"A Blot On The Face Of A City"

Toronto— (CP)—Toronto's Jarvis street, once the hub of the city's fashionable carriage trade, has spawned another public vice inquiry since earning a reputation as one of the wickedest streets in Canada.

The current investigation was given impetus by a series of articles in the Toronto Telegram entitled: "A Blot on The Face of a City."

In the copyrighted stories, authors Max Rosenfelt and Earle Beattie said an organization known as the Inglewood Construction Co. controlled a "slum empire" of 81 houses in the heart of the 12-block red-light district of which Jarvis street is the hub.

Police said a series of arrests following the appearance of the articles were the result of an investigation which had been going on for more than two months.

The Telegram series, detectives said, filled in a few gaps in their information and confirmed the existence of a Miss Johanna Nemeth, in whose name the properties are held.

Six carloads of detectives from the morality squad in a pre-dawn swoop arrested four men alleged to be principals in the Inglewood organization. Six others were held as material witnesses.

Stephen Feron, 41, Charles Ingwer, in his 50s, his brother William, and Linus Coghlan were charged jointly as keepers of a common bawdy house. The four were named as directors of the company.

William H. Langdon, crown prosecutor, told a preliminary hearing he would try to prove Feron, Coghlan and Charles Ingwer "control vice in Toronto with the assistance of powerful international interests." William Ingwer is considered a lesser figure in the case.

The investigation is the latest chapter in the colorful history of Jarvis street, which runs 14 city blocks from the waterfront to the fashionable shopping district on Bloor street.

The home of Toronto's best families before the turn of the century, Jarvis street in 1955 is a district where policemen patrol their beat in pairs.

Grey sandstone sidewalks, among the first pavement laid in the city, now are frequented by prostitutes, drug peddlers and addicts.

The history of the "slum empire," as related in the Telegram, is a tangle of court actions, property transfers and legal disputes.

In 1943, the Telegram said, Charles Ingwer bought his first house in the district. In 1949, the Inglewood Construction Company was established.

In its first report, filed at Queen's Park in 1951, the purpose of the company was stated to be "managing, buying and selling real estate."

Charles Ingwer was listed as president and secretary; Feron as manager and vice-president. Coghlan and William Ingwer were directors.

In 1953, the Inglewood Construction Co. was transferred to one "Johanna Nemeth, spinster," of Panama City, for $391,000. Both Feron and Ingwer claimed that since the property transfer they have been employees of Miss Nemeth.

Officials of the income tax department and local tax collectors thought "Miss Nemeth" was a mythical person until she was identified as a practical nurse, now living in New York. She is said to be Ingwer's cousin.

Last June, the tax department filed an order against Ingwer, "sometimes known as Johanna Nemeth" claiming he owed $138,000 in back taxes. The order made the properties liable to public sale if the money was not paid within a year.

After the appearance of the Telegram series, four of the Nemeth houses were sold for $50,000. Federal investigators immediately stepped in and took the money as part payment on that owed by Ingwer.

Two companies sued Inglewood for non-payment of bills last year, are seeking to have the transfer of property to Miss Nemeth declared fraudulent on the grounds it was for the purpose of evading financial obligations.

Crown prosecutor Langdon said 15 joint charges of keeping a bawdy house faced the accused, and expected more to be laid as the investigation continues.

For several years now, many

India Moves To Regulate Operations Of Newspapers

By PETER JACKSON
New Delhi — Reuters — The Indian government, on the basis of the recommendations of a specially appointed press commission, now is working out means of regulating the industrial aspects of the press.

Bills were introduced in Parliament recently to create the post of press registrar, whose duty would be to collect information on newspapers and their ownership; to regulate the working conditions of journalists; and to ban simple competitions with excessively large prizes.

Information Minister B. V. Keskar also announced that the government had accepted the principles of a press council, as suggested by the press commission, and of the regulation of the price and number of pages of newspapers.

Dr. Keskar told Parliament that the press had two aspects — first, as an industry employing large numbers of people, and second, as a means of expression. "When we try to regulate one aspect of it, we must be very careful that we do not impinge on the other; that is, that in trying to control the industry we do not also control the means of expression and the opinion that is going to be expressed," he said.

The proposed press registrar would keep a register of newspapers with their titles, languages, periodicity and circulation, ownership, and details about the editor, printer and publisher.

The press registrar would have the right to enter the premises of newspapers to collect relevant information. This proviso is similar to the powers already held for collecting commercial and industrial statistics.

The press commission recommended the establishment of a press council composed mainly of journalists to safeguard press freedom; ensure high standards; review developments which might restrict the supply and dissemination of news; censure "objectionable types of journalistic conduct" and build up a high professional code; study monopolistic developments and suggest remedies; review the ownership and structure and its effect on the performance of the press; and to publish reports.

The commission recommended that the council should have statutory powers to protect both it and its members from "the threat of legal action from those whom it seeks to punish by exposure."

These recommendations, already accepted in principle, are likely to form the basis of legislation. In Parliament, many members said that the commission's recommendation that at least 13 of the 26-member council be journalists should be amended and that more journalists should be included. The other members proposed were representatives of proprietors, universities and literary bodies, under the chairmanship of a High Court judge.

The number of pages in newspapers in relation to the price also would be regulated by the government, with the aim of protecting smaller newspapers from competition by big, established newspapers with large circulations and which could sell at low prices to undercut smaller rivals.

Dr. Keskar said the purpose was not to restrict press freedom. "It is restriction on the number of pages, and not on the views expressed. One can abuse as well in eight pages as in 10 pages."

Recently, the government announced it had accepted the press commission's recommendation that foreign newspapers should not be allowed to print editions in India. This decision was quoted in turning down the application of the New York Times to print an international edition in New Delhi.

Dread Mau Mau Movement Said Near Collapse

Nairobi, Kenya. — (Reuters) — After three years of atrocities, authorities of this British colony say the Mau Mau movement in Kenya is dead as an active force.

The 3,000-odd terrorists still at large, mostly in the forests, are faced with the likelihood of dying by a bullet or starvation.

Some are surrendering. They have been doing so in trickles and spurts since the Kenya government's surrender terms were withdrawn July 10. Some are undoubtedly trying to slip back to the reserves to lie low. For the majority, the outlook seems hopeless.

Since the emergency was declared in October, 1952, the government has waged a bitter campaign against a fanatical and bloodthirsty movement which set out to sweep the white man from East Africa.

Mau Mau leaders exploited the tribesman's fear of witchcraft to bind him—irrevocably, they hoped—by an elaborate system of oaths. To break the oath was to bring speedy death. The aim was to trap the whole of the Kikuyu tribe, and to a lesser extent the Mchuru and Embu tribes, in a lust for killing.

But the Mau Mau lost the battle, first for the lives and guns of the whites and secondly for the minds and hearts of the tribes.

Lack of food, no external support and limited space for hiding and resting all contributed to grind down Mau Mau to today's "hard core" of desperate men, dwindling steadily through death and desertion.

Gangs which used to be 150 strong now are down to 12 and 20 men. One Mau Mau gang rarely knows much about the others.

Catching these men, or even catching sight of them, thus becomes increasingly difficult. Some officers in the forest admit that they often think intelligence estimates of terrorist strength are too high.

Do-It-Yourself Trend Appears In Home Nursing

Calgary — The "do-it-yourself" idea has spread to nursing, a Red Cross official said here.

Miss Kathleen De Marsh, director of nursing services for the Canadian Red Cross, said the trend is towards encouraging people to learn basic nursing.

"The trend began some three years ago in Newfoundland, where home nursing courses were initiated," she said. "Possibly because of the 'help-your-neighbor' spirit of Newfoundland, the idea caught on there like wildfire.

"Already, some 1,000 nurses trained in the special courses are serving as volunteers in Newfoundland homes and hospitals."

Courses now being arranged across Canada give students 28 hours of instruction, either in the basic care of the sick, communicable diseases, care of mother and child, or care of the chronically ill, convalescent or aged.

Some of the courses have been taken by young men or boys who want to learn something new or have a sick member of the family to look after, said Miss De Marsh.

"We have some scepticism about the courses among doctors and others who distrusted something new," she said, "but most of them have been won over."

Seek To Recall Glories Of Vanished Indian Race

By GERALD FREEMAN
Canadian Press Staff Writer

St. John's, Nfld.—The Beothuck Indians of Newfoundland were exterminated before 1830. It was a "triumph" for the white man.

The Indians were in the way of the settler and had learned to despise them. Europeans who frequented the shores of the island in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries had shot them down on sight and the French even placed a bounty on their heads.

The Beothucks never took to firearms. They had only primitive weapons—clubs or bows or axes, so the odds were heavily against them.

Rivalry sprang up around a man's Beothuckkilling ability. Neil Ross, a north shore trapper, claimed more than 100. A man named Rogers had more than 60, but the records are not complete.

The book has been closed on the Beothucks for 125 years. Now a National Sites and Monuments board announcement recalls the blackest chapter in Newfoundland's history.

The memory of Nancy Shanawdithit, last of the Beothucks, will be perpetuated by a plaque in the museum at St. John's. It will hang near a case containing the last reminders of her people: Arrowheads, knives and bones.

Before John Cabot discovered Newfoundland the Beothucks were a happy, populous people, strong of body, quick of mind. Historians say they were relatives of the Algonquians and had customs similar to the mainland tribe.

They lived in plenty. Salmon and trout abounded in rivers and lakes, cod fished along the coastline. Moose, caribou and reindeer herds lived in the interior and there was an abundance of wildfowl. The Beothucks lived simply and peacefully off their surroundings.

After Cabot, came Gaspar Corteal. He captured fifty Beothucks and took them back to Portugal as slaves.

John Guy came next and made friends with the Beothucks of Trinity Bay in 1612. He gave them presents and promised to return.

The following year a ship appeared in the bay, the Indians gathered on the beach to welcome it, and were cut down by cannon fire. It was not Guy's ship.

When settlers came they treated the Indians brutally and killed them off. The shocked Beo-thucks retaliated, and were branded cruel and treacherous.

Micmac Indians found their way to Newfoundland from Nova Scotia and sided with the whites in the slaughter. When Beothucks tried to trade with the whites, Micmacs often killed them and sold the furs themselves, with the white man's blessing.

No moves were made to save the Indian tribe until late in the 18th century when they numbered in the hundreds. By then they were a sick, frightened people, half starved and continually on the move, confined to the deep woods.

An expedition by a party from Twillingate early in the 1800s captured a Beothuck girl known to the whites as Mary March. She was taken to St. John's and a woodcut shows her a beautiful, fine-featured woman with big, sad eyes. She died on a ship taking her back to her people.

The next Beothuck to arouse interest was Shanawdithit herself. She was among a group of five miserable Indians found by trappers on the shores of the Bay of Exploits. The trappers nonchalantly shot a man and woman and took Shanawdithit, her mother and older sister to Twillingate.

The other women died, but Shanawdithit worked as a domestic for a magistrate for five years after an unsuccessful attempt to find her people again. She was 22 years old when taken, a handsome girl nearly six feet tall with a shy, bright smile.

She took her dependence gracefully, and remained friendly but aloof. She scorned white suitors.

Later she was taken to St. John's where she developed tuberculosis.

Expeditions which set out to find the rest of her people discovered only empty wigwams and rotting canoes.

The Beothucks died with Shanawdithit in the autumn of 1832. She was buried in a St. John's graveyard.

Britain Planning Drive On Canadian Mine Market

By ROBERT RICE
Canadian Press Staff Writer
London — Britain's producers of mining machinery now have a better idea of the Canadian market—and there's a good chance they'll try harder to crack it.

But it will be a tough job. Canada buys 90 per cent of her mining equipment—crushers, drills, conveyors, concentrators—from the United States. Less than five per cent comes from Britain.

Yet Britain has a great deal to offer. A three-man Canadian mining mission, headed by Deputy Mines Minister Marc Boyer, toured 39 British mining equipment factories, and talked with more than 75 mining equipment manufacturers.

The Canadians were surprised by the equipment variety, high quality, and prices from 10 to 20 per cent lower than the U.S. At the same time, Britons were picking up details about agents, development possibilities, sales approaches and so on.

The Dollar Exports Council arranged the Canadian visit, latest in a series of missions brought to the U.K. with the aim of further Anglo-Canadian trade understanding. Pulp and paper manufacturers and British Columbia fisheries came across for a look. Now the Council would like to have Canadian lumbering interests.

It's all part of the council's plan to open as wide as possible the doors to trade in the keenly competitive dollar market. Sir William Rootes, head of the Council, says the whole purpose of having the Canadians across was to encourage two-way trade. But Britain did not want "sentimental charity trade"—a veiled criticism of British exporters that they seemed to expect orders to come to them without any effort on their part.

Boyer told British newspaper men that if Britain wants to sell in Canada, she has to be persistent and aggressive. "You have to prove your advantages," he said.

Another mining official on the mission, Tom Little, mine manager of Noranda's Waite Amulet mines, pointed to Britain's aviation industry as an example of forthright salesmanship. "They are even selling to the Americans—in their own market," he declared.

A spokesman for the Dollar Exports Council, who accompanied the Canadian group through Britain, said he expected greater effort from British firms—along lines suggested by the Canadians—to break into the market now cornered by American business. "And I think, too," the spokesman said, "that there will be greater understanding in Canada of exactly what we can offer in the way of machinery."

SUTTON JUNCTION—

The Hot Dish Supper sponsored by the St. Aedens Guild was a great success. Mr. Maurice Smith won the quilt which was raffled at the supper. The Guild meets on November 9th, at the home of Mrs. William Duffin.

Miss Merle Draper, who has been appointed Record representative at Sutton Junction, will be pleased to forward news, subscriptions, renewals, also paid notices.

Marriages

SERGEANT—JACKSON

Colebrook, N.H. — The marriage of Miss Rita Jackson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Arnold Jackson, of Canaan, Vt., and Mr. Osmond Benjamin Sergeant, of Drummondville, Que., son of Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Sergeant, of Sherbrooke, took place Saturday, October 29, at half past two o'clock, in Trinity United Church, the Rev. Oscar M. Polhemus officiating, assisted by the Rev. Fred W. Weimer. The wedding music was played by Mrs. Fred Weimer, and the soloist, Miss Helen Hubbard, of Houghton College, Houghton, N.Y., sang "O Perfect Love," "My Pledge and Savior" and "Like a Shepherd Lead Us." White chrysanthemums were used as decorations, and the pews reserved for the guests were marked by nosegays.

The bride, given away by her father, wore an original model gown of imported lace and crystal silk, fashioned with a tight-fitting bodice of lace having a nylon tulle yoke and Queen Anne collar, which were edged with lace appliques and long sleeves extending in points over the wrists, the bouffant skirt falling into a Chapel train. Her veil of tulle illusion was held by a coronet of iridescent sequins and tiny pearls and she carried a semi-cascade bouquet of gardenias and stephanotis, centered with an orchid.

Miss Lola Jackson, as maid of honor for her sister, was in a ballerina length gown of avocado green faille taffeta, styled with a twin-petal neckline accented with brilliant and a skirt of unpressed pleats. She wore a matching bandeau and carried a semi-cascade of two-tone poms.

Mrs. M. W. Harbison, of Wyandotte, Mich., and Miss Esther Jane Carrier of Houghton College, Houghton, N.Y., wore russet frocks and carried bouquets identical to that of the maid of honor, and wore bandeaux to match their gowns.

Misses Bonnie and Connie Jackson, nieces of the bride and her flower girls, were in floor-length bouffant frocks of gold colored taffeta, designed with gold necklines and collars, short puff sleeves and corded piping trimming the gathered sections of the skirt. They wore black bandeaux to match their ribbons and belts and carried nosegays of two-tone poms.

Mr. Victor Smalridge, of Greenfield Park, Que., acted as best man for Mr. Sergeant, and the ushers were Mr. John Rogers and Mr. Daniel Chiarelli, both of Montreal.

More Of Dior

London — (Reuters) — "Aurora borealis" is the latest thing in multi-colored stones for costume jewelry.

It is featured by Christian Dior in his winter collection in an antique silver setting for a set comprising ear studs, necklace, bracelet and brooch.

The stone itself appears at first sight to be a cold blue, but changes in different lights through green to warmer tones of topaz.

Another innovation by Dior designed to broaden the coming winter is a musical fob for wearing in the lapel of coat or jacket. In Victorian style, with a large Rhinestone set in pearls on the outside, it contains a tiny musical box. This can be wound up and set playing at the wearer's will. There is a choice of two tunes.

A third novelty introduced in this collection is the river pearl, imitating the Tudor fresh water pearls which used to be fished out of the Thames. These pearls have a fine finish and satin-like texture, reflecting iridescent hues, which distinguish them at once from salt water pearls.

bride, wore a jacket dress of turquoise faille trimmed with matching lace, with black accessories and a corsage of pink roses.

Mrs. Sergeant, the groom's mother, was in a dress of wine faille taffeta and she wore a matching hat, black accessories and a corsage of yellow roses.

The reception was held in the church parlor, where the bride's table was centered with the three-tier wedding cake, surrounded at the base by a wreath of myrtle and daisy poms, flanked by white candles and an autumn flower arrangement.

Later Mr. and Mrs. Sergeant left on their wedding trip to southwestern New York, the bride wearing a brick red tweed suit with black accessories and a white orchid corsage.

The bride is a graduate of Houghton College, Houghton, N.Y., and of Asbury Theological Seminary, Wilmore, Ky. Prior to her marriage, she was a member of the faculty of Houghton College. The groom attended Bishop's University and the University of Louisiana State Annex.

Out of town guests were from Montreal, Drummondville, Scottsboro, Asbestos, Bishopton, Sherbrooke, Lennoxville, Coaticook, Greenfield Park, Verdun and St. Lambert, Que., Houghton, N.Y., Belfast, St. Johnsbury, Newport and Norton, Vt.

Mr. and Mrs. Sergeant will take up residence at Drummondville, Que.

Teens Treat Skin With Care

By ALICIA HART
NEA Beauty Editor

It's time to get some of the misconceptions about blackheads cleared up. They're not an attractive feature of the skin and certainly no one is eager to chat about them. But teenagers are often bothered by them and sometimes their treatment of the condition is motivated by their lack of knowledge about them.

Blackheads are not really dirt settling on the outside of the skin. They are made of oil that was on its way out of the body by the route of the hair follicle when it got stalled, hardened and dried. The dark color is the chemical darkening that takes place when the oil is exposed to air for long periods of time.

Blackheads can be part of acne, be associated with dandruff, poor diet and poor skin care. But blackheads aren't some horrible mark of guilt. Pimples can come from tension of some sort, but blackheads don't.

Squeezing blackheads with the fingernails is not a good idea. It damages the skin tissue and makes the area sore and a good breeding ground for pimples.

Creams, oils and unguents, which can help pimples, can't help blackheads, since they are a condition in the skin, rather than on it.

The idea of drawing blackheads out with vacuum is impractical.

If you have a blackhead and you want to get rid of it, first buy a blackhead remover at the drugstore. It's a small metal bar with a tiny hole at each end. Some come on the handle ends of tweezers.

Then steam your skin with a hot, wet towel. Do it for about 10 minutes, rewetting the towel as it cools off. This opens the oil glands of the skin and softens the oily plug.

Then press the blackhead of the moderate pressure, it will be pressed out through the hole. It's painless and won't damage the skin. After each time the remover is used, it should be washed in hot soapy water.

Doughnuts Are Favorites With Or Without A Hole

Did you ever stop to wonder how the doughnut got its hole? "Doughy Nuts or Balls" were of course well known in English coffee houses . . . but it took a practical Maine sea captain, Hanson Gregory, to give the doughnut its hole-in-the-middle shape. It happened this way. Gregory used to serve "Doughy Balls" to the sailors on the bridge, and the sailors often stuck the doughnuts over the spokes of the ship's wheel until a high wave passed. Gregory, who obviously abhorred waste, ordered the doughnuts to be baked with a hole to fit the spokes . . . and ever since, our doughnuts have had a hole in the middle.

If you've never made doughnuts, perhaps you'd like to try making some of both kinds . . . with the hole and without. If doughnuts are one of your specialties, then you'll find that both of the doughnut recipes today, each flavorfully rich in butter—are different enough that you'll want to add them to your own collection. And whether you're a dab at doughnut-making, or came out with them seasons ago . . . you'll find them warmly welcomed by your brood.

Baked French Breakfast Doughnuts look just like a cupcake, and are not of course limited to breakfast eating—and belong to the real "melt in the mouth" family of quick breads. Very light and feathery—as they come from the pans they're dipped first in melted butter and then in a sugar-cinnamon mixture. Ummm! Potato Doughnuts make light, puffed, nicely browned doughnuts in the conventional shape, and believe it or not, making them begins with the creaming together of butter and sugar, then in egg and mashed potatoes before the dry ingredients and milk.

—And a piece of cheese—when the youngsters come home "after four." Make it doughnuts and milk when your teen-ager and friends get together with records or chatter. And make it doughnuts and milk or cider "after the game," or round the fire, or whenever you and your friends get together. Make the doughnuts too, if you're looking for real compliments!

Modern Packaging Saves Perfume

Ever since time began women have cherished perfumes as one of their most important beauty aids. And for the same length of time perfumes have presented a problem to the wearer.

Most women today heed the advice of the experts who say, "Don't try to keep your perfume for too long a period of time." From their own experience they have learned the dangers of putting the stopper in that bottle and putting it away until next Christmas or New Year's or just the next special occasion. What happens is that their perfume, when they bring it out for use, has changed and the scent no longer is true.

The delicate balance of ingredients in perfume is very easily disturbed. Each time you open the bottle, a little of the scent oxidizes and a little of the alcohol evaporates. Over even a fairly short period of time, the scent can change appreciably.

Today's push-button containers for perfume have done much to rectify this problem. The aerosol packaging of colognes—already available on the market—has solved both the problem of oxidation and evaporation. Since no air can get in with these push-button tops, and no alcohol can get out, the scent remains true for a much longer period of time.

Basic Foot Care

By ALICIA HART

At the end of a busy day, most women's feet are able to do little but convey the owners to bed. And this is what most women do.

The problem is that lasting damage can be done to overworked feet by restricting their beauty treatment to a night's sleep. They feel better the next morning, true, but one day they won't feel better at all.

Here's the basic course of care for the feet. It can be made more elaborate as it is needed.

First requirement is a good fit for shoes and stockings. Women who are usually intelligent in selecting a pair of shoes, but not so many pay attention to the stockings. They should have a half inch to spare at the toes.

Toenails should be trimmed straight across to prevent ingrown toenails.

Feet should be bathed at least once a day. They should be dried thoroughly, particularly between the toes.

Feet, like hands, are entitled to a good soothing lotion. As a matter of fact, a good hand lotion works well for this purpose. If the bottle is going to do for both hands and feet, it should be the large size. Don't forget the backs of the heels, when applying to the feet.

Air Force Dinghy Served To Ease Heart Operation

Sydney, Australia — (C) — Doctors used an air force rubber dinghy filled with ice during a rare "deep freeze" operation on a Sydney woman's heart.
The dinghy was used to ensure that the woman lay immobile at all stages of the "freezing" and "defreezing" process.
The woman was anaesthetized and placed on the deflated rubber dinghy on an operating table. The dinghy was then inflated and filled with ice water and pieces of ice. Her body took 40 minutes to "freeze" from its normal temperature of 98.4 degrees Fahrenheit to 84 degrees.
The operation was performed with the woman still packed in ice. In the critical stage the merest movement on the operating table would have killed her.
After the operation the dinghy was deflated and the ice removed. Then it was gently pumped up again and filled with warm water to start the defreezing process.
The woman, aged 33, had been resigned to dying within a few years. She was born with a hole in her heart. The hole caused blood to bypass her lungs, thus draining her vitality. Since childhood she had led a dull, listless existence. Now, in her bed at Royal Prince Alfred Hospital, she is making plans for a new and full life.
A doctor said the operation in which the woman's heart was "frozen like a sock" was the first of its kind in Australia.

Noted Musician Sees Objective Well In Sight

London. — (CP) — Robert (Bob) Farnon, a musical Canadian, figures he may achieve his ambition in two years.
"And that's to be able to retire from the world of commercial music at 40 and devote all my time to the serious side of composing," says Farnon, 38.
The tall former Torontonian added, in an interview spread over a dentist's waiting room and a tea shop:
"The way things are going, I think I'll be on schedule."
Farnon had popped in from his country home with son Paul, 4, who had a dental appointment. He is a busy man.
He is well known for his film descriptive and background music and for his radio programs each Sunday. Two of his symphonies have been played by the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra and the Toronto Symphony Orchestra.

At the end of the year, his "Album of Canadian Music" will be published, containing eight descriptive pieces. He has done several tone poems, 40 three-minute compositions plus countless other works and he is working now on a string quartet piece.
Farnon's name has appeared in the credit list—as musical director—of the films "Spring in Park Lane," "Maytime in Mayfair," "Captain Hornblower" and others. His latest is "King's Rhapsody" by Ivor Novello.
"I see the film being made at the studio, read the script and then go home to compose," says Farnon of his working day. He has an eight-room house at Gerard's Cross, Bucks, shared with his Winnipeg-born wife, Joanne, and daughter Judith, 3, as well as Paul.
He arrived in Britain in 1944 as a Canadian army band leader and took his discharge here.

Researchers Seek Reason For Decline Of Herrings

By DON HOYT
(Canadian Press Staff Writer)
St. Andrews, N.B. — The mystery of the missing herring along New Brunswick's southwestern coast is a long way from solution, says a sleuth of the sea.

"It's going to be quite a time before any positive answers are found to the questions that will give us the key," says Dr. S. Noel Tibbo.

As biologist in charge of herring investigations at the Atlantic biological research station here, Dr. Tibbo leads the search which it is hoped will end the famine looming over the once-prosperous herring fishery and its supplementary sardine industry.

"It may be 10 or 15 years," says Dr. Tibbo. "But the problem can be solved in time."

Time is becoming ever more precious to fishermen whose boats return with herring so small they call them "trash."

Sardines, or young herring, play a major role in the province's coastal fishery and once were the major factor in a herring industry earning annually between $6,000,000 and $9,000,000.

Canneries prefer packing a fourfish can weighing two to three ounces.

"They're packing up to 25 fish in a can now," says Dr. Tibbo, "and the weight is still only three and one-half ounces."

Whatever the cause of the slump in the sardine-herring fisheries, which yielded 100,000,000 pounds of fish in one record year, it struck swiftly.

During the first six months of this year the catch amounted to 3,116,000 pounds. Over the same period last year the seines and wibers dotting Passamaquoddy bay and the Bay of Fundy snared 11,070,000 pounds, and the full year's catch in 1954 reached 62,000,000 pounds—a total described by Dr. Tibbo as average for the past 20 years.

The big handicap in the year-round herring fishery this year is the absence of large fish.

"They're travelling in large schools of small fish," says Dr. Tibbo.

Scientific explanations put forward by the ocean-going detective for what he prefers to call fluctuations, rather than a decline, are a poor survival rate from 1954 spawning and the possible movement of herring to other areas.

Although the herring hunt has been underway in the Gulf of St. Lawrence area for nine years, it was only launched here about a year ago.

Quebec's Oldest Has 65 Years Of Civil Service

Quebec — The old saying that "hard work won't kill you" is illustrated by the Quebec government's oldest employee, 87-year-old Raoul Plamondon of Quebec.

A civil servant for 65 years, he is director of tree-felling permits in the Ministry of Lands and Forests.

He is one of the first to arrive at work each morning. He started with the department in 1890 when Honore Mercier's Liberal government was in power. Since then he has worked under nine other provincial governments.

A native of Quebec City, he is the son of Judge Marc-Aurele Plamondon and brother-in-law of Sir Francois Lemieux. At 22 years of age he married a widow who was the mother of two children.

He has been an outdoor sport enthusiast, particularly of hunting and fishing.

From his many memories of service with the provincial government, Mr. Plamondon recalled the time when the first woman civil servant was employed. "It was in 1900," he reminisced. "I had already been with the ministry 10 years. At that time there was no representative of the fair sex in the parliamentary offices, and you can imagine the excitement which the arrival of the first woman employee produced."

Mr. Plamondon said the woman in question was named Leontine Bedard, and he believes she now is living in retirement.

Other members of Mr. Plamondon's family have had long lives. One of his sisters, now 82, liked to see movie shows until a couple of years ago.

STABILIZED PEANUT BUTTER

While science moves slowly toward a solution, fishermen from Deer and Campobello islands in Passamaquoddy bay and communities stretching along the Bay of Fundy coastline are fighting for survival.

Ernest Wentworth, skipper of the 42-foot Lois and Maud, says he has been fishing 'Quoddy for 25 years "and there's never been a season as bad as this."

His words echo feelings expressed the length and breadth of the fisheries.

"Sure, I've seen this happen before," says Wentworth. "But it never lasted three or four years in succession. There hasn't been anything worthwhile in 'Quoddy since 1951."

"If this keeps on for a couple of years we'll have to give up fishing. That's a pretty hard proposition for a man who's been in it a lifetime and has no other trade."

Wentworth sets the present price for herring at between $8 and $9 for 1,000 pounds. During an average year, says Dr. Tibbo, herring prices run about two cents a pound.
