

ECHOES OF NEW YORK ELECTION.

Hughes May Stand Alone With Majority of 52,000 - Looks as if Democratic Ticket, Excepting Hearst, Had Carried the State.

New York, November 8.—Incomplete returns from two-thirds of the counties in the state make it impossible to give definite figures on the state ticket up to a late hour except for Governor.

Mr. Hughes' Republican candidature for governor, has a majority of 52,000 approximately, but the remainder of the candidates are in doubt.

For lieutenant-governor Lewis Stuyvesant Chandler, Democrat-Independence League, has a lead in the city of 134,941. Up state, Bruce, Republican, is running slightly ahead of Mr. Hughes' vote.

For chief of state, Mr. Hughes came down to Greater New York with approximately 120,000. It readily will be seen that the vote for second place on the ticket will be close, and only the complete official count will determine the result.

At the headquarters of the Independence League last night the following statement was issued: "Reports from up-state indicate not only that Mr. Hearst cut down the Republican vote materially, but that the Independence League vote for Mr. Hearst was not counted in many counties. These votes will have to be added to the announced results of Mr. Hearst's vote in order to give correct Hearst figures in the state."

WATER SUPPLY IN OLD DAYS.

PIPED TO THE HOUSES OF RICH ONLY—OTHERS GOT IT FROM FOUNTAINS.

(From the Rosary Magazine.)

In the days before water systems were brought to perfection only the rich were able to have private pipes entering their houses or connecting them with the public fountains.

A long procession could be seen, morning and evening wending its way to and from the fountains. Even today some parts of Rome one sees young girls carrying an old water jar to the fountain or, in some villages of the Abruzzi, others with two jars suspended from a wooden yoke across their shoulders.

The water for the Roman fountains came through the mighty aqueducts which stretched along the Campagna, and of which ruins may to-day be seen standing grim and splendid against the blue Italian sky.

The Emperor Agrippa alone built 700 fountains, decorating 400 of them with marble columns and 300 with statues, and each Roman emperor seems to have endeavored to outdo his predecessor.

One of the most remarkable is the Fonte Gaia at Siena. The carvings are in white marble, the subjects taken from the Bible. The water, cool and pure from a spring eighteen miles away, is so limpid that the reflections within its depths are almost invisible, so perfect are they.

There is a quaint little tale connected with this fountain. When the fountain was first built there was great rejoicing in Siena, for it was the first large conduit to be brought into the city, and the people were wild with joy. So much jollity and gaiety went over the affair that they named it the Fonte Gaia.

Just at that time there was dug near the city a wonderful statue of a pagan goddess and the people raised the statue, which was ravishingly beautiful, to stand above the fountain. That year men said the evil eye had fallen upon Siena.

Enemies lurked at the gates and besieged the walls. With their sword, staff, rapine and murder, until the streets fairly ran with blood. At last men murmured.

"Surely," they cried, "we have placed a heathen goddess above our fountain and therefore is heaven sore displeased and misfortune has been sent upon us. Let us tear down this pagan thing and good will come of it."

Forthwith they removed the beautiful statue and with much ceremony bore it outside the city gates. Then, desiring to place it where it would do them the most good they carefully, "with thrifty hatred," buried the statue upon a fertile soil, hoping to transfer their own bad luck to their hereditary enemies.

No one knows where the statue is now, but Fonte Gaia still stands, her water as cool and fresh as when the old Siense first rejoiced at her building.

KEOKUK'S WATER-POWER.

(From the Philadelphia Press.)

Niagara is not the only water-power going to waste from the utilitarian point of view. The mighty volume of the Mississippi, carrying at one point the potentiality of 211,500 horse-power, has been allowed to run unexploited to the sea.

The Mississippi has a drop of 24 feet in a distance of 12 miles. The United States Government has built a canal around the rapids, but the fall has not been utilized. To dam the Mississippi was one thing to be impossible, but modern engineering is equal to it, and a $1,000,000 dam is now about to be built near Keokuk in order to convert the 24-foot fall of the Mississippi into electric power.

While this comparatively small fall of the upper Mississippi will not furnish the power that Niagara would afford if the falls were drained dry, it will give as much as Niagara. River now furnishes and as much as that of the falls being visibly impaired. It will give enough to make Keokuk and vicinity a great manufacturing centre. It will create and develop wealth in a new field without harming any interest except the improvident made at that point by the United States Government, and which, with the consent of that Government, will be submerged and replaced.

The engineer in charge of this projected improvement is the same who built the dam across the Susquehanna at McCall's Ferry, in this State. There is no person who has heretofore been an obstruction to commerce should not now be made its assistant and promoter by being converted into electric power. The country is rich in this source of potential wealth. It is not necessary to destroy Niagara in order to secure from the electric power now going to waste all the electric power the country can utilize. The Mississippi flow is almost devoid of these opportunities, but the rapids at Keokuk, long an obstruction, are likely to prove one of the very valuable assets of that most valuable river.

CASTELLANE DIVORCE

CASE RESUMED. COUNTESS' COUNSEL TAKES UP EVIDENCE—READS LETTERS AND POST CARDS.

Paris, Nov. 8.—The court room in the Palais de Justice, occupied by the tribunal of First Instance of the Seine Judge Ditté presiding, was again crowded yesterday when the hearing of the divorce suit brought by the Countess de Castellane (formerly Anna Gould) against her husband, Count Boni, was resumed.

Maitre Cruppi of counsel for the countess, in resuming, referred to the reckless fashion in which the count had spent millions of the countess' money while allowing her only a pittance of five hundred francs monthly for pin-money.

After the failure of the attempt at arranging a reconciliation, Feb. 1, when the countess was granted the temporary custody of her children, Count Boni began a systematic campaign, writing to the countess letters filled with avowals of sincere repentance, passionate words and professions of undying love and devotion.

"You may have my life," he declared in one of his letters, "your absence will be my death. Take me back once more. I will live only for you. Let me embrace you and once more feel you in my arms," and so on.

On Feb. 25 the countess sent a cold rejoinder, informing the count that she had suffered too much and had lost all affection for him, and all confidence in his honor, concluding with the statement that she found him "disgusting."

The count's tone changed. The next day he sent the countess a letter in which he upbraided her for being a mad woman actuated by hate and vengeance, and saying that her children would some day reproach her for her "spitefulness."

But the count soon resumed writing love letters to the countess. The letters continued until the middle of September, when the count declared he could no longer survive, pleading to see the countess and asking her to at least grant him a supreme favor, saying: "If I am in danger, come. Do not let me die alone like an abandoned dog."

SAGACIOUS PLANTS

South Africa has some sagacious plants. They have two problems to face, the first, that of reducing the evaporation of water from their interior to the minimum; the second, that of guarding against being eaten by animals. The plants have effected the first of these objects by assuming a spheroidal form, thus presenting a minimum of surface. The second is effected in a different way by each of the two plants. The first of them grows among rolled water-worn pebbles, which it so closely resembles in form, color and mottling of the surface that it is difficult to distinguish. The second plant is found among angular rock fragments. These angular fragments resemble the leaf which has stimulated to the extent of covering the surface of its fleshy double leaf with minute spots. The general effect is that of a lichen growing on

The granolithic walk on Meadow street, between the Grand Central Hotel and Bayley's store, is proving a dangerous place for horses. The Meadow street grade up to Wellington street is steep and horses are unable to find the necessary foothold on the smooth sidewalk. Scarcely a day passes but a horse falls at this point, or, at least, has great difficulty in bridging the gap up to Wellington street. The peculiar position of this crossing was not taken into account when this walk was laid. An attention will soon be given to it, and it is believed that a better crossing will be made. Each course of the very dainty and appetizing supper served could be paid for seven cents, but the majority of the guests were plainly hungry and called for all four courses, and twenty-seven cents. The long table which was prettily decorated with cut flowers and shaded candles in silver candelabra, was in charge of Misses G. Johnston (New York), Nita Hunt and Florence Fuller. The Sherbrooke party included Dr. A. Naudin, Mr. Worthington, Mr. F. Campbell, and Mr. C. On arrival at St. Elie the reception was most cordial, and shortly after, supper was served, the long tables being literally laden with appetizing viands. The band played during the evening, which was kept up till a late hour, Dr. Worthington dancing in the first quadrille with the bride, who wore her wedding gown, while Mrs. Worthington honored the young groom during the evening. The minstrel and band music was highly appreciated.

ACTS OF KINDNESS.

THEY MAY BE PROMPTED BY MANY MOTIVES—ONE ACT OF COMPLEX IMPULSES.
(From the New York Sun.)

Some men are prompted by selfishness, some by benevolence, in showing kindness to their fellows, the promptings of their hearts are the same, whatever the prompting of their benevolence; though it must be said that while a kindness prompted by selfishness may be as beneficial as any other as far as it goes, yet it is likely to be limited in measure. For a fair example of what might be described as cold limited selfish kindness take the following:

Trolley car coming along a thoroughfare under which runs a branch of the subway. Drunken man on the trolley car, who wants to get off at a certain cross street, which is also a station street of the subway.

As he rises to go the drunken man sways uncertainly on his feet, as he does also on the platform of the car, and in the street, at the car steps, when he gets foot on the ground.

A busy thoroughfare this, with lots of automobiles passing; one likely to come along any second and pick up the drunken man and throw him forty-seven hundred feet down some hole, without ever knowing what hit him; which the trolley conductor who has an eye on him all the time as he steps down off the car, realizes perfectly.

And the conductor takes no chances. He doesn't want a man put off his car run down, indicating possibly carelessness on his part, or haste in putting him off or in starting, getting him possibly into all sorts of trouble, and so, when he sees the drunken man still wobbling on his feet after he has stepped off, the conductor acts promptly. Leaving the stop bell on, he steps down himself from his car and gets back of the wobbly drunken man and takes the shoulders and neck, half supporting, half guiding him, walks him firmly, but still gently across the street and up to the sidewalk and to safety by the side of the subway station sidewalk entrance shelter, around the end of which the drunken man gropes his way to the side, there to lean safe, at least for the moment, and safe so far as the conductor's actual and moral responsibility is concerned, while the conductor skips back to his car and yanks the bell.

Now there was an act that at first thought one might without question, set down as one of limited selfish kindness, and as a matter of fact the trolley conductor is human like the rest, and in his kindness towards this drunken man he may have been actuated also by benevolent impulses, as, indeed, not improbably he was, and in that case it would be necessary to make a new classification for it, and call this act limited-selfish-benevolent variety.

THE DAILY SMILE.

FALL WEATHER.
We used to gaily cheer
In the Fall,
And wear heavy apparel,
One and all,
For the air was crisp and snappy,
And we got warm and happy,
But now, it is so dreary,
So dreary, but not snappy.

Now we all keep getting bluer
In the Fall,
As we try to think of newer
The thermometer, base platter,
Still announcing that it's hotter,
Till our brains begin to totter
In the Fall.

WILLIE AND THE BABY.
Willie pulled out his tongue,
Round and round the room they swung,
Baby seemed to like it though—
'Twas his wagon tongue, you know,
Chicago Tribune.

Willie, having done these two,
Looked to find what else to do;
Cut his hand up with an hour,
'Twas his head of cauliflower.

Willie pounded baby's head,
As the doctor said, "sing, sing";
'Twas his little, unmy tun—
'Twas the head of baby's drum.

Willie, with his papa's hatchet,
Gave the baby's face a knock;
Baby crowned with joy, for 'twas the face of baby's nursery clock.

Willie's little appetite
Longed for something nice and light;
Cut his hand up with an hour,
'Twas his little leg of mutton.

Willie then, for a surprise,
Dug out both of baby's eyes;
Baby laughed, gave Will a hug—
Takes his father's eyes and dug.

Willie found a fat cigar,
It was strong and black as tar;
Baby ate it—was not choked—
For it was a cany smoke.

THE WAIL OF A WAITRESS.
He has not come—never since the day
He got so badly that he went away
Because I wouldn't promise not to gad,
I didn't know 'twas in him to stay mad.

He oughter know that I was haf in play;
He'll have to wait till I'm his good and
Before I'll ever tell him I feel sad.
He has not come!

He oughter think the thing so over easy
'Tain't so easy 'carn't this big tray
He was the only bean I ever had,
So, dear, I guess you got the pretty bad.

How shall I know if he has been to
As they say he has been to
He has not come!

BEWARE OF "AUTO HEART."

THE BALTIMORE HEALTH DEPARTMENT GIVES WARNING AGAINST SPEED MANIA.
(From the Baltimore News.)

Health Commissioner James Bosley sounded a note of warning to-day to automobilists. In plain terms he declared that speed mania and the danger attending travel at high speed are undoubtedly responsible for a condition which he described as the auto heart and which is liable to cause death.

"Automobilists with hearts that have the slightest tendency to weakness should be cautious," said Dr. Bosley. "The excitement of rapid travelling out in the open causes an overstrain on the heart, and if this organ is weak the condition of the automobilist is a most dangerous one. Something slightly out of the ordinary, like a narrow escape from a collision or the running down of a man, might give the finishing touch, and death might follow."

"To say that speeding has the general effect among automobilists of bringing on a special heart trouble, common to all automobilists is, of course, far from the truth. It is true we would find a practically similar condition among locomotive engineers. Instead of the engineers being a body subject to heart disease, they are generally very healthy. They approach their work by degrees, however, and become hardened to it before they are put upon fast runs."

"With automobilists it is different. Often a man will go out for an automobile ride after a long period of sedentary and unexciting work. Once in the country the speed of the machine will be steadily increased, and with each increase the excitement makes greater the strain upon the heart of the weak automobilist."

"It is, in fact, the occasional automobilist—the man or woman who goes out only once in a while—who is most subject to attacks of what may be called auto heart. The professional driver, like the men who took part in the big race on Long Island are trained to their work, just as locomotive engineers are trained, and even the greatest bursts of speed probably have no effect upon them."

Dr. Bosley added that he had not yet come across in his private practice a case of heart trouble which could be ascribed to the automobile habit, nor had he heard of a well-authenticated case, but he believed that such as thing as the auto heart was possible, just as it is possible for persons with weak hearts to bring on trouble by exciting themselves in other ways. He also said that he had noticed where leading physicians in other cities have discovered a tendency to heart trouble among certain classes of automobilists and had sounded a note of warning similar to that which he gave.
