A "Tarvia" street from the Line bridge to the northern limit of the municipality is in prospect. Mayor Holmes is interesting business men and property owners on the Main street in the project. His plan is to have the work done at the expense of private individuals, with the understanding that, if it should prove a success, the cost would be reimbursed by the corporation. "Tarvia" (tar road) is a petroleum product which waterproofs and solidifies the natural material upon which it is applied. It has been used in some Vermont towns with good results.

Arrangements are being made with power owners on the upper Tomifobia for flushing the stream and clearing out the pulp-wood next Sunday. Yesterday Mayor Holmes and Moses Raymond interviewed Messrs. E. A. Baldwin and T. E. Demick, having in view the object stated, and were promised cooperation. Besides the Baldwin and Demick ponds Tiltan & Raymond have a dam on Terrill brook in Barnston and the Holland Pond may be drawn upon although the dam is not in good repair.

Mr. Edwin M. Foss of Traverse City, Mich., has been visiting his brother, H. M. Foss of Beebe, after an absence of 33 years. Mr. Foss is in the Traverse Fruit belt, on the east shore of Lake Michigan, and is a large raiser of peaches and other fruits that are natural to this wonderful fruit section. Mr. Foss was a clerk in Rock Island when a young man. He worked for Orange Holmes and will doubtless be remembered by our older merchants. His home coming has been very enjoyable for himself and his brothers and sister. He has a brother at Montgomery, Vt., H. P. Foss, the father of the wife of Mr. Charles Hall, the partner of Col. C. E. Nelson, and Mr. Foss is visiting there this week, and will start from there for his Michigan home soon. He visited two sisters in Worcester, Mass., and there, two other brothers met him, Dr. W. T. Foss of Boston and F. P. Foss of Manchester, N. H., and they had a splendid reunion. It is quite unusual for so large a family to be living at their ages. Mr. Foss is a civil war veteran, served in Company B. of the 8th Vermont, the same company that Col. F. D. Butterfield served in.

Again last Saturday the Frontier Baseball Team saw its shadow and returned to its former hibernation. Barton performed the operation without administering an anesthetic, consequently there was some noise from the patient, notwithstanding the well known skill of the surgeon. Evidently the locals left their four-leaved clovers and horse-shoes at home, for luck was absent, the visitors alone having it. That is the history of the game; somebody must lose if another somebody wins. We are not going to waste time, paper and ink explaining how it was done, but must say that Barton played a great fielding game, for example, we drove a pretty one over the third garden, apparently safe by yards and furlongs, but Barton's giraffe, Dana, who has an arm and a paw that reminds us of a scoop net on a ten foot bamboo, and said appliance is always in the way when a likely and truly possible ball comes within a hundred feet, in the case we are talking about, said hand performed its function beautifully, but not for us. Deacon Barrows worked his sunny haw! haw! to our confusion. Uncle Gardyne played the first bag as if it contained one of mother's best suet puddings, his foot was always in it, and his mitt was as sure as a yale lock. The visitor's outfield was as far from a vision as the shingle of our childhood, which was one of life's stern realities, it was like the cordon of Thermopylae, an impassable barrier. Mr. Webster who tossed the berries to the "Deacon" was the greatest sprinter on the team, but he couldn't twirl with "Archie." About our part of the game, well, Archie had 13 of those items that help in a pinch, but the score was 10 to 2, we paid only 30 cents on a dollar, score talks. We play at Sherbrooke Saturday and may the best team win.

She was of an amiable disposition and pleasing manner and beloved by all who knew her. Was for some years organist at the Congregational services, was president of the Y. W. C. T. Among the post-offices designated at postal savings depositories is that at Lyndonville.

Howard K. Blair Camp, United Spanish War Veterans, has been instituted at Newport with 19 charter members.

The Rev. A. L. Edwards, of Cleveland, Ohio, who recently accepted a call from the Newport Congregational church, began his duties June 4.

A pure white albino woodchuck has been captured by Fred Perham, of Pownal. The animal is about as large as a man's fist and about as long as a hand.

Brownson council Knights of Columbus, named after Erastus Brownson, a famous Vermont scholar, has been instituted at Hardwick with 40 charter members.

Goddard Seminary, Barre, through the bequest of the late George Watson, of Reading, Pa., has received $500. Mr. Watson had no connection whatever with the school, except through a sister who taught there over a quarter of a century ago.

Middlebury College, beginning with the academic year of 1911-12, will institute a department of engineering. It aims to fit students who look forward to the engineering profession to enter the junior year in any technical institute of the first grade.

Col. Andrew C. Brown, of Montpelier, who has been ill some time, is still confined to his bed but shows remarkable vitality. Colonel Brown has been department commander of the G. A. R., is a member of the Loyal Legion, and one of the best known Civil War veterans in the state.

B. W. Firman, division manager of Marshall Field & Co., who died June 5 at his home in Chicago, was born in Huntington October 1, 1861, and received his early education in his home town and Wakefield, Mass. He had been associated with Marshall Field & Co. since 1897.

Out of over 100 hives inspected in Shaftesbury, J. R. Crane, state inspector of bees, found 75 per cent diseased, and in some instances in such a condition that destruction of the swarm will be necessary. Other apiaries in and near Bennington were badly afflicted with foul broods.

Postmaster J. G. Brown, of Montpelier, has received notice from Washington that the Montpelier office July 1 will be raised from a second to a first-class office. With the change Postmaster Brown will receive a raise in salary to $3,000. He now gets $2,900. The receipts of the office up to April 1 were $40,804.

George L. Darling, a graduate of Spaulding high school, Barre, and a son of Dr. George W. Darling, of South Ryegate, was awarded second honor in a class of over forty graduates of the Medico-Chi Dental College at Philadelphia, and was also awarded the Starr medal for having the highest standing in the clinical department.

In the death of W. H. Bishop, for many years editor of The Island Pond Herald, Vermont journalism has lost the devoted service of a true friend of social progress and state advancement. He was true to an honest conception of editorial responsibility, and he was always to be found where he was last seen.—Col. F. L. Greene.

The annual readjustment of salaries of postmasters in accordance with the amount of business done shows that Vermont salaries have increased $100 in Arlington, Barton, Bennington, Derby Line, Enosburg Falls, Fair Haven, Lyndonville, Montpelier, Morrisville, Northfield, North Troy, Pittsford, Readboro, Swanton, White River Junction, and Windsor, while in Orleans the salary increased $200. Seven towns showed a decrease, Albany, Bellows Falls, Middlebury, Proctor, Putney, and West Pawlet. Bellows Falls decrease was from $3,100 to $2,800.

Col. Joseph F. Scott, who has lately been appointed superintendent of prisons by Gov. John Dix, of New York, superseding C. V. Collins, is a native of Eden Mills, Lamolle county, and a graduate of Johnson State Normal school. He was for some years in charge of the state prison at Concord, Mass., but left there about eight years ago to take charge of the reformatory at Elmira, N. Y. For several years past, he has held the position of superintendent of reformatories in New York state, and is considered one of the most eminent penologists in this country.

Only four states in the union surpassed Vermont last year in the yield of corn per acre; only five states surpassed in the yield of oats per acre; only six states did better in the yield per acre of barley; only one state did better in the yield per acre in wheat; only seven states showed a better yield per acre in potatoes. These are from figures compiled by the state bureau of publicity and indicate that there is nothing the matter with Vermont's agricultural opportunities. Vermont's agricultural interests do not need protection from Canadian invasion half so much as a better understanding of possibilities and more intelligent and vigorous development of them.

VERMONT ITEMS.

In one hour on the last day of May E. P. Bartlett, of Amherst, Mass., made a record catch of fish on the shore of the Big Averill lake at Averill, (a post office in Norton), when he landed a one-pound salmon, one-half pound native trout, a 4½ pound salmon, and an 11½ pound salmon.

The Need of Capital in Vermont.

Although one of the smallest states in the Union, and one of the least rich, as well, Vermont turns out nearly nine per cent of the stone products of the entire country, being exceeded in that merely by the great and rich state of Pennsylvania. Who says, then, that Vermont is not a state of opportunity? With only 355,000 people and a scarcity of capital, it means that the state has splendid natural resources in order that it should attain such a high position in the stone industry. Given more capital, the production would increase and that increase in production would in turn, increase the population by attracting workers in the quarries and the stone finishing plants. A little old state tucked away up here in the remote section of the United States, almost crowded out and into Canada, in fact—what a record of advancement in the stone industry under conditions which have been not particularly conducive to development? If such a thing is possible with so comparatively little capital, it will be easily possible for little old Vermont to double its output with the incoming of more capital. And, too, instead of sending money out to the Western states, let home capitalists invest at home, thus furnishing the best incentive for outside capital to be attracted to the state's industries.—Barre Times.

Memories of Old Vermont.

Though Vermont was not admitted to the Union until 1791, there are 53 towns in the state that may or might hold sesqui-centennial's this summer, as The Montpelier Journal figures out local history. Such a number must presuppose very small beginnings and the closest calculations of dates, since Vermont at the beginning of the Revolution was but sparsely settled, and was claimed both by New York and New Hampshire. Not until after the peace was Vermont able to demonstrate that it owned itself, and was even then materially aided in the assertion of its claim by the payment of a "salutium" to New York to quit its title. Some of the towns dating back to 1761 must have been in that year of about the proportion of one log house. However, to a community bent on holding a sesqui-centennial one log house is enough.—Boston Transcript.

EMANUEL JONES' CONFESSION.

A JOURNAL subscriber has given us a copy of "The Sheaf," a religious monthly published at The Weirs, N. H., which contains this reference to Emanuel Jones:

The following is a letter from Emanuel Jones, who was disellowshipped in the September Sheaf.

Canaan, N. H.,
"I write to acknowledge that all that was said in The Sheaf was true, and I want to ask the public everywhere to forgive me for preaching one thing and living another. From the bottom of my heart, I ask you all to forgive me. I pray the Church of God that I may be forgiven for Jesus' sake and that from this day forth I may be His humble follower."
(Signed) EMANUEL JONES.

"I would say that the above letter was received by me October 9, 1910, and I give it verbatim.

"I will add that Emanuel Jones sent for me, desiring to see me. I am sorry to say that in my private talk with him, I could not trace any degree of godly sorrow, but a desire for reinstatement rather than a desire for forgiveness.

"I still feel to warn God's people against him until he shall be brought to genuine heart repentance.

"It is getting to be a common thing for Christian workers to do things that would make the world blush and then, turning, say, 'I will repent,' and expect to continue in the ministry.

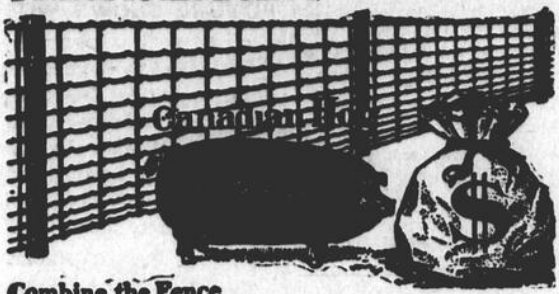

According to the Word of God, we should have a spirit of forgiveness toward all, and if a brother turns, saying, 'I repent,' he should be forgiven. I feel in my heart nothing but a spirit of forgiveness toward Emanuel Jones, but I do not believe that he or any other man should be intrusted with the gospel after he has been guilty of crime, until he has proven himself in such a manner that the Church of God can send him forth with their benediction and blessing.

"As the question has been coming to me from every side, 'Of what has he been guilty?' I will here briefly state: He has been guilty of unclean habits with young men, leading them into self-abuse, and this in homes where he has gone for the purpose of preaching to them the everlasting gospel.

"Is it not time to cry out against these things, and that we demand of every Christian worker that they be pure even as He is pure?"

ABOUT OUR NEIGHBORS.

Mr. John Camber "Sidehill Cottage" Magoon's Point, was in Stanstead on business Tuesday.

Mrs. Selby, wife of Rev. H. D. Selby died at her home, Caswell's Mills, Holland, Sunday afternoon, after an illness of about six months. It is understood that, in a weakened state of health, she fell prey to tuberculosis, which was the cause of her death. Deceased was a native of Barnston township.

T. C. Fletcher of Barnston is raising a round barn, seventy feet in diameter to replace several buildings burned in April. In the fire, which was caused by an over-heated windmill bearing, Mr. Fletcher lost one horse and a herd of cattle, including twenty-four already fattened for the British market. The loss also included an up-to-date equipment of farm machinery. The blow was enough to crush any ordinary mortal, but Mr. Fletcher has set himself resolutely to restoring the loss, and expects to have the new building ready to house this season's hay crop. The location is a good one, the high-drive being obtained without excessive grade. The windmill, which indirectly proved so destructive, was a particularly large one, and was used for pumping, grinding, etc. It has been replaced by a gasoline engine which is already doing duty in connection with the building of the new barn. Alfred Sisco of Coaticook has the contract.

FLANDERS-BULL.

The Free Press, Winnipeg, Man., June 14th, contains a report of the marriage of J. Arlington Flanders, from which the following extracts are taken:

"A very pretty wedding took place this afternoon in the Fort Rouge Methodist church, when Lillian Bower, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Manlius Bull, was married to Mr. John Arlington Flanders, son of the Rev. Dr. and Mrs. C. R. Flanders. The Rev. Dr. Cooke officiated, assisted by the Rev. Henry Irwin.

"The church was beautifully decorated with palms and ferns and pink and white peonies, the guest pews being marked with white satin bows and wild roses.

"Promptly at 3 o'clock the bridal party entered the church, preceded by the ushers, Mr. Albert Culver, Mr. Gardner Stephens, Mr. Percy Bull and Mr. Wilfred Bull, followed by the matron of honor, Mrs. W. B. Sterling; the bridesmaid, Miss Geraldine Stephenson, and the little flower girls, Miss Mary Waller and Miss Margaret Waller, and last the graceful bride, who was brought in and given away by her father.

"The bride wore a lovely gown of ivory peau de seiche, the skirt draped and finished with a long court train lined with ivory satin, the bodice draped with beautiful duchesse rose pointe lace over a shallow yoke of white point d'esprit. Her veil, that worn by her sisters at their weddings, was of tulle edged with honiton braid, and was caught in her pretty dark hair by a coronet of orange blossoms. She carried a shower bouquet of bridal roses and lilies of the valley tied with chiffon streamers entwined with lilies of the valley. She also wore the groom's gift, a beautiful pearl necklace.

"The ceremony was followed by a reception at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Bull, who received with the bridal party in the drawing room, lavishly decorated with palms and pink and white peonies. A marquee sheltered the bride's table, which was centred by the wedding cake and decorated with white blossoms. An orchestra, on the verandah, played soft bridal music during the reception.

"Mr. and Mrs. Flanders left on the 5:20 train for the south and on their return will occupy Mr. and Mrs. Waller's residence on Roslyn Road, for the summer."

The Journal extends congratulations and best wishes.

THE COLLEGE CLOSING

Good Work Reflected by High-class Entertainments—Fast Year a Record Breaker.

FUTURE GLOWS WITH PROMISE.

Stanstead College has just completed another year of fine achievement and record attendance. The annual faculty reception in the College parlors last evening brought to a fitting and brilliant climax the varied functions of the Commencement Week.

PUPILS' RECITAL.

The first of the students' recitals gave an evening of unalloyed pleasure to an audience that taxed the capacity of Pierce Hall. The major portion of the programme served to bring out to fine advantage the grade of work how attempted and realized by the Expression department, while the solo work and overtures represented a Faculty of Music that well sustains the standards of former years. The College orchestra proved itself a well-balanced organization and responded to the effective leadership of Professor Martin in some splendid effects in shading and interpretation.

The event of the evening was the presentation of a two-act comedy by the students of expression. Each member of a competent company added a distinct touch of life to a series of complicated and killing situations. From the decidedly feminine "Mr. Bob" (Miss Mills) who won the race, to the dignified Jenkins (Clifford Oughtred) who could stand a "horse but" "hobbed" to cats, each part was well interpreted. Miss Spencer made a winsome niece and William Paton a dashing and debonaire nephew, while Miss Vesoot as the maiden aunt with a penchant for cats, and Fred Montie as Brown, the man who came down, excelled in character parts. Miss Houston was convincing as the vivacious and stage struck maid.

A delighted audience went home with pleasant impressions of the quality of work in both departments and proud to see the College registering further advances in the great and difficult task of revealing and developing the artistic capacities of its students.

THE SUNDAY SERVICES.

The annual College service was held in the Methodist Church, Stanstead, Sunday morning, June 18th. Ideal weather, a commodious edifice tastefully decorated, a vast congregation fully representative of the entire constituency, an augmented choir with orchestral accompaniment, all combined to make a service that was a social delight and a spiritual inspiration.

The musical part of the service was ably conducted, and with Miss Jamieson at the organ, Miss Benjamin at the piano and Miss Redden at the violin, assisted by the student orchestra, greatly enriched the praise element in the worship.

A large united chorus choir sang Barnby's "O How Amiable are Thy Dwellings," and Rossini's "Inflammatus Est from Stabat Mater, while Miss Pierce, in her usual good voice, gave a sympathetic rendering of Back's "My Redeemer and My Lord."

Rev. W. S. Jamieson, Rev. J. G. Hindley, Rev. A. Lee Holmes and Principal Trueman were seated on the platform and took part in the devotional exercises.

The preacher of the Baccalaureate sermon was Rev. W. T. G. Brown, of Sherbrooke. Taking as his text II Cor. 4:18 he made an altogether convincing protest against the materialistic tendencies of the present age. These words of Christ, said the speaker, were the Christian philosophy of life. Material things are shadowy, unreal, evanescent. Spiritual things, though invisible, are vital, real, eternal. Christ not only preached this. He lived it. He was never impressed by the apparent grandeur of purely material things. Their seeming greatness did not deceive him. He saw in the magnificent Jewish temple something doomed for decay. It is ever so with all that is material. The only permanent greatness is spiritual. Art, architecture are only solid and enduring worth as they embody and express the spirit of man. Christ's judgments were spiritual. The temple was condemned because the spirit had passed out of it.

How is it to-day with our modern standards? Who are accounted great and famous, our millionaires or our educators, those who amass fortunes, or the men who do deeds of moral heroism and spiritual sacrifice? Remember, all we bring into the world is a possibility, and all we take out is a character. Compare Paul and Nero, first from a material point of view, then from a spiritual one. Or Simon Legree and Uncle Tom. It's character alone that finally counts.

He concluded with a searching message for the students urging upon them the life of sacrifice and consecration, the laying of our life at the feet of Jesus.

A service of song was held in Pierce Hall in the afternoon, which proved most attractive to all who love God musically. May their number never grow less.

The union service in the Congregational Church brought to a conclusion a memorable Sabbath. A congregation that completely occupied the building listened with evident attention to the earnest words of the speaker. Mr. Brown took for his text Matthew 13, 5-8 and made an eloquent appeal for faith as a force in life. There are two great facts to be reckoned with, human need and the helplessness with which God has crammed the world. The need for help is everywhere. Hearts are sore and hungry. The presence of help is everywhere. God is near. Faith is the factor that brings the two together. Faith brings God in His grace to man in his distress. We live by faith, not sight. This hunger of the soul is only appeased in God. Faith means the receptive spirit that admits God, uses God, enjoys God, is blessed and bleesed. Of all losses, the saddest is the heart that has lost its faith. Of all possessions, the most priceless is a living faith in God. The preacher urged upon the young people in his audience to enter life in the strength, hope and joy of this everlasting faith.

The music was a suitable complement to the rest of the service, the choir of the church singing the anthem, "Sun of My Soul," and Miss Pierce, the soprano soloist, giving a beautiful interpretation of Handel's "Come Unto Me."

The pastor of the church presided, the Rev. W. S. Jamieson offering the prayer and the principal of the College outlining the programmes of events for the week.

HOLMES MODEL SCHOOL.

The closing exercises of the model school were held Monday afternoon. The parents of the children and the friends of the school were out in good numbers and thoroughly enjoyed the programme that had been prepared for their benefit. The various grades contributed in plays and choruses. The French songs were especially popular and indicate the excellence of the work of the College in this language since adopting the new natural method of teaching. Piano solos, a reading by Violet Cutt and a violin trio by Masters Charles Charlton, Harold Merrill and Lindsey Hovey lent variety to a programme that gave the audience not only an afternoon's pleasure but an insight into the efficiency of the school under the present staff, Mrs. Holding, Miss Atkinson and Miss Tanner.

The prize winners for the year are: Grade I Elementary—1st Edith Muir, 2nd Arthur Fenderson.

Grade II Primary—1st, Stewart Rose; 2nd, Lindsey Hovey.

Grade I Primary—1st, Richard Millett; 2nd, Ella Farrow. Excellence in arithmetic, Helen Nason; excellence in attendance, Wilson Howe.

Grade III Elementary—1st, Byron Ellis; 2nd, Roy Fenderson. Arithmetic, Harry Rosenberg; spelling, Rex Nurse; attendance, Verlie Labaree.

Grade II Elementary—1st, Bernice Gibson; 2nd, Beesie Sissons. Manual arts, Jack Charlton.

Grade II Model—1st, Gordon Rose; 2nd, Pearl Fenderson; 3rd, Victor Sissons. Attendance, Ethel Merriam; literature, Melba Cairns.

Improvement in Penmanship I and II Model—Earle Howe.

THE ALUMNI SOCIETY.

A number of the former graduates, officers and staff of the College met in the parlors Monday afternoon to transact the preliminary business of the organization.

Officers for the ensuing year were elected as follows:

President, P. C. Duboyce, Cowansville; 1st vice-president, Chas. Howard, Sherbrooke; 2nd vice-president, Edson Place, Montreal; 3rd vice-president, Mrs. Chas. Maneur, Winnipeg; 4th vice-president, Miss Ethel Gale, Quebec.

Additional members of the executive: Miss Ruth Stevens, Mr. Fred Batchelder; secretary-treasurer, E. C. Irvine. Miss Flint and P. S. Dobson were appointed a committee to secure a complete enrolment of graduates. This committee bespeaks the hearty cooperation of all the alumni.

In the evening a banquet was served in the College dining hall. After the large company had done ample justice to a repast that was an eloquent advertisement of the College cuisine or the domestic science department (?) Toast-Master Gordon Sisco, very happily introduced the toasts and speakers. The King and The President was proposed by the master of ceremonies himself, after which P. S. Dobson, as the mouth-piece of the graduates, proposed the toast to the College. In a few well-chosen words the speaker reviewed the past, discussed the present and prophesied the future work and mission of the grand old institution on the hill. The Principal responded feelingly to the tribute paid himself. He spoke with deep emotion of the splendid support given the institution, of its glorious traditions and high ideals, its glowing prospects, its opportunities, mission and sphere of influence. In ten years, if growth continues at the present rate, there would be 1000 students at S. W. C. The aim of the College was to train young life to sacrifice and serve.

The toast to the Benefactors was happily introduced by the new president of the society, P. O. Duboyce, of Cowansville, in a speech that sparkled with wit and wisdom and an enthusiastic loyalty to the Alma Mater at Stanstead.

Mr. Beal, a former graduate and physical instructor, with warm, well-chosen words, referred to the guest of the evening, Rev. W. G. T. Brown. In a strong, hopeful, manly way the latter set forth the purposes and value of education. Education must broaden and save us from all narrowness. It must make us efficient in our life-work. The whole man is to be developed. The intellect must be quickened and trained, the heart made sympathetic and sensitive, the will strengthened and stiffened, the conscience aroused, the capacity to do intensified. The educated man must be able to think, speak, feel, do, lead. The work of such a school as Stanstead was simply immeasurable, but the crowning achievement is training young people to serve and save. Only as education becomes general can our nation be saved from the abuses that threaten her undoing. God help Stanstead continue to do her share.

The special committee of the alumni society then reported through Chas. Howard with the following recommendations:

(1) The establishment of a life membership on payment of $10.00.

(2) The undertaking by the society of the purchase of an organ for Pierce Hall, after consultation with an expert and the estimation of necessary provision and probable cost. A strong canvass of the alumni of five years' standing will be instituted at once and a hearty and loyal response is confidently anticipated.

THE SECOND OF THE RECITALS.

Another capacity house listened to the second of the series of entertainments, to the accompaniment of Heaven's scintillating and reverberating orchestra. Time forbids detailed comment on a programme in which every number possessed individual merit and the several departments again covered themselves with glory. William Paton's character reading, "Padre Angelo" was exceptionally good and the College is to be congratulated on its attempt to interest young men in the neglected art of public expression. The other readings were no less meritorious. Miss Houston again proved herself an artist in pose and poise and in her plucky recovery from one of those unaccountable lapses of memory that now and then baffle the most experienced speakers, while Miss Stevens' reading was a performance of unusual merit, a treat for the audience, a triumph for the reciter herself, a credit to the school. The Eastern Townships College of Music had worthy exponents once more in Misses Elliot, Spencer, Wark, Benjamin and

IN MEMORIAM.

In loving memory of Myra N. Woodward, who departed this life June 21, 1910, age 7 years.

Gone with us no more a share
In this world of busy life,
Early was her work completed,
Soon she passed from earthly strife.

Though we miss her among us,
On that bright eternal shore,
Yet we know that God so ordered
And our loss is but her gain.

By and by we hope to meet her
On that bright eternal shore,
Where there will be no hours of sadness
And where death will come no more.

Air Ship Seen in Town

Don't be surprised to awake any morning and find a big airship "kiting" about over your front lawn.

It's only another proof that the scientific world do move.

But no more remarkable than the wonderful perfection in fence material that has been attained in the American Fence.

Imagine a fence made with such care that its manufacturers actually own the mines from which the metal comes so that they can guard its quality and reject all but the best.

Made by master workers, in the world's greatest steel producing plants and wire mills.

That is why the American Fence is the best for all purposes—the springiest, strongest, the best protection, the most weather-proof fence in the world. Made in many styles and weights.

Every owner of land should see the American Fence and learn its merits.

RUGG-HOVEY.

The following extracts are taken from a report of the marriage of Mr. F. S. Rugg, formerly of Stanstead, which appeared in the Sherbrooke Record, June 7th.

"The handsome residence of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Hovey, Queen Street, was the scene of a very joyful event yesterday, when the only daughter of the house, Miss Carrie Helen Hovey, was married to Mr. Frederick S. Rugg, son of Dr. and Mrs. H. C. Rugg of this city.

"The spacious rooms were beautifully decorated for the occasion with quantities of flowers, white and green predominating, except in the parlor, where large bowls of crimson peonies lent a touch of vivid color. The mantels were banked with blossoms, and over every door was an arch of white flowers and evergreen. At the appointed hour the young bride, leaning on her father's arm descended the broad oak stairway, which was wreathed with flowers and vines, and passing through the hall entered the morning room, an orchestra stationed in an alcove playing the exquisite bridal music from Lohengrin. She wore a beautiful Empire gown of hand-made Italian lace, over white satin, veiled in chiffon, with transparent yoke and sleeves, and pearl trimming. The wide folded girdle was of white satin and the long tulle veil, which fell to the end of the train, was confined by a coronet of natural orange blossoms, sent by a great aunt of the bride, in Preston, California, and lilies of the valley.

"Miss Kathleen LeBaron, in a dainty frock of white muslin, trimmed with lace and insertion, preceded the bride, who was otherwise unattended, carrying the shower bouquet of lilies of the valley and the pretty little ribbon-bearers were: Edith Whyte, Glace Bay, N. S., niece of the groom, and Virginia Loomis, also dressed in white.

"The simple ceremony was performed by the Rev. G. Ellery Read, Pastor of the Congregational Church, in the presence of a large number of friends and relatives, some three hundred invitations having been issued.

"Mr. and Mrs. Rugg left by the afternoon train, for the honeymoon, being accompanied to the station by many friends in automobiles and carriages. The wedding trip will embrace Montreal, Toronto, Niagara Falls, the Thousand Islands, and will close with a camping expedition, after which the young couple will reside in Sherbrooke.

"The presents, which were displayed in a special room upstairs, were unusually beautiful and numerous.

"The groom's gift to the bride was a diamond and sapphire ring, and to the young attendants he gave gold and pearl pins. The bride presented the groom with a gold watch and chain.

COLLEGE CLOSING.

Waldron at the piano, and the Vessot sisters, Miss McDowell and Fred Montie in vocal selections. The ever popular favorites, Miss Beatrice Webb and Master Thomas Wells and a string trio composed of Alma Alger, Olive House and Lindsay Gordon, reflected the excellent standard of work set by the instrumental department. It would be an easy and delightful thing to dwell upon the pleasing resonance of Montie's solo, the sweet blending of voices in the vocal duet, the improvement in strength of touch and delicacy of expression of Misses Wark and Benjamin. It is enough to say that a delighted audience are still singing the praises of a nicely varied programme, and rejoicing in the pride of the College in its staff and pupils.

ATHLETICS.

The pressure of examinations and the crush of engagements relegate athletics momentarily to the background, but even commencement week would be fragmentary and incomplete without its tennis tournament and baseball match. In the former honors were evenly divided between old boys and new, P. S. Dobson and W. Gibson lost to W. Howard and W. Astle—but the alumni had sweet revenge when A. McIntosh and F. Batchelder trimmed Messrs. McFadyen and Holden of the faculty in a spirited and dashing series. The following is a summary of the College finals. Gentlemen's Doubles: Howard and Astle defeated Gordon and Richardson 6-1, 7-5.

Gentlemen's Singles: Astle defeated Gordon, 6-4, 6-3.

Throughout play of a skilful character was in evidence and showed that the set of College courts had been well patronized by lovers of the queen of the games of the lawn.

Great interest centered in the baseball match. For some years the graduates have proven too much for the College team. This year Captain Richardson was determined to turn the tables on the old fellows. But Captain Batchelder of the veterans was equally anxious to have the old guard smother the babes, so there was bound to be some fun. The game drew a crowd of student rooters and a sprinkling of graduates. The batteries were Sisco and Parsons for the ancient and Gordon and Harper for the juniors. The game was close throughout and the ball played was snappy. After a keen contest the Old Boys found themselves outplayed to the tune of 3 to 1.

THE TWO NEW DEPARTMENTS.

The management of the College is determined to keep thoroughly abreast of the new signs and movements of the times in educational matters. In response to the new needs schools are beginning to recognize and satisfy the Stanstead College has inaugurated two new lines of activity, Domestic Science and Manual Training.

The work in these departments has now passed beyond the tentative stage. The work is no longer an experiment, but an assured success.

Sunnyside was the scene of animation Tuesday afternoon, when a great number of friends from near and far gathered to witness the results achieved by the classes in Domestic Science. An array of dainty cakes and other confections and some punch, delicious even in reminiscence, were the samples offered, and it these are indications of what the course accomplishes well, as one man said, "I wish my wife might be induced to attend." Prior to the serving of the delicate lunch by the young ladies of the classes, the visiting guests had been over to the Manual Training work shop to observe a class in action making coat hangers, bread-boxes and other articles. On the walls and side benches there was a fine exhibit of arts and crafts. Features of especial interest in addition to the drawings and examples of picture framing were a piano bench executed by Lyell Gustin, a glove box by Douglas Wells, an inlaid checker board by G. Sissons and a photo rack by Henry Taylor. Prominent also was a music-rack of Max Ferrill's, book stands by W. Pfeiffer and A. Vessot, and large bookcases by Harry Holding, Wesley Dorman and Frank Fawcett. Jardinieres were also everywhere in evidence, the work of the pupils of the model school. Expressions of surprise and admiration greeted the various results of the training of hand and eye. With an enrolment of about forty in the manual art and a dozen in mechanical and free-hand drawing in the initial year, with such a splendid showing of work done, with such a marked interest on the part of parents and spectators, this invaluable side of the education of youth is destined to have a definite and increasingly important place in the curriculum of the College.

CONVOCATION.

A most successful convocation summed up the results of one of the most triumphant years in the history of the College. After Rev. Jamieson had led in prayer and the orchestra had tendered their overture, the reports were submitted for the year from the respective heads of departments. Professor Martin reported for the E. T. O. M. in his usual terse, pointed and happy vein. It had been a banner year in every particular. 111 students had registered. They had outgrown their building in ten years and it was now a serious problem to accommodate the number of pupils. 28 candidates had been presented for examination by the high standards of the Toronto College of Music. All had passed in the practical subjects and 26 in the theoretical studies. The staff must be excused for the pride they took in this notable achievement. The one note of sadness was the impending departure of Miss Redden from the Faculty of Music. The staff could not but grieve over the loss of so efficient and gracious a teacher. Still hope springs eternal and consolation was drawn from the coming of Miss Smith, as successor, especially as she was a graduate of the same school as Miss Redden.

Professor McFadyen's report was equally noteworthy. The Bugbee Commercial was making rapid advancement. A registration of 68 this year meant a gain of 50 per cent. Indeed, the classes were so large that readjustment was necessary to furnish them adequate class rooms. 16 wrote their finals and received their diplomas in the commercial course, while five had done the same thing in the shorthand course. Six had been awarded the new diplomas issued by the B. C. for penmanship. Examples of the work of this class were submitted for inspection. The standards set for all of these examinations are high, second to none in this country or any other. Mr. McFadyen showed himself an enthusiast and expert in the sphere of commercial education. He spoke with conviction of the mission of such a school as the Bugbee Commercial in fitting for usefulness students whose earlier education had been neglected. The results were gratifying, sometimes phenomenal. This year one student with little or no previous schooling, had by his efforts and indefatigable energy, completed the entire work since January 8th. The school stands ready to do its utmost for students of this mettle and calibre.

The single regret of the year was the leaving of Mr. Holden, who holds a high place among his colleagues as a man and a teacher. His place, however, was to be well filled by Miss Luna Marsh.

Principal Trueman reviewing the year for the College as a whole, could not be less proud and optimistic than his splendid lieutenants. There had been a third more students in residence. Another dozen and the limit of accommodation will be reached. Extension is the order of the day, or students must soon be turned from the doors of S. W. C. No principal ever had a more efficient and willing staff of helpers than those who had worked with him last year, day and night (literally). Miss Atkinson was unfortunately compelled to leave, but a worthy successor had been secured in Miss Aileen Pomeroy. A great source of congratulation was the return of Professor E. C. Irvine of Sherbrooke, to take the chair of mathematics and science in the College next year. The past was secure, the present flourishing, and the future glowed with promise. For this he must thank a great board of governors, a splendid cooperative staff, responsive students and a congenial community. He had no fears for the College. She had a mission. She had the loyal support of true and tried friends and generous benefactors. When the time came for new plans and expenditures to meet imperative needs the triumphs of the former days would be paralleled by greater triumphs yet for the best is always yet to be.

The routine order of events was varied by contributions from the graduating class. Reginald Taylor sang the Song of the Sword in capitol fashion. The Senior Class Prophecy was in the competent hands of Miss Alice L. Cleveland, who as a prophetess far discounted the cryptic deceptions of the delphic oracle. She proved herself a seer who was not always serious, but whose predictions were sun-clear and as modern as an aviation contest. The roasts were done so brown that even the Board of Governors on the platform caught the force of several of them.

Clinton Manning as valedictorian read an essay on The Books We Read, which was a treat from a historic and literary standpoint. At the conclusion he referred with emotion to the joys, regrets and hopes of the class, who, come what may, would never do anything but love their Alma Mater.

THE AFTERNOON RECITAL.

A new departure and one that amply justified itself was the musical hour in the Methodist Church Wednesday afternoon. A large company gathered to hear the work of the students on the organ and were more than repaid after listening to the soft volantes played by Miss Bernadette Fregeau, Teilmann's sonorous Fesal March as executed by Miss Goldie Mills and one of Bach's preludes and a march of Smart's by Miss Frances Brevoort. All these artists acquitted themselves with credit and promise fine things for the future. The choruses of the young ladies of the College were altogether charming, especially in the exquisitely wierd and witching melodies and harmonies of the Indians lullaby. Miss Nelida Vessot recited The Romance of the White Cow and secured another triumph for the work in expression.

The programme was further varied by a solo of Miss Irma Moulton's, whose naturally sweet voice showed a distinct advance in quality and modulation. A violin solo by Lindsay Gordon and a piano duet by Misses Hall and Start rounded out a programme that further confirmed the favorable impressions created by the earlier recitals. The alumni and various out-of-town guests expressed themselves as envious of the citizens of the Three Villages who had such exceptional opportunities for musical and artistic culture and enjoyment. It is doubtful if the residents sufficiently appreciate these privileges that our neighbors so covet. It is gratifying to observe a new access of interest on the part of the townspeople this year.

A PEOPLE'S MOVEMENT—To Save The 'Witness'

Representative Citizens urge immediate co-operation
SHALL THE 'WITNESS' DIE? A Call to Arms

To the Good Men and Women of Canada:

The Proprietors of the Montreal Witness have informed their readers of their inability to continue publication unless its readers and those who believe in the Witness and the principles of righteousness for which it stands comes to the rescue and assist them to double the present circulation of the paper. The Proprietors have been losing many thousands of dollars yearly for many years, and at last find themselves quite unable to bear the strain alone.

The Temperance and Moral Reform Organizations of Canada are consequently faced with a moral catastrophe in the loss of this metropolitan and national daily newspaper, one which can ever be depended upon to be true to its own editorial teaching, whatever the cost, and to stand by the principles of righteousness and temperance, no matter how unpopular the cause or how powerful the influences behind the evils attacked, or how strongly entrenched, particularly in the metropolis.

On the contrary, should the Witness go under, every anti-Christian and anti-social force in Canada will receive a new lease of life, a new security of tenure, and a fresh impulse to press on in its brazen way, defiant and exultant—for one of the greatest single moral safeguards in the land will have been silenced. Not a liquor-dealer who will not rejoice, not a gambler but will gloat, not a trader in the vice who will not dance for joy, not an enemy of humanity who will shed a tear of regret.

Shall the Witness die?
Shall the Christian community acknowledge defeat?
Shall the cause of Temperance suffer this most deadly blow?
Shall the allied forces of evil triumph over the forces of righteousness?
NO! NO! NO!

It is the plain, imperative duty of the men and women who stand for Christianity, for Temperance, for Purity, and for Social Righteousness now to shoulder their own burden and help their comrades who have borne the burden of the battle against evil so long and so heroically.

Believing this, we the undersigned, entirely upon our own initiative, and without any prompting from the proprietors of the Witness, earnestly appeal to every good man and woman in Canada, irrespective of party or creed, to do something to save the Witness. There are two ways in which every individual can help:

(1) By subscribing for the Witness personally.
(2) By securing the subscriptions of friends and neighbors.
Everybody to whom this appeal is made, AND THIS MEANS YOU, can subscribe for the Witness and get one more at least to do the same.

Believing that there are more good people than bad people in Canada, and that the Christian public of the Dominion can be relied upon to stand by what it knows to be true and right, we, the undersigned, solemnly send out this appeal as a reminder of duty to be done, and earnestly urge all good men and women promptly and practically to help the Witness in its hour of need, by an immediate, strenuous effort to double its subscription list.

To induce pupils in our local schools to aid in this Campaign, I offer the following premiums: (1) For one or more new subscribers secured by any pupil of either of our local schools, a cash premium of one-fourth or Standard Books to the value of one-half of such subscription. (2) To the pupils in each school who secures the largest number of new subscriptions, a cash premium equal to one-third or to Books the value of two-thirds of such subscription. (3) To that pupil who excels all his competitors in all of the schools in securing new subscribers a cash premium equal to one-half, or books to the full value of such subscriptions.

The premium books will be the works of standard authors and will be selected by a committee consisting of Librarian Carpenter, Professor Dobson, Miss Colby and myself. The approved list of books will soon be published in the "JOURNAL." The premiums are open to the pupils of the Stanstead Wesleyan College Academic Department, the Eastern Townships College of Music, the Bugbee Business College, the Holmes Model School, the Ursuline Convent and other schools of Derby Line.

Notes and Comment

Of Interest to Women Readers

FOR THE GIRLS' ROOMS.

Curtains of Simple, Dainty Materials

That Add Much to the Charm.

The girl who hopes to fix up a room of her own this fall is interested in curtains. Whether at home or in boarding school the draping of windows adds much to the beauty of the room.

As the chief charm of a young girl's room is simplicity, curtains should be dainty rather than ornate.
They should also be sheer enough not to shut out the light and air, so important to a growing girl.

Curtains reaching to the windowsill are in fashion. They are provided with a narrow casing at top to run on a brass rod, and each side is finished with an inch-wide hem with a three or five inch hem at bottom.

When a window is sectional a single curtain is used on each section, or if there be a valance and outer curtains the lace ones are on the two outer windows only.

It is possible by watching bargains to get sets of net or Swiss curtains at reduced rates, but many girls who do fancy work prefer to work their own, or their mothers will do it for them.

Various materials are suitable for such curtains, from dotted or figured Swiss at 10 or 15 cents a yard to fish net or cotton brussels net from 25 to 50 cents a yard and a yard and a quarter wide.

For the average window two widths are needed, each half of the curtain being two yards and a half long, allowing for hems. As window frames differ, measure from rod to bottom of sill, and then allow enough for casing and hem. It is well to have the curtains a little long at first to allow for shrinking.

The trimming of the net curtains may be kept quite simple, or an elaborate design can be used across the bottom. This is more stylish than to have an all-around border effect.

Turn in the side and bottom hems, basting them closely. On Swiss this hem can be held by a heavy chain stitch or several rows of it. Use a heavy mercerized cotton, white or color, according to the embroidery.

Finish the hems of net curtains on right side, covering the raw edges with lace braid of a narrow cotton gimp. If not afraid of handwork the edges can be turned in and basted, then held by rope silk woven in and out the meshes with a bodkin. One row can be run on the side hems, while the deeper one at the bottom can have three straight rows, alternating with a wavy line.

Sometimes the figures are raised five inches above the hem, three inches used to a half curtain. They are divided by upright double lines of heavy outlining, finished squarely at the ends and reaching just above the hem and well above the lace motifs.
At the top of each of the double lines should be worked a pyramid of three large dots, heavy outlined and filled with darning stitch.

A simple border is made by cutting large circles from paper, setting them at regular intervals across the bottom of the curtain, outlining and filling in with a darning stitch. To make this design more elaborate the circles can be connected by lines of chain stitch running from the diameter across the entire curtain, and up and down. The latter lines join the hem on the lower part of the circle and extend an equal distance above.

Where outer curtains are used they should be of plain linen or cotton taffeta or soft silks if the net curtains are embroidered with colors. If all white, a figured cretonne to harmonize with furniture covering is lovely.

With gay outer curtains, the net ones need no decoration, save finishing the edge with a narrow lace braid or a cotton gimp.

Lace Curtains.

Lace curtains must on no account be ironed. In the country they may be stretched on the grass, pinning out every point; in the town a sheet spread on the carpet will be found more suitable. Dwellers in flats who find it difficult to dry such large articles will be glad to know that if the curtains are hung up wet at an open window overnight they will be dry next morning and hang more gracefully than if dried in the usual way.
Take them down next morning, fold lengthways and pass through the mangle. Feathers may be washed by placing them in linen bags. Dip and squeeze these in soapuds, rinse in clean water and dry in sieves in an empty room, turning the feathers frequently to prevent them sticking together.

A Marking Hint.

A good scale of sizes to use in em-broderying initials on household linen is as follows:

Tablecloths, letters two inches long.

Napkins, letters three-quarters of an inch long.

Sheets, letters two inches long.

Pillowcases, letters one inch long.

Other articles, size of letters proportioned accordingly.

Fashions in marking change, so that anywhere from half an inch to four or even five inches long is the mode, but these are safe and sure measurements for the conservative embroiderer.

PUSHING THE BARKENTINE.

What Happened When the Malwa
Had the Wabbling Habit.

"Talk about your out of the way places," said Captain Calhoun, of the British barkentine Malwa.
"Why, the Malwa makes a habit of taking cargoes to spots that are hardly on the map. I say hardly, because I doubt if one out of ten mariners can find Port Madryn, which most people would take for a Chinese harbor or the village of an Indian tribe. As a matter of fact, Port Madryn lies on the border of Patagonia, although it comes properly under the dominion of the Argentine Republic. We've been sailing for that port for several years, and so far we have escaped any trouble, although once we came near being caught on the rocks, far from human assistance.

"The Malwa had entered the roads near Puerto Madryn, as the South Americans call it, and we were feeling our way through the tortuous channels when my mate sang out that the Malwa seemed to be wabbling. I was in the cabin at the time and too much engrossed with a good dinner to feel the wabbling that the mate told me of.

"As I came on deck I, too, felt the queer motion of the barkentine.
There was a stiff breeze blowing across the channel and I ordered the canvas reefed so as to slow up a bit between the treacherous sunken rocks. But the Malwa just went ahead, lurching over one way one time and over toward the other side the next, like an intoxicated person, and squeaking in a queer way all the time, just like a human being in distress.

PUSHING A BARKENTINE ALONG

"Nothing that we could do with the sails seemed to hold the ship.
It looked to me as if the blooming rocks were rising and falling like a toboggan slide and keeping the Ma-lwa on the go in spite of herself, scraping her bottom as she went over the smooth but dangerous rocks.

"My mate, Carlton, told me he was beginning to feel queer like, and one after another the crew "got white around the gills." By and by the motion of the Malwa got me going, too, as the apparently crazy craft kept wabbling to and fro and sliding forward as if she was proceeding over greased ways instead of cutting deep water with her pretty bow.

"Something had to be done to stop the Malwa. There wasn't a man in the crew who was fit to haul a rope, much less to think up a scheme to save the barkentine from what appeared to me to be certain destruction.

"I managed to get a few of the men to get out some long poles, and four of us hammered poles down in an effort to stop the uneven progress of our vessel. Everywhere we felt rock, rock, rock, and the Malwa continued to wobble and webble.

At last we were unable to reach bottom, and a few minutes later we struck mud with our poles. None of us cherished the idea of being canal boat men on a barkentine. But with our poles, pushing against the persistent headway of the Ma-lwa, we certainly were no better than the crew of a canal liner.

"We brought up in a sort of cove and breathed free for an hour or two while I ransacked the charts to find where we were. The charts told nothing of the channel there, although I am sure that we had had an open sea at the same place before, from all observations.

"At Puerto Madryn where we finally made port, we learned that on the day we had been tobogganing through the rocky channel there had been an earthquake in Patagonia that had caused much destruction and I realized why those blooming rocks had been a-wabbling."

Big Tips for Little Favors.

"It is surprising," said a veteran Pullman porter, "how big a tip a porter sometimes get for doing a very little thing." He added:

"A passenger once tipped me extra because he said I did not leave his shoe strings coiled up inside his shoe after I had blacked them. He said nothing made him madder than to slip on his shoes in a hurry only to find that he had to take them off again because the shoestrings were inside.

"Ever since that time I have been careful not to leave the shoestrings inside the shoes I black, and more than one passenger has thanked me for being thoughtful. But it wasn't me that did the thinking. The tip did that for me and I never forgot it."—Leslie's Weekly.

Cactus Centre's Resolutions.

Down here in Cactus Centre we've been passin' resolutions—We're goin', past all doubtin', to be awful, awful good;

We have vowed there ain't a-goin' to be bullet distributions—Unless some trouble hunter don't behave as real gents should.

We have vowed we're goin' to show respect fer Judges in their ermine.

'Cause we see that necktie parties is a sign of lack of tact.
There is goin' to be no lynchin's—geol the cattlemen are squirm-in'—

Unless, of course, some rustler's caught red handed in the act.

We are goin' to cut out gamblin'— all the card brigade is only Too glad to burn the tables and to cut out all such play.

Unless it sorter follers that some homeless chaps git lonely
And we start a game, real quiet, jest to while the time away.

And so it is with drinkin', unless some one else is treatin'— (To refuse a social duty is offense
'gainst friendship's laws).

We're opposed to too much harshness —life's black medicine we'd sweeten—
So in each resolve fer New Year we've put in a savin' clause.

—Denver Republican.

Life.

We plough the field, we plant the seed,

We labor many a day

To cultivate the growing crop

And keep the weeds away.

We toil through summer's sultry
heat,

With weariness and pain,

And then some trickster comes along

And gathers in the grain!

We save our dollars, one by one,
With old New England thrift.

We gather up a hoard at last
(The process isn't swift)

And then we take it to the place
Where brokers "put" and "call,"

We buy some lovely gilt edged stocks,
And so we lose it all.

It makes no odds how hard we try,
Or work with hands and wit,
There's always some one standing by
To grab the benefit.

Still, it's your part to do your best
And labor like a man;

But watch the shysters mighty close.
And beat them, if you can!

—Somerville Journal.

The Mother Land.

(Reprinted by the Spectator from Henry De Vere Stacpoole's "Poems and Ballads," London, 1910.)

Since God to folks of six or seven Gave strength with which no king
may strive,
Since half the sweetness under heaven

He gave to people under five.

O'er wooden trees and toy church steeple
Burns faintly each man's morning star.

O Motherland whose laughing people
The dearest of all people are!

To death some fragment of thy stories
The beggar brings, and to thy song,
Behind the dying emperor's glories,
His old tin soldiers tramp along.

The Tailor.

Few footsteps stray when duck droops o'er
The tailor's old stone lintelled door;
There sits he stitching, half asleep,
Beside his smoky tallow dip.

Click, click, his needle hastes, and shrill
Cries back the cricket 'neath the sill.
Sometimes he stays, and o'er his thread

Leans sidelong his old tousled head,
Or stoops to peer with half shut eye
When some strange football echoes by;

Till clearer gleams his candle's spark
Into the dusty summer dark;
Then from his cross legs he gets down,

To find how late the evening's grown;
And hunched up in his door he'll hear
The cricket whistling crisp and clear;
And so beneath the starry gray
He'll mutter half a seam away.

—Saturday Review.

Ephemeral.

The interviews with men of state
In which dark things are hinted
Fill us with apprehension great
When they at first are printed.

But sunshine sends the clouds away.
The world has scarcely read 'em
Before the great man speaks next day

And says he never said 'em.

For economics let's adopt
A scheme of optimistics,
Nor let our joyfulness be stopped
By guesswork or statistics.

Though sad the words of mighty men,
There is no cause to dread 'em;
A few hours hence they'll speak again

And say they never said 'em.

HUMOR OF THE HOUR

Very Short, Indeed.

There are a lot of German carp in the tidal basin just below the Monument, and it is quite the thing in certain circles during lazy summer days to lounge along the parapet with a hook and line and angle for them. Sometimes the fisherman catches a fish.

The other evening when the hands of the clock were nearer 10 than 9 a pedestrian on upper Fourteenth street met a darky carrying a couple of large carp and asked him where he caught them.

"Down in de tidal basin," he replied.

"Do they bite pretty freely down there, or do you have to wait long to catch one?" inquired the pedestrian.

"No, indeed, sah; dey bites so swift yo' don't have ter wait no time ter ketch 'em. I kotch these hyah two an' I've been fishing down thar jes' sence 'leben er'clock dis mawnin'!"—Washington Star.

A FRIENDLY TIP.

"I'm in a quandary," said the fair maid.

"What's the trouble?" queried the Dook Snook.

"I don't know whether to marry a man whose tastes are the opposite to mine and quarrel with him, or marry one whose tastes are the same as mine and tire of him."

"Oh!" rejoined the Dook Snook, "marry a man with more money than sense, and let it go at that."—Philadelphia Bulletin.

Post Views Matrimony.

Edward Fitzgerald, the translator of the Persian poet, Omar Khayyam, was a more or less genial opponent of matrimony as a state.

One day he said to his friend, Miss Ellen Churchyard of Woodbridge: "Do you know, Nell, what marriage is?"

Miss Churchyard thought not.

"Then I'll tell you," said he. "Marriage is standing at one's desk, nicely settled to work, when a great big bonnet pushes in at the door and asks you to go for a walk with it."—Cleveland Leader.

SAFE-GUARDING THE PEARL MUSSEL

A Valuable and New Mississippi River Industry is in Danger of Extinction

STORIES OF SOME LUCKY FINDS

Scientists Take Up the Question of Artificial Propagation—Excitement Caused by Lucky Finds—Pearl Hunting Parties.

One of the tasks the Government has set for itself this summer is to find out why the pearl bearing mussels of the rivers of the Mississippi River are disappearing, and to try to propagate them. A commission headed by Prof. Paul Bartsch of Burlington has made a thorough search of the Mississippi and its tributaries to find out all about the mussel.

The mussel is highly regarded in that section of the country. Not only has it been the basis of a very profitable industry in the way of furnishing raw material for button making but it has enriched a great many who have merely taken up the hunt in the hope of finding valuable pearls.

Mussels have been found in large quantities along the upper Mississippi, but pearls are few and far between, due possibly to the fact that the temperature of the water is not so favorable to the propagation of the slug, the technical name for the pearl bearing secretions. Down along the White and Arkansas rivers hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of pearls have been found in the last five years. In Arkansas more than a million dollars worth of them have been unearthed in that time.

The pearl bearing mussel has been found now and then for years in the Arkansas rivers by fishermen who use it as a bait for the drum and the red horse varieties of the sucker family of fish. Several lucky finds of this character on the Black River started everybody hunting.

It was all a gamble. Only now and then a mussel with the precious stone attached would be found, but when once discovered it was well worth the time employed. Those who would not wade loafed around on the banks and bid against one another for the untouched shells brought in by the fishermen. Bathing parties and picnics at which the interest centered in pearl fishing were common.

Many stories are told of lucky finds. A trio of tramps one day tried to induce a ferryman to carry them across the river. He gruffly refused, telling them to go work and hunt pearls for a living. They took his advice, and in about three hours had gathered several bushels of shells. Sitting down to open them, they discovered in the fifth shell a pearl that sold for more than enough to buy all the early possessions of the ferryman.

A lad playing about a boat used for pearl fishing discovered something shiny on the bottom. He showed it to a man whom he met on the street, and cheerfully accepted $10 for the pearl. The man disposed of it to a friend for $50, who sold it later for four times that sum to a professional buyer, who is reported to have received several thousand dollars for it.

A business man who was on the verge of bankruptcy went down to the river to put in a few days fishing while he contrived to think some way out of his difficulties. On the first day he found three pearls that he disposed of for sufficient to pay all of his debts.

Pearls worth $900 were found one afternoon by three young Northern women who had accepted an invitation from a Southern hostess to join a bathing party with a pearl fishing attachment. The proper dress for these functions, by the way, was the ordinary bathing dress and broad brimmed straw hats.

Although the industry has waned greatly the last year, there are still numerous camps of fishermen to be seen dotting the river banks. The shallows were, of course, first looted, and nowadays most of the work is done in the deeps. For this purpose oyster tongs are used, and the work is kept up most of the year.

Dredging for pearls is very largely a business matter these days. Dredges are used on the deep places and on the bars the river bottom is ploughed up and the mussels brought in scows and opened. The shells are saved and sold to the button factories that have sprung up at every town and village. These shells more than pay the expenses of the work, and the pearls found are clear profit. Several comfortable fortunes have been built up in this way.

There are hundreds of button factories all along the upper Mississippi. Wherever there are sandbars and shallow places the work of dredging for mussels goes on. The supply is getting shorter every year, and to preserve the sources and propagate the mussel the last Congress was induced to make a liberal appropriation.

Shells by the carloads are shipped to the factories and there they are made into blanks and buttons. A big business in shipping the blanks to Germany has been built up in the last few years.

Rule Where Men Burn.

The rule of conduct on and beyond Eden, where men burn and die, is: keep the head cool and the stomach warm.

QUEER AUSTRALIAN GAME.

Native Pheasants and Quails—The Bustard—Soup of Kangaroo Tail.

It is on the billabongs and creeks of the back country that the best sport is to be obtained. In wet seasons ducks and teal are to be shot, and in the ranges between the Murray and the Murrumbidgee Rivers the "native pheasant," or mallee hen is to be found. This is a fine table bird, quite equal in my opinion, to any English pheasant. It is very shy and not easy to obtain. I knew a man who kept a few bloodhounds for hunting dingoes. He used to go into the scrub where there were mallee hens, put the dogs on their tracks and canter after them. The birds would sometimes rise in an open space in the scrub, and I have known him to bring down a brace of them when shooting from the saddle.

Good duck shooting might be had at the large water holes if it were possible to get near without being seen, and in the summer evenings excellent sport is obtainable by waiting for the bronzed winged pigeons, which at sunset fly to water. There is also a small quail, like the Egyptian, to be shot in New South Wales after harvest. There they strip the wheat, i. e., take merely the heads off with a stripping machine, leaving the straw. I have known half a dozen guns make a capital bag without dogs.

The Australian game bird, however, is the native bustard, or "wild turkey," as it is there called, although it is now very scarce except in the extreme back country. At one time it was common enough in Victoria, though now rare in that State, but on the back blocks of New South Wales it was plentiful a few years ago.

They were, nevertheless, difficult to stalk on foot, but, curiously enough will allow one to drive quite within range, and I have seen many shot from a buggy toward the Darling River. They are capital table birds, often larger than the biggest turkey one could buy at an English Christmas market. The flesh of the breast is brown and tastes like wild duck. Properly cooked the Australian bustard has hardly its equal. It prefers arid plains and I have shot them on the goldfields of Western Australia, where there is little or no water. They must be able to fly great distances, for one never sees them about the desert country of West Australia in the hot weather.

Imported hares are very numerous in certain parts, and the rabbit is ubiquitous. I remember an Australian squatter, who was ruined by rabbits, saying he had not much left, but he would be glad to subscribe a pound toward a monument to the idiot who introduced rabbits and foxes into Australia! Rabbit shooting is to be had almost anywhere, and as they are trapped and poisoned by the hundred thousand, perhaps they too may become extinct in time. No one who has not seen the rabbit warrens in the sandy back country of the Darling would credit the enormous number which exist there. I have passed miles of sandhills at dusk which seemed absolutely alive with vermin, as Australians call them. This reminds me of an Englishman engaged to cook for the shearers on a back station, who by way of a treat, made a rabbit pie for the men. He was nearly murdered for his pains! Australian shearers had not come, they said, to eat vermin.

Twenty or thirty years ago the back country squatters, in order to destroy kangaroos, used to dig huge pits at the corners of their paddocks, running yards of calico along their wire fences and then drive the kangaroos into the pits, clubbing and shooting them. In those days kangaroo skins were of no value; now that they are almost extinct, there is a great demand for them. The flesh of a young kangaroo is as good as means to be despised, and the kangaroo tail soup is a delicacy now hardly to be obtained.—London Field.

A Beauty Lover

For a long time Margaret sat by her desk, holding the letter in her hand and staring across the room at the mirror—the mirror that for seven months had been heavily draped, and that while she lived always would be draped.

The side of Margaret's face that was turned toward the window—and this accounted for the inconvenient position of her desk—was almost faultlessly beautiful. The profile just escaping too great aquiline, the smooth, creamy skin, the dark, finely drawn eyes, the intensely red mouth, the masses of black, wavy hair—every feature was exquisite and beautifully placed. The other side—but we will not look at Margaret from the other side. She had not done so herself for seven months, since the fire.

Let us look instead at that paragraph, so often reread, in which Dale had said he was coming home again. "My own, it will not be long now—has three years seemed long to you? You will not believe me, of course, but even art is no fit mistress for a man in love. Every picture I have painted has had some touch of you in it—even when my model was a chubby blonde. How I love that beautiful face, my Margaret! And now it will be only a month before I hold you in my arms and gaze my full. Don't say photographs to me—the profile view you sent me last was lovely of course, but it is the full face—it is you yourself, in all your beauty, that I want. The mere thought—"

Margaret shuddered. Her hand stretched out mutely for sympathy and closed gently over Floss's head. Floss was the perfect collier, so properly proportioned that she could have slept, if she had wished, in the blue ribbons she had won. And Floss was Dale's dog, left in Margaret's care while he studied art in Paris, and therefore doubly dear. Floss understood.

A sudden thought came to Margaret—the inspiration she had been waiting for—as she had vainly tried to answer Dale's letter. She wrote now feverishly.

"Dale, I have bad news for you. Floss has been hurt—a little contempts with a bulldog. She is the same old dear, but not beautiful any more, Dale. I hate to tell you, you beauty-loving man, but she has lost an eye, and one side of her face is a sight to dream of, not to tell."

O Margaret! Do not torture yourself further!

"What shall I do? Mrs. Pritchard still wants her. Will you keep her for the sake of old times and because she is so fond of you, or would you rather not have the spoiled fragment before you? Let me know before you plan to return."

And Floss watched with two perfectly good eyes and quivered an unspooled nose while Margaret sealed the letter.

Dale's answer was not long in coming. If you did not know Dale, it sounded cruel.

"Of course I'm all broken up about Floss," he wrote. "But I don't see what you can do but send her to Mrs. Pritchard's; naturally she will never lack for food and shelter while I'm here. But you know how really painful anything ugly is to me; and a spoiled beauty—it puts a bad taste in my mouth just to think of it. I prefer to think of the old girl as a memory, my dear; I don't want to see her wrecked self before me."

"But what do we care about Floss, dearest, when we have ourselves? I look at your pictures one by one, and think of the time, so soon now, when I shall possess the most beautiful thing in the world—"

Let us not tread any further Margaret's Calvary.

A month later, Dale landed; but Margaret had written, "This is going to be very hard for you, poor boy, but better now than later, no matter what you think of me afterward. It's all been a mistake, Dale; three years have shown me what I have tried in vain to deny—I don't love you enough to marry you. I am taking myself from your sight; I am studying nursing. Dale, and afterward I shall be where you will not find me. Remember that at least I have inspired so much of your best work, and think kindly of my beauty if you cannot of me. Goodbye, Dale."

And how could Dale know that the hand that wrote the letter had writhed with agony of the heart?—New York Press.

To the Editor of the Journal.

My attention has been called to an item in your local of last week to the effect that it was proposed to put poison in Crystal Lake (Hubbard Pond) for the purpose of exterminating the black bass, with a view to stocking the lake with trout. I beg to notify all concerned that the permission of the Provincial authorities has been obtained to use the lake as a supplementary supply of water for domestic purposes, when it becomes necessary to pump, also to state the municipality of Rock Island has transferred its rights and powers respecting water supply to the International Water Co., and that the Water Co., expects to expropriate the lake and so much land around it as the Provincial Board of Health may decide to be necessary for the protection of the public health. It is probable that the water mains from the lake to the pumping station at Stanstead Plain will be installed and this additional supply of water brought into use this season.

In view of these facts, it would be superfluous to point out how flagrantly criminal would be the action of those who should put poison into Crystal Lake to kill the bass or for any other purpose.

Canada's Gold Coinage.

For the first time in its history Canada is going to have gold coinage of its own, from its own mints and with its distinctive markings. Hitherto the English sovereign has been legal tender on the basis of $4.86. The American $5 and $10 gold pieces and their multiples have been legal tender at their face value. By a new convention between this country and Canada the gold coins of the latter are to be of exactly the weight and fineness of our own and to be interchangeable as legal tender. This is done under a constitutional provision adopted at a time when the United States had no metal currency at all.

Canada takes this action for her own benefit, and it is the highest tribute to the relations which exist between the two countries and which are certain to increase when reciprocal trade relations are established. If there was ever any doubt of the value of the new treaty, President Taft's speech in Chicago last Saturday night must have dispelled it in the minds of right-thinking persons. Neither nation is going to give up any special advantages or privileges of its own. That would be false economy. But a reciprocal arrangement which benefits both and injures neither is what is sought and what is certain to be secured unless selfish interests prevent. —Boston Herald.

How Far the Blood Travels.

The mileage of the blood circulation reveals some astonishing facts. It has been calculated, for instance, that assuming the heart to beat sixty-nine times a minute at ordinary pressure, the blood goes at the rate of 207 yards in a minute, or 9 miles an hour, 220 miles a day and 80,000 miles a year. If a man eighty-four years old could have had one single blood corpuscle floating in his blood all his life, it would have traveled in that time nearly seven million miles.—London Globe.
