Hatley's First Tree Give-Away a Tree-ific Success

Over 1300 trees were distributed to residents of Hatley Townships at its the first-ever tree distribution on May 20. The event was scheduled to begin at 9:30 but well before 9 o'clock, the huge number of eager property owners already lining up surprised organizers. Among the varieties of trees distributed were Sugar Maple, White and Red Pine, Paper Birch, Red and American Ash, and White Spruce. Each address was allowed a total of 8 trees and a maximum 2 of each variety. The Red Ash was the first to disappear but the sugar maple and pines were also popular choices. A handful of spruce remained at the end of the morning but a local land owner had already made a request for any remaining trees. The environmental committee of the municipality organized the event and are already planning to repeat the tree distribution next year.

As a member of the junior department committee for Ayer's Cliff Fair, I was supposed to have been on the fairgrounds by 9 o'clock - the show starts at 11 and I am certain there will be many issues to deal with. But I am still in Rock Forest.

The car is loaded and set to go. I kiss my children and husband, note that it is 8:30 a.m., and that already I am perspiring. With the

Kudos to Memphremagog on Orford

By: Nancy Beattie

The MRC of Memphremagog has come out solidly against the sale of Mount Orford. The mountain is public land, donated to the population with clear directives that it was never to be sold or developed. Selling it to a private ski resort manager and allowing it to be built up with condominiums is wrong. Period. And the Liberal government should know better. Shame on them.

The one element in the MRC plan that is not so hot is their suggestion that the golf course be sold off. The golf course is on park territory and selling any part of the park is contrary to the principals of preserving land and the original intent of the land donors. For environmental reasons, the elimination of the golf course all together would not be such a bad thing, but in the mean time, if it is providing revenue, perhaps the revenue could go towards repairing the damage to the ski hill. But no part of the park should fall to private ownership.

Hearings are getting underway on the infamous Bill 23 (to allow the government to sell off the land) and the more presentations against the sale of the land, the better. SOS Orford continues to lobby hard for the integrity of the park and will be holding another rally on Saturday, June 3, this time in front of the National Assembly in Quebec City.

Having a ski hill in the park is not the end of the world but I would rather see the ski hill and the golf course shut down and the land returned to its natural state, than see it handed over to private interests. You can be sure that the minute Orford changes hands, us regular folk will be chased off the mountain, much less allowed for free at its base. Forget those lovely summer hikes up the mountain!

As the population of this province, we must continue to voice opposition if we expect to save our park. Write letters to the media and politicians, call talk shows and whatever you do, don't give up. We need this mountain, as do our children, and their children.... Let's not be the generation known for giving up without a fight.

Open Letter to Premier Jean Charest

Frank Moller
Scotstown, QC

One of your responsibilities, as I see them, is to protect the heritage of Quebecers. This means all Quebec's protected lands. The parks in Quebec are not yours nor the governments, but belong to us all Quebecers. You do not have the right to sell off something that is not owned by you. In fact if you go ahead with this proposal to sell off a large portion of Mount Orford, you, sir, will be breaking the law and will be subject to actions such as must be taken against all law breakers.

Your job is to promote the well-being and wishes of the people of Quebec. With this proposed action you will be promoting the rights of a very small select group of Quebecers.

I have friends who are old stock residents of Mont Tremblant. The disaster that has happened to this pristine area is catastrophic. And it continues to sink into the morass ever deeper.

Last summer I went for a ride around the bottom of Jay Peak in Vermont. What a mess. Roads every which way. Hundreds of trees being cut down on the hill, to make way for large mansions. As with Mont Tremblant, Jay is not the beautiful place I skied at when I was young, some years ago.

The same will happen at Mount Orford. And this will be the thin edge of the wedge. Once you open the door to selling off one portion of a provincial park, there will soon be another one where one of your friends must have a portion of another park. And you will sell it to him. Future generations will look at these beautiful park lands and say that Jean Charest was the one who started this wholesale massacre of our heritage. Is this the legacy you wish to leave of your tenure as Quebec's Premier? I hope not. You can still back down, obey the law, and not sell off Mount Orford. I hope you will do what is right, for the people of Quebec.

The Trials and Tribulations of Looking for a Job as a University Graduate

By: Tammy Lévesque

My story begins last October when I began sending my resume to a variety of companies, organizations and both provincial and federal government departments to inquire about any openings they would have in May of 2006. I figured that it would be a good idea to get a head start in looking for a job and hopefully, by the time I finished classes at the end of April, I would have a job waiting for me and I wouldn't have to worry about it. Eight months have gone by since then and nothing. Not even an interview. Talk about depressing. Even now that I have officially completed my BA in Environmental Studies I still have not heard a single word from any of the 60+ resumes I have sent out since then..

I am sure that I am not the only one out there who is looking and coming up with nothing. It is not easy to enter the work force these days and as a university graduate, I am finding it even harder than usual. I am beyond depressed and have lost all faith that I will find something in my field. Trying to stay hopeful requires too much energy. If I average it out, I have sent out at least one application every 2 days for the past 6 months. I search a minimum of 30 websites a day for jobs and in 6 months, nothing.

Although I fully realise that I am fresh out of university, I am lucky to have had the opportunity to gain experience in my field through summer employment. I have spent the past two summers and most of this year working in the environmental field. So, when I apply for various positions, it is most often junior and entry level positions and one would think that even with the limited experience I do have that it would be an advantage. And I am not even being picky! I will take anything as long as it is somewhat related to my field of study. And yet, nothing. I am not even being picky about where I will end up. I have been applying for positions throughout Canada from Newfoundland to British Columbia and no one will bite.

What baffles me the most is exactly what are they looking for? I am qualified to work in my field in some capacity as I know more about the environment and environmental issues than the average person. I have been trained in software that is related to my field of study and I also have some experience in the environmental field which is more than many other people in the same position I am can say for themselves. And, I am bilingual. So I ask myself, what else can I do? What more do I need to begin my career as an environmental professional? Why isn't anyone taking a chance on me?

It is a catch 22 really. It seems that companies and the like want people with experience however, how are we as university graduates supposed to get that experience if no one is willing to give us a chance? To top it all off, many of the 'baby boomers' are nearing the age of retirement and we are supposed to make up the workforce after they leave. However are we supposed to accomplish that if companies keep looking for professional, qualified people with minimum 4 to 5 years experience to fill those positions? Pretty soon none of them will be left and there will be hundreds of jobs to fill and no one able to fill them because years ago, no one wanted to give us a chance.

I have not spent four years studying in a field I absolutely adore and I feel that I know I am good at just to work some job that is the farthest thing from my field and that does not add to my career path in any way. Ask anyone who knows me as I am always talking about environmental causes and trying to get people to change their habits to more environmentally friendly ones. I am such an environmental advocate and yet no one is willing to even hear me out in an interview setting. I can't help but ask the question is it me? What am I missing? Is it too much to ask to be able to work in MY field? At this point, I will take anything that comes my way but I am doubtful that anything

So the question remains where to go from here? Well, I'll tell you. I get up every morning and hope that someone somewhere will give me a chance. If at the end of the day I still haven't heard anything, I go back on the internet and continue looking on the 30+ job sites I have booked marked in my Favourites tab and keep on looking. I keep on applying. I have wanted to give up so many times but I know that I can't. Deep down I do hope that something will eventually pop up but only time will tell. So, to all of you in the same boat as me, just sit back and enjoy the ride. Although the seas might be rough sometimes and you might want to jump ship because you are afraid of the approaching storm, don't. Stay on that boat and eventually, you will find your port of call.

temperature this high this early, it is going to be a scorching August day.

I decide to take Autoroute 55 to save some time – it is a quiet morning with few people out and fewer driving. For the most part, I am quite comfy in the air-conditioning of my car, rolling down the highway, reviewing the day's plan, ever hopeful that all will go smoothly. Some 90 young farmers are expected to compete today and it is no small challenge to keep everything organized.

As I begin the drive around the end of Lake Massawippi, I cannot help but gaze at the faultlessly smooth lake surface with the morning sun reflecting off it.

Nearing a cement dock on my left, something catches my eye: a life-sized splash in the water. I immediately slow the car and continue to stare at the splash – in the sunlight, it looks like thousands of rainbows. I can't believe my eyes! I pulled to the opposite side of the road and look more intently. What could be causing this stunning reflection? Then, all of a sudden, as the splash dissipates, I see it! A long, slender tail, attached to a large and powerful shape just below the water's surface.

A honking horn breaks both my gaze and concentration – but just long enough to point the honking driver to the water. He sees it too - the tail and the beautiful rainbow spectacle.

As the surface of the water stilled again, we begin to chat. The driver is from out of the area and shares that he thinks the Eastern Townships is the most stunning and scenic place he had ever visited.

Returning to his car, he pauses and turns around chuckling. "No one is going to believe us."

My roadside companion is right. The whole episode delays my arrival at the fairgrounds by about 10 minutes ... and no one believes me. They shake their heads and no doubt think I am making up a tall tale.

But I believe me. I know I saw Wippi, the monster that lives in Lake Massawippi, and, as with so much of the Townships, it is a wonderful part of our heritage.

Men's Empowerment

By: Kathleen Y. Rattigan
Special to the Sun

Is it unusual that a woman would write upon the subject of men's empowerment? Perhaps this subject fascinates me because most of my adult life has been dedicated to the discovery of the power of woman. Now, in the wisdom years of my fifties, I know that a woman does not discover her power by trying to be like a man, or in the combative stance of the aggressive side of the feminist movement, nor in deriding and resenting the other half of the human race. I honestly admit that like a good number of women, I struggled much of my lifetime trying to understand men, and I realize that much of the time they shake their heads in confusion trying to understand us!

I have been in love, out of love, hurt, misunderstood, and just downright burnt in some of my relationships which, I imagine, is the same story as many of my fellow women. However, through my spiritual saga, I have discovered that, drum roll please, men are different from women. I can see eyes rolling as you say to yourself, "no kidding Kathleen."

My freedom began when I discovered that once upon a time, humanity worshipped a Mother Deity. I now pay homage to the fact that both the feminine and masculine energies are strong and beautiful and each bestows gifts upon us. Like many women, I struggled to find my place in a patriarchal society, often weary of everything being masculine. I wondered who put women in second place and, of course, blamed everything on the male race.

*"Today I honor the following miraculous men:
Dr. Wayne Dyer
Dr. Deepak Chopra
Leo F. Buscaglia, PH.D.
Dr. Phil
Sun Bear, Chippewa
Medicine Man
Stuart Wilde
Eckhart Tolle*

You have all been powerful and good teachers to myself, and many others. Thank you. A special thank you to my husband, Robert A. Campbell, who is my rock."

Lo and behold it was when I discovered that it was my own belief concepts that put me in this secondary role I set about learning why I had done this to myself. After all the glitches were worked out, I turned back towards men and learned how to become friends with them.

I feel a great sympathy and compassion for manhood as their lot in life is not easy. And by the way, those TV commercials that make men look like idiots have got to go! I find them degrading and insulting to the male race, and it saddens me to see that this kind of humor is acceptable. Men have had to redefine their own manhood in today's world. The feminist movement made great strides and women are taking their places of power. We see men and women working side by side everywhere that used to belong only to men, the police force, firefighters, politicians, world leaders, construction sites, ministries, the military, truck drivers, and on and on. We are becoming equals as we are finding that our different strengths perfectly complement each other!

This was the revelation that turned me full circle, eased all my confusion, and opened the doorway into no longer struggling to understand why men act the way they do, but to delight in their differences. The age old battle of the sexes was over for me and it was with a great sigh of relief that I laid down all my self made defenses against them.

As I am a very happily married woman, my friendship with the male race has the wonderful innocence of laughter and interest. Without the question of any intimacy raising its furry little head, I have the freedom of focusing on the spirit of man and my admiration and respect continues to grow. Men are natural warriors and protectors of all. The beauty of an awakened man is a wonder to behold as I am discovering through my private counseling practice. Most men are not ready to join groups in their spiritual questing, but the fact is that there is an astonishing number who are now looking to the natural world of spirituality to find peace in this world of such insanity. Men in large numbers are learning to meditate, explore past lives, and to gain knowledge of and understand their dreams and visions. My practice, which used to consist of mainly women, now has an equal number of men, ranging in ages 17 to 76.

I honor their warrior courage, the brilliance of their logical and scientific minds, the strength of their physical bodies, the gentleness of their power, and I honor and salute the male race as they redefine what it means to be a man in today's changing world. It is with true happiness that I can say I am comfortable in your world.

The Life of a Mohawk Fisherman - "You've got to love it"

By: John A. Viau

It's late January and "high winter" has arrived on the frozen wastes of Lake St. Louis.

The thermometer registers 23 below zero Celsius and the wailing wind rolling across miles of windswept ice makes it seem like the high Arctic. A solitary figure dressed in a bulky camouflage suit moves swiftly as he pulls his nets through a large cut in the 2 feet thick ice. The nets are laden with fat perch and other pan fish and as fast as he folds them into the large fiberglass tub on the sleigh behind his snowmobile the nets and fish both are almost instantly frozen into one heavy icy mass.

The fisherman's name is Eric McComber, a proud member of the Mohawks of Kahnawake, and he's keeping alive an ancient tradition that has been practiced by his people for untold generations. Eric is a big man, with not an ounce of fat on his powerful physique and it's not hard to tell that he's in a trade that requires lots of muscle power. But even muscles are not immune to bone chilling cold, and Eric decides that he's had enough for today. There's one more net to check but it will have to wait until tomorrow. He knows that it's just too dangerous to continue any longer. Like Eric frosty dunking. As the winter progresses the danger is from hypothermia and sudden says, "There's a line I just won't cross! If I think my life is in danger I back off and that's that!"

But danger doesn't always announce itself before arriving and sometimes a dangerous situation can arrive almost without warning. When you're a commercial fisherman, you're out on the water or ice all year around, and danger lurks around every turn. In early winter the thickness of ice must be gauged carefully and caution observed, if you don't want to go for a sudden squalls and total whiteouts where visibility is reduced to zero in a matter of seconds.

In spring, summer and fall Eric nets sturgeon in the territorial waters of the Kahnawake Mohawks which stretch all the way from below the Lachine Rapids upstream into Lake St. Louis around St. Nicholas Island and beyond. These waters are not for the novice or faint of heart. When you fish below the Mercier Bridge your first mistake could very well be the last mistake you'll ever make!

The rock and boulder strewn waters of the Lachine Rapids are just minutes away downstream and beckon loudly to vessels in distress. No matter how well you know the channels, currents, rocks and eddies, (and Eric knows them as well as anybody in Kahnawake), things can change. The River transforms itself from year to year. Every spring after the ice goes out huge boulders of a ton or more can be moved hundreds of feet or more downstream from their last location and wait silently in wait for unsuspecting fishermen. In these waters if you break a shear pin or lose a prop it could mean your death.

Eric tells me that some of his best fishing spots are in the very fast currents where the waters swirl and cascade wildly washing food up for large schools of foraging sturgeon. When you're netting in fast water it can be dangerous, but that's where the sturgeon are and that's where you have to fish for them. An average day's work for Eric starts around 8:00 a.m. and depending on how big the catch is can sometimes end long after midnight.

Eric, like many other Kahnawake Mohawks worked in high steel for many years. From 1979 until 1998 he worked in New York City, Detroit and many other U.S. cities. The pay was great but you were hardly ever home and there was very little family life. At the time Eric had 6 kids whom he loved dearly and he felt that he just wasn't spending enough time with his family. So in 1998 he made what was his biggest personal decision of his whole life. He quit the high steel and took up commercial fishing as a full time business.

He had always loved the water and the outdoors and his father Jimmy had taught Eric everything he knew about the river and all the different varieties of fish when Eric was growing up. So he started out fishing. He knew pretty well where to find perch and walleye so that was no problem. In the beginning he did quite well netting for perch and walleye but the income wasn't really enough to live on and then one day when out netting for walleye he discovered a major spawning area for sturgeon. Now everything had come together. He made himself some new nets specifically for sturgeon and soon was making people full time which helps to create employment in Kahnawake. To keep the tradition of a native fishery alive on the reserve Eric is now

"Sturgeon" and the name of his 5th son when translated means "In The Fast Water" (which is where Eric fishes). Eric is married to Paula and has 5 sons and 2 daughters, doesn't drink and doesn't smoke and lives a clean and healthy life in the outdoors. He says to him his family is everything. He's now 44 years of age and says he hopes to fish for another 25 or 30 years. If anybody can do it I really believe he can!

Eric says that he is proud to be preserving his heritage and sometimes he says he can hear his ancestors calling out to him in approval. Apart from fishing Eric's greatest passion is Lacrosse, hunting ducks and geese and being out in the marshes in the fall.

Eric loves the water and the outdoors and his job and like he says: "It's a dangerous and tough job but when you're in the great outdoors, you've got to love it."

some very respectable catches.

Now with the walleye, perch and sturgeon he had the nucleus of a successful business and McComber Fisheries was born. Eric and his employees now produce fresh and smoked sturgeon, walleye and perch fillets and fresh and smoked wild Atlantic salmon from the Mikmaq Indians of Restigouche. Eric says one of his long term goals is to open either a fish market or a sea food restaurant on the reserve.

McComber Fisheries now employ up to 10

teaching one of his cousins and a nephew all the tricks of the trade and some of his own boys will be coming into the business as well.

Eric lives and breathes fishing. The name of his 3rd son when translated from Mohawk means "He Hunts Fish!" The name of his 4th son when translated means

Ormstown Industrial Buliding

The Industrial Building rose during 1930-31. An area of six-thousand square feet, it housed display booths, offices, and space for domestic and handicraft exhibits. The Women's Department, (now known as the Home and Garden Department), was established in January 1931, and thereafter was included in the annual meetings. A large number of exhibits were on hand for the 1931 show. Some exhibits had, before that time, been placed in the Dining Hall, groundfloor. Classes change as do the demands for them, with flowers, art, and a junior department having since been added.

The Next Generation...

By: Nancy Beattie

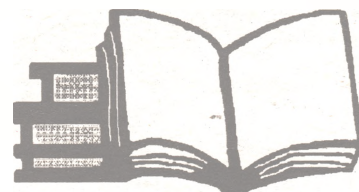

These three raccoon cubs were discovered in early May on a farm in Hatley Township following "a funny noise" coming from an old milk house. A young momma raccoon apparently decided that the empty beehives being stored there made for an ideal den in which to give birth. The typical raccoon mask and tail rings are only beginning to appear on these cubs, and their eyes have yet to open which suggests they are only a few weeks old. Following a quick photograph, the young family was left in peace.

It All Depends...

By: Tom Moore

Some people smile and welcome the Canada Goose, while others regard the big, noisy bird as an annoyance or even a threat. The long vees of Canada Geese in spring and fall, announced from afar by their resonating honking calls, are comfortingly familiar (if not always welcome) signs of seasonal change. The same flight of geese is a menace to aircraft during both take-off and landing and can contaminate lawns, golf greens and watercourses with their large volume of fecal waste.

a conservation success story. Eleven different subspecies of Canada Goose are abundant today everywhere in North America although numbers were declining in the early 1900s. The ban on DDT and other pesticides combined with conservation efforts led by Jack Miner and others have turned things around. Today the Canada Goose population is managed in North America by a joint US/Canadian team faced not with conserving the species but rather with balancing overpopulation against the need to maintain adequate breeding diversity.

The predominant control method is hunting. A staggering 2.6 million Canada Geese are harvested annually in North America in recent years, with only about 200,000 of that number being taken for subsistence by aboriginal peoples. This makes the big goose second in sport waterfowl hunting numbers only to the mallard duck. In urban areas like airports, parks, golf courses and beaches, where shooting is impractical, the usual recourse is a policy of harassment with dogs, noise generators, or even robotic devices. A growing business opportunity here for someone?
