants you to call him. They may take a chance, and send you up to court, and the thing blows over."

Molly was genuinely frightened. She had visions of going to jail, and wearing a striped dress like a woman she had interviewed in the house of correction.

A court officer approached her kindly. "Judge Brewster wishes to see you, Miss Burnham."

"Oh, my heavens, Slim! What will I do?"

"Well, you can't very well run," observed Slim. "Go ahead and take your medicine."

Judge Brewster, formidable in his black robes, received her gently, explaining the situation with legal precision. He would be obliged, he said, to declare a mistrial. The fault was not so much hers, as the jurymen's. He had warned the jury not to read the papers. There had been, it would appear, a serious miscarriage of justice. A friend of the accused man had sent a newspaper containing a story of Molly's to this particular jurymen. Certain passages of the story had been pencilled.

"An unprejudiced person reading that article would undoubtedly be influenced against the defendant," declared the judge. "As a newspaper woman you have no right to be anything but impartial in what you discuss. It is your duty to be fair, and frequently merits a fine, or a jail sentence. In view, however, of the evident conspiracy among Mandinello's friends, I am inclined to deal leniently with your own offense."

"Whoever it was who sent the paper containing your story to Jurymen Plagger, communicated the fact to attorneys for the defense. They promptly demanded an investigation, and I have questioned Mr. Plagger. He admits having read the article, and declares that he is now predisposed to find the defendant guilty. In view of his sworn statement, I must call a mistrial."

The judge stopped speaking, and Molly raised her flushed face to meet his judicial gaze, fixed sternly upon her.

"I'm fearfully sorry," she stammered. "There isn't anything I can say. It's my defense, no excuse, and he regarded her more kindly. "Allow me to commend your civility, Miss Burnham. It transcends your indiscretion. It is uncommonly gallant when a person declines to transfer the responsibility for the offense. I have investigated the matter more deeply than I had indicated, and have learned that your city editor ordered the articles."

Molly shook her head. "I write my own stories," she insisted. "Mr. Wharton is not responsible."

Judge Brewster rose, and his black robes billowed solemnly about him. "It is all," he said. "Except that I should advise you, Miss Burnham, for your own good, to be more careful in the future. Gunmen execute fearful reprisals."

Slim was waiting when Molly left the judge's chambers.

"It's all right," she said. "I'm not going to jail."

But Slim was in a dark mood. "Maybe you'll get shot," he hazarded. "Maybe you'd be better off in there. They couldn't get at you if you were behind the bars."

"Oh, Slim, stop! You make my blood run cold. Have you phoned the office? Judge Brewster is declaring a mistrial."

"Sure I gave them that ten minutes ago. Wharton's up in the air. The publisher has been giving him the devil, I guess. And he says for you to keep out of the office until he sends for you. Wants the thing to blow over before you show up. I guess. Talk about getting all the breaks! You pull a gag you ought to get sent to jail for, and what you rate? A vacation!"

Molly laughed light-heartedly. The dreadful cloud had lifted. The dark fear was all dispelled. She felt happy and gay.

"I'll have a little dinner party tonight," she thought. "Not any of the crowd from the office. I'll ask Rita and Bob, and Ruth and Zip. It will be like old times to be with them again."

She telephoned from the courthouse, and reached Rita at Miss Mayhew's. Rita said that she and Bob would love to go. They had talked of dropping in that evening anyhow, for it was such ages since they had seen Molly.

But Ruth said she didn't feel well. Besides, Zip was busy at the office, and sometimes he didn't get home until pretty late. It made things wretched, because they couldn't very well accept dinner invitations. Not that it made any difference. Ruth added. She didn't feel like going out anyhow. She couldn't imagine what had come over her lately. Zip said she was like an old woman.

"You sound so unhappy, dear!" lamented Molly.

"Maybe you'd sound unhappy," replied Ruth reproachfully. "If you'd lost your little baby." . . . and Molly heard her sob before she hung up the receiver.

She felt as though she had been actless and unsmiling. Ruth some flowers. It was a very successful small dinner. Molly's china was mostly Italian meal.

They were sitting over their coffee when the bell rang. The finger that was ringing it pressed on the button, and held it maddeningly. Molly released the door, but the bell continued to ring. She called through the door, but still the bell rang with unceasing insistence.

"Something's up," I'll see who it is," offered Bob.

He was gone for several minutes, and hearing strange noises in the hall, Bob was propelling a man up the stairs—a man who waved his arms about and was making dreadful sounds.

"Zip! Zip!" cried Rita.

"Zip? But I don't drink."

Molly ran down to the landing. "What's the matter, Bob? What's the matter with Zip?" she demanded.

Bob was trying to quiet him. "Here, Zip, that's can't you, old man?"

"Is he drunk Bob?"

Bob shook his head. Then Zip recognized Molly. He flung himself away from Bob, and threw his arms about her. "Get him upstairs," Bob was saying. "The janitor thinks he's drunk."

CHAPTER XV

Bob put his arm about his wife's shoulders, and reached for Molly's hand.

"Ruth's dead, girls," he said. "Poor little kid."

Zip raised his swollen face from Molly's shoulder. His soft brown hair forehead in moist strands, and his chin trembled like a child's.

"Ruth's dead," he repeated. "Did you hear Bob tell you?"

They drew him into the apartment, and Molly wondered if the gay, pretty background of her little dining room would round Zip more deeply. She knew that when one grieves extravagantly, the gaiety of others seems harsh and heartless. She was sorry that Zip had found her making merry with Rita and Bob. It would have been better if she had been alone. But Rita had heated the coffee, and now she brought Zip a steaming cup. "It will make you feel better," she said. "Buck you up, I know."

He took it obediently, and held it on his knee. His hand was shaking, so he could not raise it to his mouth. "She died in her sleep," he told them. "When I came home she looked like a ghost. And her eyes were red. I knew she'd been crying. I told her—Zip's voice broke, and he buried his head in his hands—"I told her that other women had lost their babies. I told her there wasn't anything unique about her sorrow. That other girls had gotten over it."

"Never mind that, Zip. Don't tell us," whispered Molly comfortingly. "Ruth knows you never meant to hurt her."

"Yes," he cried fiercely. "I want to tell you. I told Ruth I was sick of her sniveling and crying. I told her she was making my life a regular hell."

"Zip!" Molly darted from the bed where she had crouched, and flung herself on her knees before him. "Stop it! We don't want to hear those things. Don't torture yourself, poor Zip. Ruth doesn't want you to be happy."

"Something in Ruth died, Zip, when she lost her little baby. Perhaps that's why she died. Maybe she's with that little baby now."

Zip groaned. "I killed her," he said. "I killed her with words. She got all white and trembled, and she put her hand over her heart. And then I was frightened. And pretty soon she let me put her to bed."

"She lay there so white and still. But she wouldn't let me call a doctor. She wanted me to sit beside her, and hold her hand. And she kept opening her eyes, and smiling."

"After a while she wanted to sit up. She was very weak. Whispering then . . . My God, I ought to have known! I lifted her, and put pillows behind her back. And put my arms around her. I asked her if she was comfortable that way, and she said yes."

"She was quiet then for a long time, and I was frightened again."

"How are you feeling?" I asked.

"Beautiful!" she said. And she opened her eyes, and smiled again."

"By the way, I thought she was asleep. My arms were numb, and I was afraid I might let her slip back on the pillows. I wanted her to sleep, you see. I thought she would be better when she woke. So I took my arms away."

"And when I stood up," Zip was saying, "I bent to kiss her. I missed her forehead. And she didn't move. Then . . ."

Rita screamed. "Stop! Zip, don't!"

"I kissed her lips," he concluded simply. "And then I knew. I don't know how I knew. I just knew. Ruth was dead."

"And the last word she ever said," moaned Rita, "was 'Beautiful.' Wasn't that just like Ruth, Molly? Oh, poor, poor little Ruth!"

"You called a doctor?" asked Bob. "Somebody did," Zip said. "The woman upstairs came down. And her husband said she'd been dead for an hour. Two hours maybe. He was wrong though. Because she smiled at me. You see. And when I asked her how she was, she said 'Beautiful.'"

Rita's big dark eyes were staring mad.

Bob caught her to him. "Steady, Rita. Steady, dear," he besought. "Careful, darling."

Zip's wife's voice was piercing. "Don't you see? Ruth lived to make you happy. And she died to make you happy . . . And she came back from the dead to comfort you."

He shook his head miserably. "I know her," he said, "with words."

Molly had begun nervously to clear the dishes away. Presently Rita came to help her. They folded the table cloth, and stacked the dishes in the sink. Then Molly emptied the ash trays.

"And life goes on just the same," she kept thinking. "Dishes and ash trays, and coffee cups."

"How did you get in town, Zip?" asked Bob practically.

"Drove in."

"Good Lord! They shouldn't have let you out tonight. You should have telephoned us. We'd have gone to you. What was that doctor thinking of?"

"He didn't know," said Zip dully. "They'd all cleared out. Left me alone with Ruth. I got scared. Had to get away."

He looked about him wildly. "Ruth wanted me to tell Molly," he said. "Molly sent her flowers today. She had some of them pinned on her dress. She told me they were from Molly. And then, when she died, she said, 'Tell Molly, Zip.'"

Molly, in the kitchen, put her fingers in her ears.

"He'll drive me crazy!" she whispered. And Rita nodded through her tears.

"Do you mind," asked Molly presently, "if I go out for a minute? Will you and Bob stay with Zip? I want to phone Jack."

It took some minutes to put through the call, and when at last she heard his voice, she felt that she was going to faint. She raised her hand, shakingly, and pressed her cold fingers against the quivering column of her throat.

"Oh, Jack," she cried, "Ruth is dead . . . and I want you!"

"Dead?" he exclaimed incredulously. "An accident, Molly?" And then, agitatedly, lover-like, "Are you all right? You're not hurt?"

"Oh, it wasn't an accident, dear. Heart failure, I think. Zip is here now. He came a few minutes ago. We've just heard."

"You're sure you're all right?" he interrupted. "You're telling me the truth, Molly?"

"Jack, darling, of course I'm all right! But poor Ruth. And poor Zip."

She choked back tears, the feeble impulse of women to be weak when they would be strong.

"Poor Ruth!" he repeated. "Lord, that's tough! How's Zip taking it?"

"Oh dreadfully," she moaned. "He's simply all broken up . . . Listen, Jack, I want you more than I've ever wanted you before. Can you come over?"

"Why, of course I can. Surest thing in the world, sweetheart. I can make the midnight."

"But it's after 11 now," she reminded him.

"That's all right. How long do you think it takes to check a clean shirt in a bag. Listen now, sweetheart, get to bed as soon as you can, and get a little sleep. You must be all shot, you poor little kid. Why don't you get hold of Bob Newton?"

"Bob's here now. Bob and Rita."

"That's good," he approved. "They'll take Zip off your hands. Take good care of my girl, won't you, Molly? Do it for me, sweetheart. Don't stay up all night. Let Bob take care of things. Will you be able to sleep, dear?"

"Oh, yes," she lied. "I will. And I'll meet your train in the morning. Hurry now, or you'll miss it. Listen dear, can you hear me? I love you."

"And I love you!" he cried. "More than ever, Molly. I was thinking about you when the phone rang. I don't ever do anything but think about you, I guess. It's wonderful to hear your voice. Do you honestly love me as much as you used to?"

"That's good," he approved. "I'll tell you tomorrow. Don't miss your train. Goodnight, dear."

She slipped the receiver slowly in place. One of her dearest friends was dead. And she could still talk about love! There was something wrong with her? Something cold and heartless? Were other people like that? "Tomorrow!" her heart kept singing. "Tomorrow!"

But she thrust the anticipation from her. And conjured, instead, a vision of Ruth.

Bob and Rita took Zip home with them. And Molly, when they had gone, found the memory book of her Freshman year, with all its heart-wrenching memories of Ruth. For she and Ruth had roomed together that year, and that was the year Zip gave Ruth the moonstone she called her engagement ring. All night Molly sat with the book across her knees.

When dawn came, she put coffee on, and while it was boiling, she took a shower. Then she lay quietly down, not to sleep, but to relax, so that Jack would not know she had not slept all the night.

When his train came, she was waiting.

her hair and thought of what it was that Tristram had whispered to his Isolde. . . . your gold hair That is not gold. Only God knows, who made it.

"What color it is exactly." Bob and Rita, and Molly and Jack, had bought a blanket made of roses, and throw over the casket. And Zip had filled her arms with sweetheart roses. The people from upstairs came down, and a few curious neighbors called. Their faces were long, and their words were right. And the woman from upstairs wrung her hands, and called Ruth "the poor" (Continued on page 8.)

Longer Life Greater Economy.

due to moderate engine speed

HOURS of steady high-speed driving are no hardship for the Pontiac Big Six. For its big 60-horsepower engine develops maximum power and road speed at extremely moderate engine speed.

The result is, of course, less wear on moving parts at all times . . . longer life for the engine . . . and less expense per mile of driving. And this is only one reason why the Pontiac Big Six is so unusually long-lived and economical.

New-type rubber mountings, which insulate the engine from the frame, cushion it also against road shocks. The crankshaft has a harmonic balancer to counteract torsional vibration. Crankcase ventilation prevents water vapour from diluting the engine oil. And, as an added factor of economy, the strongly-built wood-and-steel bodies by Fisher, preserve their beauty for years, and thus result in larger trade-in values.

There is much more to learn about the Pontiac Big Six. See it. Drive this "finer car with a famous name." Then, if you wish, use the G.M.A.C. deferred payment plan . . . designed by General Motors for your convenience.

6 Features of the New and Improved Kotex

1. Kotex is soft—Not a deceptive softness, that soon packs into chafing hardness. But a delicate, lasting softness.
2. Safe, secure . . . keeps your mind at ease.
3. Kotex is lighter and cooler than cotton, yet absorbs 5 times as much.
4. In hospitalities . . . Kotex is the identical material used in 50% of Canada's leading.
5. Deodorizes, safely, thoroughly, by a patented process.
6. It is easily disposed of. No unpleasant laundry.

Shot from Guns

125 million food cells exploded

That's what makes Puffed Grains crisp ... delicious ... virtually as nourishing as hot cooked cereals

YOU may have wondered why Puffed Wheat and Puffed Rice are so light and crunchy ... so meltingly good to eat.

Here's the secret. They are made by an utterly different process from all other ready-to-eat cereals. Grains of wheat and rice are sealed in bronze guns. The guns are revolved in fiery ovens. In this terrific heat the natural grain moisture in each tiny food cell expands into steam.

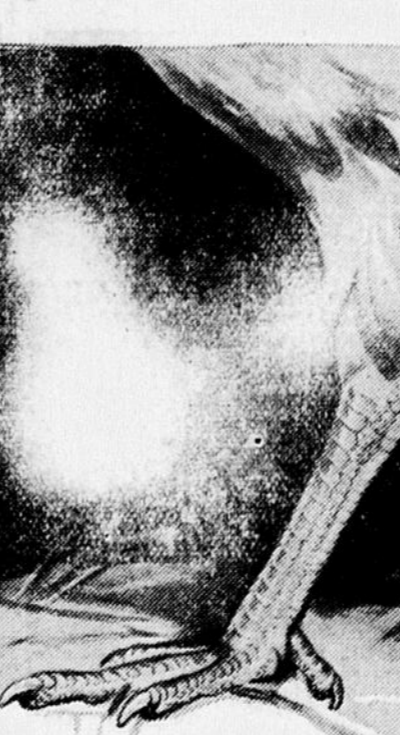

When the guns are fired, 125 million explosions occur in each grain. Every tiny food cell is completely broken up. (Just as it would be from long hours of cooking.) Hence every particle of food is completely digestible. This is why Puffed Wheat and Puffed Rice are rated as virtually as nourishing as hot cooked cereals.

When these grains come forth in showers from the guns, they've been puffed to 8 times normal size. They're crisp, fragile, crunchy ... deliciously good to eat. They taste like sweet new nuts. Like fresh buttered popcorn. You'll say you never before dreamed that wheat and rice could be so meltingly good to eat.

Don't neglect to give your family this more delicious ... more richly nourishing cereal. Order Puffed Wheat and Puffed Rice from your grocer today.

QUAKER PUFFED WHEAT AND PUFFED RICE

WHAT A DIFFERENCE 90 DAYS MAKE!

TODAY A TODDLING CHICK ... in 90 days a proud pullet about to lay. There's something to think about! Tiny bones and little muscles have grown several times in size ... a delicate fuzz has sprouted into hundreds of feathers ... a chick weighing grams has grown into a pullet weighing pounds ... all in 90 short days!

A wonderful change ... and only one thing can do it ... good feed! This year consider Purina Startena Chow (mash) and Purina Chick Chow (scratch) or All-Mash Startena Chow for the first six weeks ... and then Purina Growena and Purina Intermediate Hen Chow until your pullets are laying at 16 weeks.

Put these Chows before your chicks. You will see pullets that are built right ... pullets that will lay eggs aplenty in fall and winter when eggs are always worth good money.

"THE SHINING TALENT"
The neighbors brought in a cold ham and some potato salad, and their voices quivered with the proper degree of feeling.
And Molly, though she despised herself for the thought, wondered if she felt an exhilaration in others' troubles. Those people, for instance, who brought the ham, and the woman from upstairs, also.
