VOL. XXXVII. No. 131 MONTREAL, SATURDAY, JUNE 3, 1905. PRICE ONE CENT.

DECISION IN THE CASE OF DEPUTY HIGH CONSTABLE LAMBERT WAS GIVEN TO-DAY

The Attorney-General made his report in the Lambert case to-day, finding that the Deputy High Constable was not justified in acting as he did at the Maternity Hospital, where he went to seek a witness and insisted upon searching the place.

Mr. C. M. Holt, K.C., who conducted the enquiry for the hospital, was seen by the Star this morning.

He said the report was handed to him by the Premier.

"On receipt of it I saw the Premier this morning. I asked him what action he intended to take on it, and he said he would not care to state that this morning. He remarked, however, that I would notice that Lambert had already been punished by the loss of his position, and that he had dismissed Pratte this morning. I cannot say what action the hospital will take on the report until it has been submitted to the governors of the hospital for consideration next week, nor do I care to express my own opinion until then."

The report is as follows:

Quebec, 29th May, 1905.

The Honorable
The Attorney General,
Quebec.

Sir,—In conformity with the instructions contained in your letter of 30th March, 1905, and under the provisions of the Quebec Statute 59 Vic., cap 12, I proceeded to Montreal, on the 4th April, 1905, and held an investigation in the Court House, on the 5th, 6th and 7th of the same month, in the matter of the complaint made by the Montreal Maternity Hospital, through their attorney, C. M. Holt, Esquire, K.C., against Deputy High Constable Lambert and Constable George Pratte, in the 28th January, 1905 (64-05), and now beg to report as follows:

Messrs. Brosseau, K.C., and Holt, K.C., appeared and said investigation for the Montreal Maternity Hospital, and Messrs. Walsh and Geoffrion for Deputy High Constable Lambert and Constable George Pratte.

Eight witnesses were examined by the complainant-in-chief, eighteen witnesses by the defence, fourteen of whom as to character, and three witnesses by the complainant, in rebuttal. A copy of these depositions accompanies this report.

By the documents filed of record and the evidence adduced, I find that the following facts were established:

The complaint of the Montreal Maternity Hospital may be summarized in the following paragraph of Mr. Holt's letter of 28th January, 1905:

"I, your said officers, pretending to be in possession of a search warrant entitling them to enter and search the Hospital in order to find there one Adele Beaupre, forcibly entered the said Hospital, and the private wards of the said Hospital, and behaved in the most offensive manner to those in charge, creating a serious disturbance amongst the inmates of the Hospital, and conducting themselves in such a way as to be a great danger to the health of the inmates.

"I have ascertained that they had no such warrant nor would, in my opinion, any magistrate in the city of Montreal have granted a search warrant to be executed in an institution of such a character as this one. The institution is sixty years old, and is one of the best public maternity hospital in Canada, and is conducted and is under the control of the leading physicians and most influential citizens of Montreal."

To this complaint Deputy High Constable Lambert filed a written answer, in the form of a solemn declaration, in which Constable Pratte joined, and which he corroborated in writing.

The judicial proceedings were then gave rise to the attempted execution by Lambert, assisted by Pratte, of the warrant for the arrest of Lucia Beaupre, as a witness, at the Montreal Maternity Hospital, on the 24th of January, 1905, are the following:

On the 23 January, 1905, one Aurele Beaupre laid a complaint before M. C. Desnoyers, Esq., Judge of the Sessions of the Peace for the district of Montreal, residing Adelard Seguin, of the city of Montreal, of having seduced his daughter, Lucia Beaupre, aged 17, during the months of May or June, 1904, the said Lucia Beaupre being previously chaste and being then in his employment as a servant.

Lucia Beaupre was necessarily an essential witness in this prosecution and, on the 24th January, 1905, Constable Pratte gave his deposition before Judge Desnoyers in the following terms:

"J'ai raison de croire que la nommee Lucia Beaupre, qui est temoin essentiel pour la poursuite dans la cause du Roi vs. Adelard Seguin, accuse de seduction, ne comparaitra pas sans etre contrainte."

Under this deposition and under the provisions of article 553 of the Criminal Code, 1892, Judge Desnoyers issued a warrant commanding the constables to whom it was addressed, to bring and have the said Lucia Beaupre before him to testify what she knew concerning the said charge.

It was this warrant which Deputy High Constable Lambert and Constable Pratte attempted to execute at the Montreal Maternity Hospital, in the afternoon of the 24th of January, 1905.

As a matter of fact Lucia Beaupre was not an inmate of that hospital.

George E. Pratte was appointed constable by L. W. Sicotte, Esq., Judge of the sessions of the peace for the District of Montreal, on the 10th of March, 1903, under the provisions of article 2496 R.S.P.Q., as amended by the Act 1, Edward VII., cap. 16, section 1 Vide Pratte's deposition p. 130.

In the month of January last, he was acting as superintendent of an institution called "L'Assistance publique" (idem p. 105).

About the 4th January, 1905, Lucia Beaupre's mother went to this institution with another woman called Chartrel, in order to have proceedings taken to recover her daughter, who had disappeared since a few days. She came back a few days afterwards with a photograph of her daughter, and about the 14th January Pratte brought both Lucia Beaupre and Chartrel before Judge Desnoyers. The result was the laying of the complaint against Seguin, as above mentioned.

Mr. and Mrs. Beaupre then informed Pratte that Lucia Beaupre was in the Maternity Hospital (idem, pp. 88, 109-114). They informed him that a girl, named Bedard, had seen her there and had spent two hours with her in the hospital. This information was not given to Beaupre and his wife directly by the girl Bedard herself, but by a woman, Gagnon, who told them that the girl Bedard had made her such a statement.

This information, as far as Pratte is concerned, was hearsay evidence of rather a remote kind.

Moreover, when giving Pratte this information, Mr. and Mrs. Beaupre told Pratte that they had been themselves to the Montreal Maternity Hospital and had been informed by the authorities there, that Lucia Beaupre was not in the Hospital (pp. 109 and 110 of Pratte's deposition).

This appears to have been on the morning of the 24th of January.

It seems that before proceeding any further, Pratte caught to have interviewed the woman Gagnon and the girl Bedard, so as to verify the statements reported to him by Mr. and Mrs. Beaupre, but he did not do so. It was only after having obtained the warrant against Lucia Beaupre and having attempted to execute it with Deputy High Constable Lambert at the Montreal Maternity Hospital, and ascertained that Lucia Beaupre was not there, that he asked Mr. and Mrs. Beaupre to bring him this girl Bedard (idem p. 114). Pratte's assertions, Mr. and Mrs. Beaupre then informed him that this girl, Bedard, had since left for the United States.

With the information obtained from Mr. and Mrs. Beaupre, Pratte gave the deposition already mentioned on the 24th January, 1905, and obtained the warrant to secure the attendance of Lucia Beaupre as a witness.

By Pratte's own evidence (pp. 88 and 89), he obtained this warrant against Lucia Beaupre from Judge Desnoyers for the express purpose of going to the Montreal Maternity Hospital, where he stated she then was. This evidence of Pratte is corroborated by Judge Desnoyers and by High Constable Bissennette.

I therefore find, upon this point, that Lambert has established that part of his answer to the complaint made against him in which he states that the warrant was given to him for execution with instructions to go and get the witness Lucia Beaupre at the Montreal Maternity Hospital.

Pratte accompanied him in order to identify Lucia Beaupre, as he had her photograph with him.

It was under these circumstances that Lambert and Pratte entered the Montreal Maternity Hospital in order to execute this warrant.

They were immediately informed by Miss Gage that there was no person of the name of Lucia Beaupre in the hospital, and that she had never seen the face corresponding to the photograph handed to her. This was the third or fourth time the hospital authorities were approached by the police for this same girl (vide Miss Gage's deposition, page 7).

Miss Gage and Dr. Ford, the resident physician, then asked Lambert to be allowed to telephone and consult Dr. Cameron, the chief physician of the hospital, before allowing them to visit the hospital. Lambert consented to this.

Dr. Cameron, in his deposition, states, as follows, the instructions he then gave Miss Gage.

"I had been communicated with before Lambert's appearance, for I had gone over the question of this girl's presence in the institution. Miss Gage, the lady superintendent had reported to me the fact that this girl had been there, that detectives had been looking for her, and we had gone over the whole list of patients there to make sure that there was no one answering that description present, and we had satisfied ourselves together that there was no one answering that description present. This was before Lambert appeared at all. In fact, an hour or two only before Lambert appeared, we had gone carefully over the patients together in this way. Then about four o'clock or a few minutes after, I was called up by telephone by Miss Gage, that a couple of men, constables, were looking for this same girl that we had been speaking of, and insisting on going over and searching the hospital. 'What should she do?' I asked her. 'Have they a search warrant?' 'Well,' I said, 'make sure that they have a search warrant.'

"If they have, of course, they must go over the institution; you must allow them to go everywhere but in the private wards. And, in any event, if they did make a search, give them my compliments and ask them that they should make their search as gently, quietly and unobtrusively as possible, because we have a couple of very sick people in the ward just now. If they have not a search warrant you must decline to allow them to go over, and assure them that the girl is not there."

Miss Gage, in accordance with these instructions from Dr. Cameron, Miss Gage and Dr. Ford informed Lambert that they could not allow the whole wards of the hospital in order to ascertain whether Lucia Beaupre was there or not, but that they should visit the private rooms of the private patients.

Lambert and Pratte then proceeded with their investigation.

I do not think that they can be blamed for not taking off their overcoats, as they were not asked to do so. There was evidently a certain amount of reluctance on the part of Miss Gage and Dr. Ford to allow Lambert and Pratte to visit the hospital in search of this girl Beaupre, whom the former knew not to be there.

Dr. Evans happened at the time to be visiting a private patient of his in a private ward, and states in his deposition (pp. 51-53) the manner in which Lambert and Pratte entered this ward. He immediately offered to tell Lambert who his patient was, that he (Dr. Evans) was sure that he was one of the doctors connected with the hospital, that this was a private patient of his, whom he had seen in consultation, but Lambert nevertheless, insisted on entering this room, searching under the bed and all around the room.

As Dr. Evans' statements were absolutely true, Lambert was unjustified in entering and searching this private room as he did.

Lambert and Pratte also lacked discretion in the manner in which they entered the wards in search for Beaupre, not being dressed, and the room in which they found a very ailing patient.

Under the terms of article 583 of the Criminal Code, 1892, the warrant against Lucia Beaupre could be executed anywhere within the district of Montreal. There is no doubt that it could have been executed in the Montreal Maternity Hospital, but as a matter of fact it was not executed there because Beaupre was not there.

The attempted execution of this warrant at the Montreal Maternity Hospital by Lambert and Pratte was not, therefore, justified by the terms.

As to the responsibility of these two officers, I find:

1—That Constable Pratte had not sufficient information to justify him in stating, as he did, that Lucia Beaupre was in the Montreal Maternity Hospital, and asking for a warrant against her and the assistance of an officer to execute this warrant there.

2—As to Deputy High Constable Lambert, he appears to have acted in good faith on a positive information furnished him by Pratte that Lucia Beaupre was in the hospital.

I may also state, as to Lambert, that on account of the complaint made against him by the Montreal Maternity Hospital, and this investigation, which was delayed on account of his absence, your predecessor in office refused to entertain Lambert's application for a promotion when a joint high constable was appointed for the district of Montreal, by Order-in-Council No. 91, of the 27th February, 1905, so that this officer has already suffered punishment to that extent for his lack of discretion in the matter.

I have the honor to be, sir,
Your obedient servant,
L. J. CANNON,
Assistant Attorney-General.

DOES NOT THINK WAR IS OVER YET

Japanese Consul-General Talks About the Prospects of Peace.

WHAT RUSSIA MUST CONCEDE

Must Go Out of Manchuria and Have No Further Fleet on Pacific.

That Japan will not favor any peace proposals that do not intimate Russia's willingness to grant all concessions asked by the Japanese Government, is the belief of the Hon. Mr. Nosse, Japanese Consul-General to Canada.

Hon. Mr. Nosse, who was in Montreal yesterday, reflected in his manner the cheerful, determined little nation that has been making history in the Far East. He does not expect the war is by any means finished, and when it does terminate he is of the opinion that Russia will not receive such good terms from the Mikado, as she would have some time ago before displaying the subtlety to desire to push the war, in spite of its horrors, to a close.

"What demands do you expect Japan will make of Russia in a settlement?" he was asked.

"Japan will certainly demand that Russia entirely evacuate Manchuria, and yield up all claims to a controlling voice in the administration of Corea and China. Japan will likely ask heavy war indemnities for the losses sustained."

"Will any privileges in regard to an Eastern port possibly be conceded to Russia?"

It is quite unlikely that any will. Russia would not be allowed to maintain any fleet there, either at Port Arthur or Vladivostok — even if she had any semblance of a fleet left," Mr. Nosse added.

"Should the Russians continue hostilities is it likely that Japan will attack the Russian force at Harbin?"

"Yes, I believe our forces will try to drive their opponents out of every stronghold. We have spent so much on this war that we cannot afford to back off until Russia is finally convinced of our victory. The war was thrust upon us, but we must carry it to a close, so that there will be no possibility of its recurrence."

MR. MACMASTER'S STATEMENT.

Tells of His Visit to the Caledonian Springs Hotel.

Mr. Donald Macmaster, K.C., today made the following statement:

"The facts are these: In the early part of March last I was suffering from a slight attack of rheumatism. I enquired of Mr. Russell whether the hotel at Caledonia Springs was open, as I wished to take the waters, get a couple of days' rest, and give some study to the Gaynor and Greene and other cases.

"Mr. Russell informed me that both hotels were closed, but very kindly said that I was welcome to go to the cottage. As the hotels were closed, I was very glad to accept his hospitality, and, accordingly, remained at the cottage about two and a half days—from the 8th to the 10th of March—when I returned to Montreal.

"Mr. Russell's charge is that while there I was 'not studying the Gaynor and Greene case, but examining the title deeds of the Caledonia Springs' property, etc., and consequently abusing his hospitality.

"Now the misfortune for this charge is that it is absolutely false. There is not a word of truth in it. Mr. Russell is completely mistaken. The only work I did there was examining the Gaynor and Greene case, and studying the Privy Council Record in the case of Whitney and Joyce. Neither then, nor at any time before, or since, have I examined the title deeds of the Caledonia Springs' property. I never saw the title deeds—or any other deeds or records of the property. That is certainly were not at the Springs when I was there, nor were they ever spoken of or discussed then.

"On my return to Montreal I said nothing about 'the title deeds to the property.' I knew nothing about them. Later, in consequence of certain communications made to me professionally, I instructed Mr. Maxwell, K.C., of L'Original, where the registrar's office is situated, to search the records, and let me know in whose name the Caledonia Springs property stood. Mr. Maxwell reported on the 14th of March, among other things, that the Grand Hotel property—that is, the part of the property containing the Grand Hotel and the Springs immediately adjacent—stood in the name of an old company called the "Grand Hotel Company of Caledonia Springs," and not in the name of the present company, viz., the Caledonia Springs Company, Limited, as the latter company had issued scrip to the extent of $250,000, based no doubt on ostensible assets, I pointed out to Mr. Russell, its president, that these assets should stand in the name of the new company, whose credit was pledged to its shareholders. This is my whole connection with the title. The law suits are separate matters. They are before the courts and will be there decided. We cannot settle them by discussion in the newspapers."

No Marks of Violence.

(See also page twenty-four.)

At the inquest held this morning into the cause of the death of B. A. Kinlock, the medical student who was found dead in a house on St. Denis street, Dr. C. A. Dugas, medical expert, who examined the remains, swore that he found no mark of violence on the body and he did not find any exterior indication of poisoning. Deceased, he said, was over six feet in height and built in proportion.

JAPANESE VICTORY'S SETS WORLD THINKING

ASIASTICS NOW AWAKENING

Special Cable from a Montreal Star Correspondent.

London, June 3.—Englishmen just now are doing much hard thinking. They realize that the events of this week in the Far East will open a new chapter and a new set of political conditions. The Spectator does not exaggerate the first English impression when it says: "Such a success achieved at sea by an Asiatic power almost paralyzes the imagination. It compels Europe to revise all her ideas, not only of Asiatic strength, but of Asiatic capacity and supplies, some reasonable ground for a dreamy belief that the future distribution of world-power may be settled on lines which hitherto have never entered into the calculations of statesmen. Much nonsense has been talked about the 'yellow peril,' but this much at least is certain, that a new and immense power has established its claim to a new and heavy vote in the international council of mankind."

TO STRENGTHEN THE TIES.

Lord Lansdowne, as Foreign Secretary of Great Britain, clearly contemplates, as Mr. Chamberlain recently announced that he also does, a further development of the Anglo-Japanese Alliance as an essential sequel of Japan's mastery in the Far East. Just as England is the greatest naval power of the west, so Japan is now supreme in the east, and imperialistic Englishmen are arguing that inasmuch as their combined fleet almost command the seas of the world, these mighty armaments, especially if reinforced by those of France and the United States, might act as a kind of international police, securing the tranquility and good order of two hemispheres, repressing aggressive designs everywhere.

"Is it," asks the St. James Gazette, "a mere fantastic dream to imagine a league of peace among the free and progressive nations, Great Britain, France, the United States, Italy and Japan, forming at first a veritable holy alliance, and might at last deliver civilization from the grinding strain and constant alarm of incessant preparedness?"

LIBERALS SCENT DANGER.

Herein Liberal opinion sees danger. "We do not," says the Westminster Gazette, "desire a Pan-European coalition against us for the joint defence of interests which are supposed to be threatened by a triumphant Japan. If that is to be avoided, however, and a Monroe doctrine laid down for the Pacific, it would be our business to procure a guarantee from Japan for the safety of the existing European possessions in the Far East. France, naturally, is anxious about Cochin-China; Germany is not quite comfortable about Kiaochou. There are also, when peace has been restored, the legitimate commercial interests of Russia to be considered.

EFFECT ON ASIA.

Another reason for cautious statesmanship lies in the possible consequence of the Japanese victory upon other Asiatic peoples. There are abundant signs of a ferment, though they are not yet serious as yet. Certainly it has been no easier for England to come to terms with the rise of Afghan power. The Boer victories have been known, and our treatment of Japan as an equal and ally is likely enough to raise demands for similar equality of treatment by England, and perhaps even America's, Asiatic people.

Mr. Chamberlain talks openly and Lord Lansdowne talks guardedly of an alliance which will make Japan Great Britain's partner in the defence of India, and, at least, indirectly, will bring her into European relations. It is obvious that all this raises the gravest imperial questions.

NO PEACE AS YET.

As for Russia, much as they desire peace, few responsible Englishmen expect it. Russia still has half a million soldiers in the field, is now relieved from all naval expenditure, and can collect enough gold to arm them to the teeth. The Czar's treasury has not yet begun to sell its mighty properties to foreign interests and gold mines. He is not nearly reduced to the position in which Frederick the Great found himself when he sent the plate of his palace to be melted down into debased coin, and can fight on for three years at least. The balance of evidence as yet visible is that he intends to do, unless, of course, a revolution should arise in Russia; but, as the Spectator says, the Russian Empire is more like a bag of beans than a chain. It has all the cohesion necessary to organized revolution, and there is little authentic reason for expecting peace by that means.

YACHT APACHE MISSING.

New York, June 3.—The Tribune says:

"Friends of Edmund Randolph, the owner of the barkentine-rigged auxiliary yacht Apache, which sailed from Sandyhook lightship at noon on May 17, in the race for the German Emperor's cup, are beginning to be anxious for her safety, for all the other yachts have finished, and the Apache has not even been sighted since she was last reported by the steamer Columbia at 7 o'clock on the morning of May 22. She was then in latitude 40.23 north, longitude 50.30 west.

Books of the Week Reviewed; "The Abbess of Vlaye:" Some Other New Books.

By George Murray, B A., Oxon., F. R. S. C.

The Abbess of Vlaye. By Stanley J. Weyman. (Toronto. Copp-Clark Co.)

This romance originally published in London by Longmans, Green, and Co., is by the author, whose "Gentleman of France," "House of the Wolf, "Under the Red Robe," and many other novels, have given us so much literary delight. Writing under the influence of an imagination filled with the spirit of bygone ages, and heated with the fervor of heroic episodes of history, in which gallant men, beautiful women, and daring deeds play an absorbing part, Mr. Weyman keeps on giving us stories that are warmly greeted by all lovers of romantic adventure. "The Abbess of Vlaye" is a tale in which brave men are captured and imprisoned, and beautecus women are sought violently in marriage to the flash of ever-ready swords and the accompaniment of the clash of arms. The scene of the romance is the France of King Henry IV., and its hero is the lord of a certain district in which lawlessness has been rampant for so long a time that the hero must either become complete master of the domain, or else ignominiously surrender his position. In accomplishing this hard task M. des Ageaux finds himself beset with almost insurmountable difficulties; but, in the end, he wins the woman he loves—restores many others to happiness—and relieves a number of the oppressed. The captain of Vlaye (no true Vlaye, but a hireling) dominates a terror-stricken countryside and in the Abbey, hard by, Odette de Villeneuve, desperately and most irregularly in love with him, imagines that she rules this sinister, one-eyed Captain of mercenaries. But one morning, when she is riding with her lover, she meets the quiet and unassuming M. des Ageaux, who seems to be taking stock of matters which infinitely concern herself. Then, as Mr. Weyman has it, "things happen," and happen, too, with surprising frequency and variety. For, as usual, the tale is the thing, and the mere historical setting need not detain our attention. Mr. Weyman's eyes, however, have not been asleep as regards the period and the scenery, and in his dedication of the novel to the memory of his friend Hugh Stowell Scott, he refers to "long summer days spent with him amid the scenes which suggested 'The Abbess of Vlaye.'" The story may confidently be recommended to all lovers of French romance.

The Second Wooing of Salina Sue. By Ruth M Stuart. (New York: Harper.)

This volume which, we reviewed when it was published by Harper and Brothers several years ago is now in a new edition, well illustrated by Kemble and Frost, who have furnished twelve drawings mainly concerned with the lives of colored folk. Those who are fond of dialect will relish the six stories which make up the volume and as it has been previously noticed as we said before, we need only repeat the titles of the tales They are: "The Second Wooing of Salina Sue"; Minervy's Valentines"; "Tobe Taylor's April Foolishness"; "Egypt"; "Milady"; and "The Romance of Chinkapin Castle."

Reuben Larkmead. By Edward W. Townsend. (New York: C. W. Dillingham.)

This fragment of supposed autobiography consists of eleven lightly written chapters, illustrated by eleven equally light drawings by Wallace Morgan. In its sub-title it is called "A Story of Wordlings," and this last word is evidently intended as a contrast to the character of Mr. Reuben Larkmead himself. It appears from chapter one, that this young gentleman was possessed of a very large fortune (the source of which is not in any way indicated) and had gone to New York to enter upon the social life which his Uncle Silas and his sister Reuben's Aunt Sarah, with her daughter Josephine were prepared to open for him. Silas had told his nephew to enjoy a few days of unconventional sight-seeing before commencing his new career, and prophecied that he would have some adventures worth telling. This book is the result of these adventures. Reuben's aunt embarrassed him very much by dwelling on his large fortune, and assured him that she would have no difficulty in finding him a proper wife. At Aunt Sarah's first dinner party in his honor the wealthy youth found his cousin Josephine far too frivolous and could not help contrasting her frivolity of speech with that of a guest, Mrs. Jack Lacguerre, a widow older than himself, but the most charming of her sex in his deliberate opinion. Strange to say the unsophisticated boy did not feel her charm in any way diminished when she remarked in the course of a coaching party that "Coaching is a stunning sport, and I can drive any four that ever looked through bridles, but it's so deuced expensive that a beggar like me has to pass it up." The autobiographer, with apparent unconsciousness soon gives us full view of his inmost character, and tells us without hesitation how he was duped, hoaxed, jockeyed, skinned, fleeced and swindled, on every available occasion, by sharks and sharpers, male and female, who cunningly laid traps for his ridiculous innocence. His fatuity was almost incredible, and though he was far from being "non compos," he was as near as the allied English word "nincompoop" can bring him to that state. The unreality of Reuben's account of himself and his adventures consists in this—that he tells us gravely, and with the unconscious air of a philosopher, of how deeply he suffered at the hands of "worldlings," and does not seem to notice the irony of the situation. We must also regret the slang that so freely flows from the rosy lips of the widow, who undoubtedly has many admirable points about her. When at last she confesses to Reuben, whose offers of marriage she has persistently refused on the score of age, etc., that he has "won her love," we are a little surprised to read the following account of her sentimentality. In the words of Reuben: "To my immeasurable surprise and distress, she began to weep and hurried from the room. When she returned, she, smilingly said, 'There! I've made a fool of myself, and perhaps it's done me good. It's all over now. I hope it is for I've powdered my nose so well never speak on the subject again. Now let's talk about the weather.'" Some of the other characters that flit across the stage of what Mr. Larkmead calls his "truthful drama-comedy" are very amusing, and the book will while away an hour pleasantly enough.

The story of Columbus and Magellan. By T B Lawler, M A (Boston: Ginn & Co.)

Mr. Thomas Bonaventure Lawler is favorably known as the author of "Essentials of American History," and has an intimate acquaintance with the Philippine Islands, which has been of great use to him in his present work. He begins it with a short chapter on the Portuguese explorers, and proceeds to describe the voyages and explorations of Columbus. Then an account of the discovery of Porto Rico, the finding of the Pacific, and the conquest of Mexico serves as an introduction to the story of Magellan's voyage, and the settlement of the Philippines. The book ends with a carefully compiled pronouncing vocabulary of all the places named, and an index leaves nothing to be desired. The brief history is adapted for use as a supplementary reader in the last three grades of the U. S. Grammar Schools, but there is no reason why it cannot prove equally useful in our Canadian schools. The volume is profusely illustrated with maps, portraits, and photographs of scenery.

Highway Pirates. By Harold Avery. (Thomas Nelson, New York.)

It requires considerable knowledge of fairly educated boys and their tastes to write books that will prove acceptable to them. The late Mr. Henty was perhaps the most successful English writer of this class of literature that ever lived, and we cannot confidently say that he has had any quite worthy successor. A little history mixed up with a somewhat romantic plot, but with not too much sentimentality, seems what a healthy boy requires; and Mr. Harold Avery (ably seconded by W. R., his illustrator, who should have signed his name in full to his admirable colored pictures, has left nothing undone to provide the required fiction. The period assigned to the story is about 1830, and it deals mainly with the adventurous free-trading "chaps" smuggling between England and the Continent of Europe. The sub-title of the book is "The Secret of Coverthorne," and it is an interesting secret. I borrow the following brief analysis of the story from a friend. The hero is returning from school by the mail-coach with its armed guard, and it so happens that several convicts, bound for Botany Bay, are on their way to the coast, under escort. They are mostly "free-traders," and coming from the same neighborhood, and having been previously acquainted, are able to plot a little surprise. Young Eden, George Woodley, and Barkly, the coachman, as well as the warders, are taken prisoners by Rodwood, the leader of the convicts, the coach (the old "True Blue") is upset over a precipice, and the fugitives from justice, with their captives, take refuge in a cave of curious formation. What happened there before and after Rodwood's "maroons" Eden and Woodley in the sea-bound cave, what the honest captives discovered, what befel Rodwood and his wretched followers, and what effect the seizure of the "True Blue" may have had in unwinding the clue to the mystery of Coverthorne, the reader will be pleased to learn. Herold Avery certainly knows how to tell a good story, and is accordingly a great favorite with the rising generation.

Jorn Uhl. By Gustav Frenssen. (Boston: Dana Estes & Co.)

Mr. F.S. Delmer, who has translated this remarkable book, dates a "Prefatory Note" from Berlin, in which he gives an account of the author of "Jorn Uhl." He was born on October 19, 1863, in the remote village of Barlt, in Holstein, North Germany, and was the son of an ordinary carpenter. Somehow or other the boy managed to attend a Latin school, and in time became a student of theology. The publication of "Jorn Uhl" in 1902 took Germany by storm, and the author, much to his surprise, "awoke one morning and found himself famous." Fierce battles of criticism have raged around the book. The admirers of French novels sneer at its "deliciously superannuated style," and look upon the writer as a kind of Samuel Richardson, born by an anachronism with the age of Ibsen and Haupmann. But let those laugh who win. The issue before us purports to be two hundredth thousand, and the book fairly throbs with real life, passion, and poetry. It tells the life-story of a Frisian farmer, sensational indeed, inasmuch as some of the incidents are tragic and unusual, but the tale is told with sincerity, simplicity, and deep insight, and without either exaggeration or sentimentality. Jorn Uhl is the youngest son of a wealthy but spendthrift landowner. When his mother dies through the neglect of her drunken husband, the son is left with his sister to the care of a faithful servant, and is brought up almost without any notice from his father. He is intended to be a scholar, but as he joins to his hatred of his father's and his brother's rowdy habits, not a little of their practical temperament, he throws up his studies, and devotes himself to the task of saving the farm from ruin. Of his failure in this purpose, and of his ultimate success in another field of labor, as well as his sufferings through family misfortunes, and his final joy in love, the reader must learn in the book itself. The incidents are too various, and the plot too slight to allow an adequate description in a few words. Jorn Uhl is a character that lives and will live, but the other personages in the book are no less individual, if they are, as they are bound to be, more fragmentary.

NOTES AND QUERIES.

Corruption of a Latin Word.

An Ottawa correspondent writes: In walking through Beechwood cemetery here some time ago my attention was arrested by a monument to the late Nicholas Flood Davin, on which was a motto in the following words: "Vis unita fortier." It is many long years since I was at school, but somehow or other the word "fortier" did not strike me as quite right. I seem to recollect a word "fortior"; but, on the other hand, it is almost incredible that a monument erected to a public man, who was himself a fine scholar, should bear on its face so atrocious a blunder in so simple a word. Kindly resolve my doubts, and say if there is any possibility that "fortier" can be right, or whether it is the same kind of error as it would be to spell "stronger," "strongor."

It seems so hard to account for what my correspondent calls "so astounding a blunder in so simple a word," as the Latin "fortior." No such word as "fortier" exists. The adverb "fortiter" comes nearest to it, as used in the phrase "Suaveter in modo, fortiter in re," (gently in manner, vigorously in deed) which is the motto of Lord Newborough. The words "Vis unita fortior," (Power is strengthened by union) do not occur in any classical writer, but form the motto of the Earl of Mountcashel, of Lord Wrolseley, and of the Woodmongers' company. The phrase "a fortiori" (with greater reason) is known to most people, and lawyers are well acquainted with the maxim: "Fortior est dispositio legis quam hommis" i.e., "The action of the law is superior to (or, overrides) the intention of the individual." Classical scholars will call to mind Ovid's line,

That is to say: "Braver is he who conquers himself than he who overcomes the most strongly fortified cities."

With this, by the way, we may compare the Hebrew maxim: "He that ruleth his spirit is better than he that taketh a city," and also Horace's

"Latius regnes avidum domando
Spiritum, quam si Libyam remotis
Gadibus jungas."

It is of no use saying anything more of so patent a blunder as "fortier."—Editor of Notes and Queries.

Dr. Goldwin Smith.

In the interesting "Autobiography of Andrew Dickson White," recently published in two volumes by the "Century Company," N.Y., the President of Cornell University tells the full story of its founding. As the friend, ally, and adviser of Ezra Cornell, a self-made quaker, no one could more appropriately be the historian of the valuable institution, and we are sincerely pleased to read the tribute that he pays to an "Oxford Professor," as the Earl of Beaconsfield sneeringly called him, who gave the President much important aid is now passing the remaining years of his distinguished life in Toronto. The following is what he writes in reference to Dr. Smith's connection with the University.

"Professor Smith entered at once into our plans heartily; wrote to encourage us; came to us; lived with us amid what to him must have been great privations; lectured for us year after year as brilliantly as he had ever lectured at Oxford; gave his library to the university with a large sum for its increase; lent his aid very quietly, but none the less effectually, to needy and meritorious students; and steadily refused then, as he has ever since done, and now does, to accept a dollar of compensation. Nothing ever gave Mr. Cornell more encouragement than this. For "Goldwin," as he called him in his Quaker way, there was always a very warm corner in his heart."

"Curfew Must Not Ring To-night."

Few short modern poems have been read and recited more frequently than the above mentioned verses originally published by the author, Mrs. Rose Hartwick Thorpe, in an illustrated booklet entitled "Ringing Ballade." She was born on June 18, 1850, in Michigan, where in 1868 she graduated at the High School, Lichfield. She has written many poems and prose works since her 'Curfew,' but none of them has attained such celebrity. In that poem she is said to have had in mind the historic bells of Chertsey Parish Church. An English paper states that these bells have lately stopped ringing, as the frame of the belfry has been pronounced unsafe, and must be rebuilt. There are 8 bells, of which 2 are at least 600 years old. One of these called "The Abbey Bell," sounded the curfew in the old days, when in feudal days the ringing of a bell at 8 o'clock was a signal to put out all fires and lights, gave it its name of "couvre-feu."—Editor of Notes and Queries.

A Latin Quotation.

G. F. Farley (New York) asks me where to find the quotation: "A constant dropping weareth away the stone."

Many people believe that these words occur somewhere in the "Authorized Version' 'of the Bible. They do not, as a reference to Cruden's accurate "Concordance" will at once prove. The original saying seems to be a translation of the Latin,

"Gutta cavat lapidem non vi, sed saepe cadendo."

This sounds as if it came from the voluminous Ovid, but a reference to Dr. Crawford Tait Ramage's "Beautiful Thoughts from Latin authors"—an invaluable book to Latin students—gives us only the following:

"Gutta cavat lapidem; consumitur annulus usu;
Et teritur pressa vomer aduncus humo."

That is to say: "A drop hollows out a stone; a ring is worn out by use; and the crooked ploughshare is rubbed away by the earth that presses it." At p. 180 of the Tenth Edition of "A New Dictionary of Quotations from the Greek, Latin, and Modern Languages" (London: John F. Shaw), the line is attributed to Ovid, but without any special reference to his poems. It is thus translated: "A drop (of water) hollows a stone, not by its force, power, mere weight, but by the frequency of its falling. That may be done by gradual effort, which is not to be accomplished by sudden violence." Bohn's "Dictionary of Latin and Greek Quotations, Proverbs, and Maxims," edited by H. T. Riley, B.A., gives the same line, at p. 140, and calls it a proverb, with the following translation: "Dripping water hollows the stone, not by force, but by continually falling."

"Perhaps the best book of "Classical and Foreign Quotations, etc., with Translations, References, Explanatory Notes and Indexes," is a volume edited by W. P. H. King, M.A., Ch. Ch, Oxford, and published in London by Whittaker and Sons. At p. 203 he quotes the couplet, as cited above by Dr. Ramage, and locates it in Ovid's "Epistles," IV.10.5. He translates it as follows:

"Water will hollow stone; rings wear with use;
And friction will the ploughshare's curve reduce."

A Famous Poem by Horace Smith.

Mr. L. D. Sterling, of Grey County, Ont., asks for the words of the poem, "Address to the Mummy in Belzoni's Exhibition," by Horace Smith.

They are as follows:

In Thebes' streets three thousand years ago,
When the Memnonium was in all its glory,
And time had not begun to overthrow
Those temples, palaces and piles stupendous,
Of which the very ruins are tremendous.

Speak! for thou long enough hast acted Dummy.
And thou hast a tongue—come, let us hear its tune;
Thou'rt standing on thy legs above grou'd, Mummy!
Revisiting the glimpses of the moon,
Not like thin ghosts or disembodied creatures,
But with thy bones, and flesh, and limbs, and features

Tell us—for doubtless thou canst recollect—
To whom should we assign the Sphinx's fame?
Was Cheops or Cephrenes architect
Of either Pyramid that bears his name?
Is Pompey's Pillar really a misnomer?
Had Thebes a hundred gates, as sung by Homer?

Perchance that very hand, now pinion'd flat,
Has hob-a-nobb'd with Pharaoh glass to glass;
Or dropp'd a half-penny in Homer's hat,
Or doffed thine own to let Queen Dido pass,
Or held, by Solomon's own invitation,
A torch at the great Temple's dedication?

I need not ask thee if that hand, when arm'd,
Has any Roman soldier maul'd and knuckled,
For thou wast dead and buried and embalm'd
Ere Romulus and Remus had been suckled:—
Antiquity appears to have begun
Long after thy primeval race was run.

Since first thy form was in this box extended,
We have, above ground, seen some strange mutations;
The Roman empire has begun and ended,
New worlds have risen—we have lost old nations,
And countless kings have into dust been humbled,
While not a fragment of thy flesh has crumbled.

Did's thou not hear the pother o'er thy head,
When the great Persian conqueror, Cambyses,
O'erthrew Osiris, Orus, Apis, Isis,
When the gigantic Memnon fell asunder?

If the tomb's secrets may not be confess'd,
The nature of thy private life unfold:—
A heart has throbb'd beneath that leathern breast,
And tears, adown that dusty cheek, have rolled:—
Have children climbed those knees and kiss'd that face?
What was thy name and station, age and race?

Statue of flesh—immortal of the dead!
Imperishable type of evanescence!
Posthumous man, who quitt'st thy narrow bed,
And standest undecay'd within our presence,
Thou wilt hear nothing till the Judgment-morning,
When the great trump shall thrill thee with its warning.

Why should this worthless tegument endure,
If its undying guest be lost for ever?
O, let us keep the soul embalm'd and pure
In living virtue, that when both must sever,
Although corruption may our frame consume,
The immortal spirit in the skies may bloom.

Horace Smith, novelist, poet and miscellaneous writer, was born in 1779, and died in 1849. He began his literary career in 1807, by publishing "Horatio: or, Memoirs of the Davenport Family." His next venture was in 1812, when, with his brother James, he wrote "Rejected Addresses," perhaps the most famous parodies ever composed. These addresses are pretended to have been composed for delivery at the opening of Drury Lane Theatre, in 1812, and the best travesties are of Wordsworth, Coleridge, Crabbe, Scott, Moore, Byron and Southey. In 1813, Horace Smith published "Horace in London," and this was followed by a large number of novels, the last of which, entitled "Love's Mesmerism," appeared in 1845. His best works are "Gaieties and Gravities" (1825); "Brambletye House" (1826); "Festivals, Games and Amusements, of all Ages" (1831); "The Tin Trumpet" (1836); "Oliver Cromwell" (1840); and "Adam Brown ,the Merchant," in 1843. James was of great assistance to his brother, both in "Rejected Addresses," and in "Horace in London," which consists of the first two books of Horace's odes, adapted to modern times in modern verse.

A Cross Country Proposal.

We will call her Diana because everybody and his wife invariably thought of her as such. And if there be anything in the doctrine of reincarnation,supposing also that the Goddess of the Hunt could reappear upon earth in the guise of facinating womanhood at once young and beautiful, tender and daring, demure and audacious, then most certainly was the Diana of whom we write the manifestation of a great truth. Be that as it may, she was the toast of the hunt clubs everywhere, and more particularly in her own set comprising the Holly Tree Hunt, of which each unmarried member was her sworn knight errant and suitor,—with the emphasis upon a newcomer. Jack Spottiswoode,Virginian, and altogether the likliest specimen of young manhood that ever rode out of the South.

No one else stood much of a chance after Spottiswoode's debut with the Holly Tree pack. Handsome, genial, magnetic, an immediate social success was his in the hunt clubs; while afield he had no dangerous rival, save Diana herself.

Run after run, Diana rode her big chestnut gelding Sunshine against Spottiswoode on his home-bred mare Mimi, and always beat him to the kill by the narrowest of margins. On each occasion, however, there were those who averred that Spottiswoode's finishing effort consisted merely of whipping his off-side boot, thus allowing the unsuspecting Diana to triumph in the last few strides. But the majority of those who followed the reckless-riding couple were of the opinion that Mimi could not concede weight to the gelding over such stiff country as surrounded the Holly Tree Hunt on every hand. However, the criticisms stopped at the animals. So far as the riders went, no thought of comparison was entertained. As one veteran put it: "They ought to travel double. They fit like the two halves of a sound apple!"

Which stated the case satisfactorily.

But Spottiswoode, risking his neck with greater abandon on every succeeding run, had anything beside a feeling of security in so far as Diana was concerned. Plainly, she admired his daring and prowess in the saddle—qualities which went a long way in her estimate of all manhood—and in the colony's social life she bestowed her favors more generously upon him than upon any other among the horde of hard-riding and desperate-wooing suitors who pursued her by day and night. But that was about all Spottiswoode could make of it—and this was the last hunt of the season run and over with it.

At times he all but determined on returning to Warrenton for the balance of the year, but invariably Diana's adorable image would rise into mind to show him how utterly impossible the act of leaving would be at least, until such time as he had definitely lost her. So he mooned along, half happy, half miserable until an incident which promised trifling things turned out to be a most unexpected and momentous event.

A spell of frost had been succeeded by a few days of warm, bright sunshine, with the result that the roads round about became so muddy as to scarcely warrant putting a good horse over them. But Mimi sadly needed exercise and Spottiswoode decided to trot and canter her a few miles out beyond the old Cathedral, little wotting the consequences of his act.

Mimi caracolled and pirouetted along as playfully as a kitten, and seemed to thoroughly enjoy the outing after her enforced idleness, until Spottiswoode suddenly realised that he had given her enough for one day, and pulled up sharply with the intention of returning by the way he had come. As he started to wheel Mimi, the mare pricked her ears and stood stock still. A moment later Spottiswoode, too, caught the sound of rhythmic hoof-beats coming from the direction in which he had just been headed, and partly through curiosity, partly through a desire for company on the way club-ward, he awaited the rapidly approaching steed.

A few minutes brought rider and horse into sight around a bend in the road. It was Diana on Sunshine! There should be nothing in this, think you, to make Spottiswoode's face go red and white by turns? Ah! but you must consider the fact that you were not Spottiswoode, sitting there to behold the vision of beauty with which he was head over heels in love bearing steadily down upon him!

Brief and formal words of greeting, which disclosed the fact that each had ridden out upon a similar mission, and then they walked, jogged, cantered, homeward, side by side—and more than side by side could they have read each others hearts aright!

Without hesitation, Spottiswoode lunged Mimi at the obstacle, but in taking-off the gallant little mare slipped a trifle and went crashing through the top rail. For one brief instant, Spottiswoode lay still beneath the struggling Mimi, and only just succeeded in catching hold of the lines as the throughly frightened mare sprang to her feet and started to run.

Diana was at his side as Spottiswoode brought Mimi to a standstill. There was world of self-reproach in her voice as she breathlessly queried:

"Are you hurt? Is Mimi hurt? It was all my fault!"

"It's nothing—the mare just slipped." He was carefully going over Mimi to ascertain any possible damage. She might have sustained, and all oblivious to the fact that one of his boot-tops was ground to tatters, his riding togs were besmeared with moist earth, and that the back of his head bore an anything but ornamental gash, the result of collision with one of Mimi's flying hoofs.

"She seems to favor that off leg," he said, half to himself. "But I guess she's all right." And then, turning to Diana, he asked point-blank:

"What next?"

Diana looked dubious

"Your judgment seems sounder, today," she admitted. "Suppose you decide for both of us. I'm surely no prophet!"

Spottiswoode gazed about him and sniffed the clear cool air. The tumble, far from daunting him had aroused his every sporty instinct and the hideous knowledge that he had fairly "turned turtle" directly before the object of his adoration made him impatient to eradicate the ridiculous impression from her mind by achieving something more dignified,—and as soon as fate would permit.

"We'll have to jump once to get back into the road," he pointed out. "We'll have to take but three fences if we head as you suggested. Shall we go for it?"

It was Diana's turn to object now, and of course she did it, being every inch a woman. The going was worse than she had thought; Mimi's off hind-leg certainly seemed under suspicion; and so on until she caught sight of the crimson on Spottiswoode's cerebellum. That settled her quibbling. She blurted out:—

"Oh, Mr. Spottiswoode! Your head is badly cut! Here, take my handkerchief!"

He bowed low as he accepted the flimy offering—and carefully, reverently, tucked it into his coat pocket!

"No, no! You must use it!" objected Diana, reddening.

"I will keep it. The idea of using so pretty a favor to wipe mud and gore from my hard old noddle-box!" He saw that she did not laugh, and hastened to add:—"Blood coagulates quickly, you know. That's what it's meant for—to stop bleeding."

She regarded him helplessly as he came, Mimi in tow, close to her side.

"Allow me to look at the girths," he coolly requested. "Just as I thought; you could slip a fence-rail beneath them. Will you hold the mare?" passing up the lines into Diana's unresisting hand.

For once in a way she was a little girl. She obediently cocked up her feet while Spottiswoode tugged and hauled at the girths until Sunshine, bulky as he was, rocked again upon his underpinning and grunted an audible protest. After which Spottiswoode took up the slack in Mimi's girths, and at last turned to Diana with a brisk air of readiness.

"Strange, isn't it, how a horse shrinks after a short spin? And now for our little chase! The first to the steeple yonder wins? Or shall we agree upon the northernmost gate-post?"

"Anything suits me," demurely replied the subdued Diana, pulling thoughtfully at her glove.

"To the northern post then—with your permission. And the stakes?"

Diana pondered, with downward look and rising color. When at length she raised her eyes to the eager face at her side it was to say, simply:—

"What you will."

Spottiswoode swung quickly into his saddle.

"It seems hardly fair to leave everything to me," he protested cheerfully, "but since you will have it that way, why I'll accept the responsibility. If I lose I'll promise to go straight back to Virginia!"

"If I lose?" she asked, gazing intently out over the fields toward the designated goal.

"I ask your promise that you will grant me the glove you now wear—with all it encloses!"

Diana, saying never a word, shot Sunshine forward, and Spottiswoode, though taken aback, broke after her, and the race was on!

Straight for the highest rail in the nearby fence sped the big chestnut, floundering perceptibly, but with a long stride that seemed fairly to eat up the ground. And at his heels bobbed the aristocratic head of Mimi, her stride comparatively short and choppy, and plainly in distress from her recent cropper. For the first time since she was foaled, however, Spottiswoode gave the mare scarcely a thought; his eyes seeing little beside the distant spire; his whole mind centered on the woman before him.

As the two bore down upon the initial obstacle both mare and gelding made blunders which threatened almost certain falls for Diana and Spottiswoode, but by prompt and skilful work in each saddle the animals regained their feet from a tangled landing and were squared away on their course in no time. Sunshine was quickest to settle into his stride and as a result opened up quite a gap before Spottiswoode could get Mimi under way again. Evidently, the mare's leg would not last long in the deep footing, and her rider felt that his sole chance of winning lay in nursing her as much as possible through the fields, to make his effort upon gaining the comparatively harder and dryer surface of the boulevard, which would serve as the home stretch of the contest. He therefore contented himself with gradually reducing Sunshine's lead in the journey to the second jump, a distance of about a half mile. But even this was hard work, for the gelding was so full of running, and Diana apparently so content that he should go as he pleased, that the pace increased perceptibly as they approached the extremity of the field and the fence which bounded it.

Again the two animals were upon almost even terms. Again they slipped in rising, splintered the topmost rail with their clattering iron-shod hoofs, and landed at sixes and sevens. And still again the riders cleverly averted catastrophe and brought their mounts up standing, in good shape for a try at the third, and final, obstacle intervening between them and the finish.

Diana leaned forward in her saddle, and Spottiswoode followed suit; Diana tapped Sunshine's smoking side with the heel of her tiny hunting-boot, and Spottiswoode responded with an earnest and effectual dig at Mimi's ribs; Diana came back with another signal of the heel, and thus it went—tit for tat, spurt for spurt—until Spottiswoode was all but driven to cry:—"Pull up!" But something beyond him throttled the command in his throat, where his heart seemed also to have flown, and they raced at hair-brained speed for the final take-off.

Even the horses, themselves, seemed to scent danger in their headlong pace, for a few strides from the fence they commenced to prop and flounder in an effort to slow up, and thus secure a better foothold from which to leap. But their hesitancy served to make the chances of disaster even greater than an increase of speed would have done. Spottiswoode saw the danger instantly, and shouted to Diana:

"Rush him!"

She heard, and with one blow of the crop cut Sunshine loose an instant before the rise—which came simultaneously with such a whoop from Spottiswoode as fairly startled both Mimi and the gelding into springing higher and farther, almost, than they knew how. The familiar "rip-rap" of scudding hoofs upon timber; the dull thud of landing; and then a wild, helter-skelter dash across the narrow road, to gain the dryish streak down the centre of the boulevard, into which thoroughfare the contestants bumped and scurried with scant ceremony on either side.

Diana's color, which had ebbed at the crucial moment of rising to the last obstacle, now flooded back into her face, as she felt the swift-pattering feet of Sunshine upon the firm roadway beneath. As for Spottiswoode, he knew a great and indescribable relief, and drew the first good long breath which had been vouchsafed him since leaving the starting point. He bent far over Mimi's neck, to throw every ounce of weight possible on the mare's twinkling fore-legs, and rushed her up alongside the gelding.

"I'm after you!" he yelled across the scant yard separating his knee and Diana's.

"That won't win!"

Spottiswoode's further comment came in a sudden burst of speed from the game Mimi which was almost instantly neutralized by a like acceleration of Sunshine's gait, and the pair thundered along the boulevard at a pace which would not have discredited the gelding in his three-year-old year, when, to quote a tout, "he beat everybody's colt." At any rate to the occupants of the several rigs which were driven hurriedly into the gutter and safety before the onslaught of the heedless twain it seemed as though a whole squad of crazy, frantic animals were running amuck when Sunshine and Mimi rushed by, amid the greatest clatter and fuss ever raised in the quiet atmosphere of the town's most aristocratic driveway.

Entering upon the last sixteenth of the mile, Mimi faltered for an instant and Shottiswoode picked up his crop for a final rally. He pulled in still closer to Diana, and she heard him faintly above the din, saying:

"I hate to beat you—but it's do or die with me!"

"Do your best!" she flung back, without looking in his direction.

He did. His stout crop rose time and again, to fall hurtling upon Mimi's quivering side. Faster and faster he flogged and spurred, and Mimi responded nobly to each stinging reminder with a still greater flash of speed. But the little mare's limit was nearly reached. Try as she would she could not shake off Sunshine, who measured stride for stride with her, despite the fact that Diana had, as yet, merely ridden him with hand and heel.

With the winning post scarce a hundred feet away Spottiswoode's heart sank as he saw Diana pick up her crop. He felt Mimi hanging under him and redoubled the rapidity and strength of his flogging, but the mare was barely driven to shove the length of her shapely neck in front of her easily running rival. Slowly, surely, Sunshine began to cut down this scant lead. His white muzzle pushed up beyond Mimi's shoulder; beyond the throat-latch of her bridle; and then, a couple of jumps from the finish, Spottiswoode beheld Diana's lithe arm poised for a blow. He felt certain that when it fell he was beaten, and yet he watched with bated breath—with a sort of hopeless fascination—for its coming. The next instant and the crop flashed downward—and still Mimi's flaring nostrils were in front! The stroke had fallen soundless upon Diana's fluttering skirt and the boot beneath it. Before she could deliver another blow they had flown by the post,—with Mimi the winner by a matter of inches!

For one second before starting to pull up, Spottiswoode shot a glance over at Diana in which there mingled strangely all of gratitude, inquiry and reproach. Whereat a deeper crimson suffused her face, and with a single cut she sent Sunshine bounding a length before Mimi. Nor did Diana stop there, but sat down to ride even as Spottiswoode had ridden before gaining the goal—as though salvation depended upon her efforts, and Sunshine just sailed away from the honest but lame and exhausted mare as though she were anchored.

Puzzled and mortified almost beyond thought, Spottiswoode essayed to pursue the fugitive, but soon recognizing the futility of any such attempt, he pulled the willing Mimi to a walk and dejectedly turned her head for the Club stables; looking over his shoulder as he went, to catch a last glimpse of the recreant Diana sweeping around a turn in the boulevard, a quarter of a mile away and streaking for home as if the very devil himself pursued her!

Someone has said that "the morning after the night before" generally provides a painful awakening. So does the morning after the cropper of yesterday, as Spottiswoode discovered upon awakening in his rooms at the Club.

He was sore from head to foot, with a particularly nasty and persistent twinge in his right side, which even the note that the noiseless Robert handed him could not entirely dispel.

It read:—

Tuesday.

Dear Jack:—

Can you ever forgive me for yesterday's crazy wind-up? Your look shamed me so that I had but one thought—to get away!

Was it a crime to trick you as you had tricked me so many times in the field this season?

The stakes are yours—if you will but claim them. Can I say more?

"Diana."

Each time Spottiswoode re-read the little missive he kissed it, much to the sedate Robert's astonishment. And then he decided to rise, dress, and seek Diana. But for very good reasons he abandoned the attempt, to fall back groaning upon his pillow; and Dr. Dann, who luckily was breakfasting at the Club, assured him that, barring a "scalp wound, contused knee and broken rib," he was "right as a trivet"; and that he would not necessarily be laid up for more than "two or three weeks at most." Which was a comfort—or otherwise—according to how you looked at it.

However, when Diana came over in person, immediately upon learning of her conqueror's plight, it mattered but little to the broken-up victor how soon he was mended—for, naturally, Diana brought the stakes with her.

SURE EYES CURED
Baby Phillips' Grateful Mother Sends a Remarkable
TESTIMONIAL TO CUTICURA
"When my little girl was a few months old her eyes became very sore. I took her to a hospital for twelve months, but her eyes seemed to grow worse. One doctor said they might be bad for years. I was one day stopped on the street by a Mrs. Todd who told me Cuticura Ointment had cured her boy. I commenced using it that very night. The cure has been marvelous. Before I had used one box of Ointment her eyes were as healthy as if there had never been anything the matter with them.—Mrs. F. Phillips, Grafton Street, Waverly, Sydney, N. S. W." Reference, R. WALL STREET GOSSIP.

Weekly Letter from the Star Correspondent.

New York, June 3.—Wall Street is experiencing the liveliest curiosity as to what effect the enforcement of the stock transfer tax law will have upon the local financial community. That prices will be affected merely by the law taking effect, no one anticipates. Ample time has been given for discounting the effect of the law upon prices, so far as that can be read in advance. Whatever disturbances of that sort the law may cause, brokers are genrally agreed, are most likely to be indirect and more or less delayed in making themselves apparent. Brokers of large experience place the classes of transactions which will be most affected in the following order: Pool operations, whether conducted simply for trading profits in existing issues, or for the distribution of new issues; the in-and-out trading of professionals on the floor; orders of the permanent commission house patronage; orders of the "public."

The pools will be the hardest hit, it is declared, because they frequently carry on an enormous business in one or two issues for days and weeks at a time without showing a profit, hoping ultimately to create a public following in their specialties and then to unload at a higher average selling price than the average buying price. Many of them now carry on their operations at a charge of only $2 per 100 shares, the regular commission between members of the exchange. This is just the amount of the new state tax, so that the expense of running a pool will be doubled by the enforcement of the stock sales tax.

The recent experiences of the pools have not been altogether satisfactory. For an unusually long period the public has held aloof, with the consequence that the recent break, or series of breaks, in the stock market caught the pools with heavy lines of long stock still on their books. Having been themselves the chief factors in the preceding extended advance, their own attempts to shift to the other side of the market left them almost no market at all. This result followed what was in several cases a course of trading on both sides of the market with an energy little short of recklessness. That pool managers will no longer throw their means into the manipulation of the market with such abandon is reckoned one of the most probable results of the new tax law. Much the same restraining influence will be exerted over the activities of the professional operators.

RUSSIAN SECURITIES.

The stock market this week has been largely a reflection of London sentiment. Although no public buying was stimulated by the news from abroad the market displayed a firm undertone and as the reports of the Russian defeat grew in magnitude a hardening tendency set in, culminating in a considerable rally. The Japanese victory, which was reflected abroad in advances of from 2 to 4 points in Japanese bonds, naturally was the most important market factor, although the local market did not reflect this influence as strongly as might have been expected. Possibly caution was exercised because of the fear that trouble might develop at Paris and Berlin because of the immense holdings in those financial centres of Russian bonds. Events proved, however, that, owing to their heavy accumulation of gold, the Parisian banking interests were abundantly able to lend support. As a matter of fact, the Continent interpreted the victory as favorable to Russian securities on the theory that the overwhelming defeat of the Czar's fleet made peace almost a certainty. While, of course, it may be that when support is no longer necessary the bonds will go lower, international banking houses express no fear of anything in the nature of a panic.

THE FRANCHISE TAX.

The long awaited Supreme Court franchise tax decision was handed down affirming the constitutionality of the law. Although this has caused more or less nervousness in the past relative to its effect upon the traction stocks these issues advanced after the announcement. The commodity markets were for once consistent with the news, wheat declining sharply because of the improved outlook for peace, and cotton advanced $1 a bale. The weather news from the West was generally more favorable, reports of trade conditions being also satisfactory. The Street was rather surprised that the stock market did not show greater buoyancy because of the Japanese victory, especially in view of the fact that the outstanding short interest is quite large. Commenting along these lines a large house said: "We do not think the stock market has responded as fully as it ought to have done to the Japanese victory. This, in our opinion, practically ends the war. Such is the interpretation which London has advanced." The news was received in Paris with surprising equanimity, considering the effect which the result of the battle must have upon peace terms. The attitude of the French led one banker here to remark that they must have concluded peace would be profitable to the Russians at any price.

THE RAILWAY SITUATION.

For a number of years the North-Western Railway situation has been a source of constant trouble as a market factor, as well as a menace to the prosperity of the railway business in that part of the country, and the elimination therefore of the unsettled conditions that have prevailed for so long a time, involving personal and corporate relations of the largest financial interests in the United States, is deep with meaning as an augury of complete harmony among the men who control such a large proportion of the railway business in this country. Doubtless later in the season the resumption of cordial relations between the Harriman and Morgan-Hill interests will become a more important factor in the stock market, while it is also probable that before many weeks the transfer of stocks fro mweak to strong hands which has been going on for a month or more will exert its natural influence on speculation. At the moment the greater number of Wall Street traders believe that the market will be a waiting one, with good chances for quick turns on both sides, but the same people hold that the high prices made earlier in the year ought to be recorded again before the close of the year, barring, of course, widespread disturbance in the industrial world, crop failures and legislation by Congress unfavorable to the business interests of the country. Just now there is no indication of the development of any of the factors named.

DEAR MONEY.

About the first of July there may be a brief period of dearer money, owing to the shifting of loans that will take place at this time incident to the July interest and dividend disbursements, but the outlook favors easy rates throughout the summer, despite the possibility of gold exports in the course of the next two months. Europe, however, does not need our gold, and an outward movement of the metal will merely represent the settlement of our obligations abroad in a way most profitable to the banking community. The United States could spare many millions of gold for foreign exchange transactions. The supply of money in the country is large, national bank note circulation has increased in the last few months, the addition to the amount of money in the country through coinage of domestic gold has been heavy and more money has become available for the purposes of trade and speculation through the excess of federal government expenditure over receipts.

Montreal Trade Conditions.

Dun's Bulletin of Saturday, June 3rd, says of Montreal trade: In the Montreal district the weather continues of a cool, backward character, and general growth is behind hand, but meadows and pastures are looking well, and the make of cheese promises to be large. Exports in this line are showing up very fairly, 31,000 boxes having been shipped last week, and for butter there is quite an active demand with a strong market. In the general trade situation there is no very marked change, the spirit of careful buying being still more or less manifest. Groceries show a little freer movement, but dry goods retailers complain that the weather continues unfavorable to the rapid selling of light summer fabrics. Heavy metal men report some liberal buying by the railway companies, and there is a very fair demand for nails, cements, glass, paints and other building material. Leather still rules quiet, but western shoe jobbers are reported as more disposed to place orders, and a better enquiry is expected shortly from boot and shoe manufacturers. Changes in values are few, but turpentine has scored a phenomenal advance and is up to $1.05, a record figure; calfskins are advanced to 15c for No. 1, and lamb-skins to 25c.

Burglars Work St. Laurent.

Burglars visited the presbytery at St. Laurent last night and secured a small sum of money from the office of the parish priest, Rev. Father Dion, C.S.C. The intruder secured admission through a window, which he smashed, then got into the parish priest's office.

Here he ransacked the drawers of the priests's desk until he found a box containing the cash box used for the ordinary daily business affairs of the parish. Taking the box he decamped in a hurry, and after rifling the box of its contents he threw it in the street, where it was found early this morning. The loss is trifling, and search for the culprit has so far proved vain.

PROPRIETORS WHO PROTEST AWARD

Claim That Expropriation Commissioners Gave Too Little.

STRANGE THEFT OF LUMBER

Sum of $5,000 to Finish St. Denis Fire Station—West End Gets Promise.

At the meeting of the Finance Committee yesterday afternoon protests were read from L. O. Grothe and others, against certain awards that had been given by the Expropriation Commissioners in connection with the widening of St. Lawrence street above Sherbrooke street.

Ald. L. A. Lapointe, and other members, said that some delay should be given in order to thoroughly enquire into the protests. The city did not want to rush any expropriation matters through.

The City Attorney was called in and asked his opinion as to the city's future course in the matter. After some discussion it was unanimously resolved that if any wrong had been done proprietors, it should be repaired. At the same time if the original awards were found to be just and impartial, the city would not consent to give proprietors more than they were legally entitled to.

Ald. Carter expressed annoyance over a case where the city had a lot of lumber stolen from one of the city's parks. It appears the supposed stolen lumber had been located by the Detective Department of the city, but for some reason or other the officials in care of the parks could not positively identify the lumber. Ald Carter said it was a remarkable thing that a large quantity of lumber could be stolen from the city and that it could not be got back again, and the guilty parties punished. He considered that the affairs of the city in many instances were conducted in a remarkable manner.

The decision was arrived at to probe more fully into the whole peculiar affair.

COAL CONTRACTS.

The committee took up the question of amending contracts for 400 tons of hard coal. In all, nine tenders were secured.

Members of the committee complained that the tenderers all quoted the same prices, viz., $6.50 a ton for egg and $6.25 for furnace. It was also contended that the price of coal in Montreal was too high.

The coal merchants present said that the price could not be lowered owing to the combine in the United States. All coal dealers made on the deal was $1.00 a ton, and the price included cartage from the wharves to the City Hall.

The 400 tons were divided among the following-named tenderers: Messrs. Pouport, Labrecque, Baillie, Cohen, McCrory, Lemire, Trudel, Lefebvre, National Coal Company and Lackawana Coal Company.

Ald. Walsh and Duquette asked the committee to vote an additional sum in order to complete No. 18 fire station in St. Denis ward. It was explained that the station could not be properly completed unless an additional amount were voted.

It was decided to vote the sum of $5,000 to complete the work.

When voting the amount, Ald. Carter said: "When a new fire station is put up on St. Catherine street, in the west end, I hope a really fine station, and not a shack will be put up."

Ald. Lapointe—"We will see that a first class station is put up in the west end."

Annexation of St. Henri.

To the Editor of the Montreal Star:

Sir,—A very important report of the special committee on annexation has been made in favor of annexing St. Henri.

Their action shows the great business capacity of the committee and how the interests of the citizens are considered and protected by civic representatives.

The report shows:

Property assessed	$6,105,240
Special and other exempt property	1,550,321
Total property valuation	8,658,845

One-fifth of the property is unproductive and a civic and financial burden to the citizens of St. Henri and the

Income for 1904	$101,438
Expenditure for 1904	154,442
With a deficit of	$53,003

and this represents about 5 per cent. on the value of the exempt properties.

Besides, the exempt properties there is an indebtedness of $1,779,419, so that what the committee recommends is practically speaking that the city of Montreal assume this indebtedness, the responsibility of protecting the immense amount of exempt properties free, and also the honor of paying from $30,000 to $50,000 a year deficiency on the St. Henri taxation, and besides this the interest on the indebtedness of $1,779,419, amounting, at 4 per cent., to about $70,000 a year.

TAX PAYER.

Kidd's Treasures in Nova Scotia.

To the Editor of the Montreal Star:

Sir,—The discovery of what appears to be a rough plan, lettered and figured, on the flat surface of a quartzite boulder on Macnab's Island, Halifax Harbor, has started many local theories as to possible sites of hidden treasure on the island.

Can you or any of your readers enlighten us as to any tradition connecting Captain Kidd, or any other pirate, with the island?

Baedeker, on page 87 of his Handbook of Canada, alludes to the tradition that Oak Island—some 35 miles to the S.W. of Halifax—is the repository of Captain Kidd's treasure. The Encyclopaedia Britannica gives Captain Kidd a place in its Index, and alludes to him twice in the body of the work. It does not, however, furnish a biography of the famous pirate, nor does it connect him in any way with Nova Scotia. It alludes to the fact that he concealed some treasure in a small island off Long Island, N.Y., some of which was recovered by a subsequent Governor of Massachusetts.

The only reason I have for thinking that a tradition exists connecting Captain Kidd with Macnab's Island is that the crew of an American fishing schooner obtained permission some four years ago to dig—under careful supervision—for hidden treasure on the shores of Macnab's Cove.

They had an old torn and much-patched map, with the help of which they were confident they would find the treasure.

Their search—which was conducted within 300 yards of the recently discovered quartzite boulder—appears to have been unsuccessful.

Possibly, however, they might have succeeded, had they discovered the marked rock.

I should be glad to know whether any authentic historical data exists as to Captain Kidd and his treasure.

MARCONI

This is the decade of innovations marked by the appearance of enterprises, which do all that their predecessors did and something beside, and they enjoy the added reward of doing that something else.

A trust company does all that a bank formerly did and something beside. A department store does all that the separate concerns used to do and something beside. Countless other examples might be cited. You know well what the earnings of these newer enterprises are in contrast to their predecessors.

Wireless Telegraphy is to do all that the telegraph, telephone or cable have done or can do, and something beside. The increased income is an inseparable and integral part of that doing something else.

The Marconi Wireless Telegraph Co. of Canada is daily approaching that day when the increased income will be a matter of fact, and not theory.

Are you a shareholder and in the position to secure your part of that income? The stock is selling at par or $5 per share today. It may not be to-morrow.

WHAT CAUSES THE LAWLESS SPIRIT

War Will Be Pushed on by Russia the Same as Ever.

CONDITIONS IN OLD WORLD

Interview With J. Cars, Formerly of Poland, Who Studied Eurppean and American Questions.

The throwing of the bomb at the carriage occupied by King Alfonso of Spain and President Loubet, at Paris, Monday, by an anarchist, must heighten the sense of uneasiness which has long been felt by those in official position everywhere and particularly in Europe. The lawless spirit, the recklessness of human life and the general feeling of unrest which is more or less evident in the old world is doubtless, largely created or sustained by the many wars which have been carried on throughout the world during the past few years. Not least among these is the present conflict between Russia and Japan, and the bloody battles fighting and yet to come, and the unrest and rioting in Russia, all contribute to familiarize the public with deeds of violence and to make the contemplation of bomb-throwing and murder less revolting. And yet, so far as can be gathered from those who are acquainted with the methods of Russia, the war will be prosecuted as vigorously as in the past, notwithstanding the destruction of the Russian fleet.

"Russia will keep up the fight, unless her internal troubles develop and compel her to desist, I think," said Mr. J. Cars when asked for his views by a Star reporter. Mr. Cars went to the United States about eighteen years ago from Poland and has since made a study of economic questions both as applied to this country and to Europe.

"What makes you think that?" asked the reporter.

UPPER CLASS IN CONTROL.

"Simply for the reason that the upper classes have little to lose by continuing the war and everything to lose by stopping it. I should judge that not more than five per cent. of the fatalities in the war were contributed by the upper classes, while probably 15 per cent. came from the middle or merchant class, and the working people contribute the balance of 80 per cent. There are lots of working people in Russia, and it will not be greatly to the disadvantage of the aristocracy if a few millions of them were killed off. So the war will be carried on as the lesser of two evils."

"Do the socialists or the anarchists principally object to the war?"

"Oh, no, I do not think so. The situation is not very well understood in this country. The internal troubles of Russia are not between the various 'isms to such an extent as is generally thought. There are three classes in Russia—the aristocracy, or the upper class, the merchant, or middle class, and the working class. The objection to the war comes to some extent from all three upon humane grounds; from the Tolstoi school, in the upper class; the Michalovsky school, in the merchant class, and the Gorki school, in the working class, the teachings of which schools are having a deep effect upon the youth. Then a very great number of others, particularly of the working class, object to it because they are paying for it, and they do not want to be shot. The merchant class were mostly in favor of it at the start, as they hoped through it to gain new markets, just as the merchants in England and America hope to gain new markets through their wars. But now that the fighting is going against the Russian army, and the cost is running up, even the merchant class would like to see it stopped. But it will continue all the same, unless some kind of outbreak at home demands the attention of the army."

"Is this likely to take place?"

ARMY WILL BE WANTED AT HOME.

"Sooner or later it likely will, but for that matter signs are not wanting that it will take place also in America and in England. In Russia the situation is that the aristocratic and merchant classes are fighting one another to obtain the assistance or the control of the working class. The merchant class will probably not do any more for them than have the aristocrats, but incidentally the working people will gain much freedom and education, which will aid them to, in turn, free themselves of the merchant class. Meantime the merchant class is fighting the aristocrats. They are demanding more freedom for the expansion of industry. The laws of the country and the restrictions of one sort and another are inimical to the growth of trade. They, therefore, call out to the working people to come and help them gain liberty for all. They say we will have a democracy a free state, where all may vote and not be oppressed.

"And the governing class, finding them becoming stronger, are now making a bid for the support of the workingman. They recently gave him what they are pleased to call the right to organize—in fact they sent an organizer, one Zubatov, to form unions among them which would strike against the merchant classes. He was to make them believe that the merchant classes were their oppressors, that they were not getting their fair share of what they produced and that their employers were getting it instead. The workingman will be victimized no matter who is his master."

"Is it not a fact that the working classes are in a very bad condition in Russia and that they are on the verge of revolt?"

NOT ON VERGE OF REVOLT.

"Yes, they are in a bad condition. But so far as the economic conditions are concerned, with respect to employer and employed, they are much the same in Russia as in other places. In fact, the proportion of what the workman gets of his own production is greater in Russia than in the United States, even, being about 33 per cent. in Russia to about 20 per cent. in the United States. Of course he does not produce so much in Russia, so that the reward to both employer and employed is less than in this country.

"I do not know that they are on the verge of revolt, however. The history of Russia is much the same as that of England and other countries. The people first owned the land in common. A class took possession of it, and with it, of the people. They became the aristocrats and their necessity for luxury involved the impoverishing of other classes. The next to highest class, finding their road to wealth closed by the laws and exactions of the aristocracy, then demanded a greater share of power. In England they got it; in Russia they have not got it yet, but they will get it. It will be a step in advance, because it will give the workingman greater intimacy with political methods and will in time enlighten him. Then he will demand of the classes above him to restore the property they usurped. We have not got that far in this continent, but from the character of a manifesto recently issued to the 'Workingmen of the World,' by the Industrial Union of America, calling for a convention at Chicago on 27th inst., I should say we are approaching it. Who can say whether or not a revolt will be necessary here before the workingman succeeds in wresting his share from the merchant and upper classes, and who can say whether a revolt will be necessary in Russia before the merchant classes will succeed in passing the steps taken by your English ancestors long ago of wresting from the aristocratic classes their share of power?"

Sacred Heart League of St. Patrick's.

The success which has invariably attended the excursions and pilgrimages organized by the parishioners of St Patrick's bids fair to be fully equaled, if not surpassed by the turnout for the pilgrimage of the League of the Sacred Heart, to Lavorde on June 22nd. The steamer Beaupre, one of the finest of the Richelieu fleet, has been secured for the occasion.

The organizers of the pilgrimage have been receiving numerous enquiries for state-rooms, as well as for tickets for the trip, and considerable interest is being manifested by the parishioners in the arrangements.

While alighting from a street car, the plaintiff was thrown to the ground, breaking her wrist. Examined by Mr. F. J. CORNER STONE OF ST. AGNES' CHURCH

Ceremonies Will Take Place Early in Afternoon To-morrow.

MGR. RACICOT TO PRESIDE

Sermon Will Be Delivered by Rev. Father O'Meara, of St. Gabriel's Parish.

The laying of the corner stone of St. Agnes' Church, on St. Denis street, near the corner of Lajeith, will take place at 2.30 p.m. to-morrow, weather permitting.

His Lordship Mgr. Racicot, auxiliary bishop of Montreal, will officiate, and a sermon suitable for the occasion will be delivered by Rev. Father O'Meara, parish priest of St. Gabriel's. The ceremony will take place at 2.30 p.m.

St. Agnes' is the latest addition to the English speaking Catholic parishes of Montreal. For many years the Irish and other English-speaking Catholics living within the confines of St. Jean Baptiste parish, were under the special charge of Rev. W. J. Casey, one of the curates of that parish. As the English-speaking Catholics migrated in increasing numbers to the North end of the city, settling in the district of St. Louis de France and St. Jean Baptiste churches, it became apparent that there would soon be enough English-speaking Catholics in the neighborhood to form a parish of their own. Rev. Father Casey was designated by circumstances to be the pastor of the new parish, as he had been working on that ground for years.

Accordingly, on August 10th, 1903, a petition was sent to His Grace Archbishop Bruchesi, asking for the erection of a new parish. There was some opposition to the plan on the part of those who did not wish to sever their connection with St. Patrick's, the parent Irish parish in the city. These sentimental objections were overcome, after a time, however, and after several preliminary meetings had been held, the parish of St. Agnes was organized, to be composed of the English-speaking Catholics in the parish of St. Jean Baptiste, and that portion of the parish of St. Louis de France extending south as far as Pine avenue. The canonical erection took place on May 1st, 1904, and the first High Mass was celebrated by the pastor, Rev. Father Casey, on May 8th of the same year, in the hall of Ober School, Roy street, which as been used ever since as a chapel awaiting the time when their own temple will be ready for occupation.

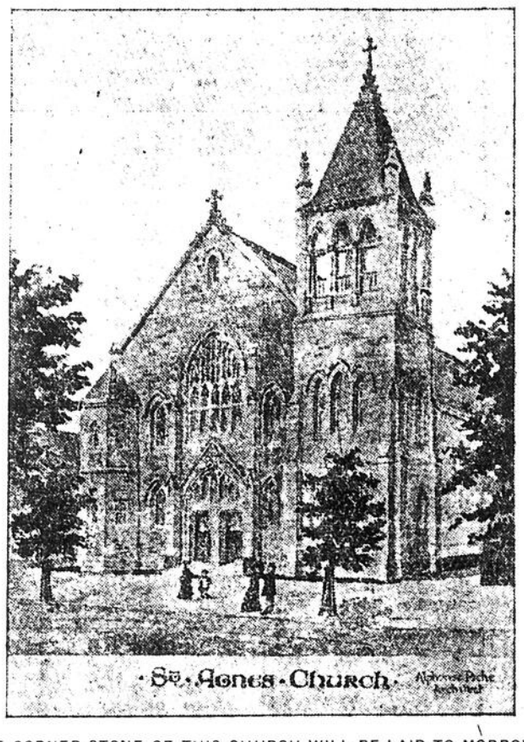
The civil erection of the parish took place on June 4th, and a short time later the first church wardens were elected. These were Messrs. Daniel Ford, J. F. Quinn, M. Keegan, T. Murphy, Andrew Thompson, M. Donovan, T. Markey, G. A. Elliot. These gentlemen set to work with the pastor, and assisted by the five hundred families of the parish they soon collected together a sufficient sum to justify them in looking around for property on which to construct their new church.

Again here there arose a difference of opinion. Many were of the opinion that the site on St. Denis street was too small for future purposes, for while it affords ample room for the parishioners of to-day, should that section grow proportionately as it has done within the past ten years it will be quite a problem to provide room for the church goers. The party headed by the pastor prevailed, however, and the work was undertaken on the site which he favored. The ground was secured and the excavations for the foundations undertaken. It took twenty feet to reach solid bottom at the front of the edifice, and some thirteen feet in the rear, but a suitable base for the church seems now to have been secured, and the foundations laid. The corner stone will therefore be laid to-morrow, amid great rejoicing.

Rev. Frank J. Singleton, a Montreal boy, was appointed on December 24th the first curate of the new parish, and has become a prime favorite with the people. Regular services are held on Sunday in the Ober school hall, while on week days the services take place at the Hospice Au dair, where Rev. Fathers Casey and Singleton have their residence.

It is the intention of the pastor and church trustees to build the new church without imposing any special tax on the real estate proprietors liable to contribution for the new church. Mr. Daniel Ford, one of the parishioners, has generously advanced the necessary funds to contract the church, and has agreed to give ample time for the return of his funds, so that the first part of the difficulty has been solved. The pastor has organized in the parish a devoted band of collectors who raise subscriptions in all parts of the parish each week, so that when the work began a substantial sum was at the disposal of the fabrique.

A grand garden party for the benefit of the church Building Fund will be held at the Montagnard Rink on the 5th, 6th 7th and 8th inst. On the first night, there will be a Band concert, on the second night, a Euchre contest will take place under the auspices of Branch No 323 of the C. M. B. A., on Wednesday night, the festivities of the Garden Party will be brought to a close by a vocal concert given by a select choir.



THE CORNER-STONE OF THIS CHURCH WILL BE LAID TO-MORROW BY BISHOP RACICOT.

THE HOME-MAKER'S DEPARTMENT

Four Novel Salads.

A spring luncheon is quite incomplete without some kind of a salad, and the clever housekeeper is always on the qui vive for a new recipe. The three following come to us from England and are as appetizing as they are new.

The first is corn salad. Take what you consider sufficient corn for the number of people to be served. At this time of the year it must of necessity be canned corn, but a little later the fresh corn on the cobs will be available. If the canned corn is not quite tender boil it until it is. Then drain thoroughly. Make a thick mayonnaise dressing and thin with a little thick cream. Mix this with the corn, arrange in a dish, sprinkle over the top finely chopped parsley and pickled cherries, and surround with shredded lettuce hearts or watercress, or any green salad. If this salad is made with the fresh corn the cobs should be boiled in salted water, and when cooked the corn cut from the cobs with a sharp knife and then used. This is an excellent way to utilize ears of corn that are left over from a meal.

The second salad is quite a new one—strawberry salad. This is made by selecting a pound of large, ripe strawberries, cutting them in thick slices and dusting lightly with sugar. Then sprinkle with a tablespoonful of salad oil and a quarter of a pint of white wine. Place on the ice and just before serving surround with watercress. This salad is particularly delicious served with hot roast chicken or duckling.

The third and last salad is asparagus salad. Cook sufficient asparagus until tender. Cut off the heads down to the tough white part. Make a thick mayonnaise and thin with half the quantity of cream. Color it a soft green. Coloring extracts can be bough at any good grocer's, and, if judiciously used, add immensely to the appearance of many dishes. Pour the green mayonnaise over the asparagus, surround with golden aspic jelly and sprinkle finely chopped truffles and pickled gherking over the top. Serve very cold.

Italian salad is the last on our list. It is a boon to economical housekeepers for by its means it is possible to use up all those tantalizing little leftovers of vegetables. Take young carrots, string beans, peas, and cucumbers. Cut the beans into slices and the carrots and cucumbers into fancy shapes with the tin cutters that come for the purpose. Dress with mayonnaise to which a little tarragon vinegar has been added. Molsten white lettuce leaves with French dressing, place the vegetable mixture on it and serve. This makes a pretty and tasty salad.

Endive and Egg Salad.

Arrange a head of well washed and dried endive on a salad dish with the blanched leaves in the centre. Dispose about the blanched heart four hard-boiled eggs, cut lengthwise in quarters. Mix half a teaspoonful of salt, a teaspoonful of paprika and six tablespoonfuls of oil. Stir in gradually three tablespoonfuls of vinegar. Pour over the endive and egg. Toss together and serve.

Lettuce, Egg and Radish Salad.

Arrange three hard-boiled eggs, cut in slices, upon a bed of lettuce. Dispose about these radishes, cut in slices, with here and there a radish cut to resemble a flower. Mix half a teaspoonful of salt, a dash of paprika and six tablespoonfuls of oil; then stir in gradually three tablespoonfuls of lemon juice or vinegar. Pour over the salad, toss together and serve.

Orange and English Walnut Salad.

Slice four peeled oranges lengthwise, dress with three or four tablespoonfuls of Olive oil and one tablespoonful of lemon juice. Arrange slices in a mound upon a layer of lettuce leaves. Dress one cupful of sliced nut meats with one tablespoonful of oil, a dash of salt and half a tablespoonful of lemon juice, and dispose upon the centre of the mound. Toss together before serving.

Lobster a' la' Rushmore.

Cook a shallot and four mushroom stalks chopped fine in a tablespoonful of butter. Add salt and pepper, the meat of a two-pound lobster cut in cubes, and about a cupful of tomato sauce. Turn the heated mixture into the lobster shell and place mushroom caps above. Pour tomato sauce over these. Set in the oven for ten minutes, and serve on a folded napkin.

Strawberry Charlotte Glace.

Half freeze a pint of cream and a pint of milk cooked with a teaspoonful of cornstarch and one-fourth of a cupful of sugar; add a box of strawberries passed through a sieve, mixed with a cupful of sugar and the juice of half a lemon. When frozen, pack in a mould lined with lady-fingers. Stand in a covered pail, packed in ice and salt, for an hour.

Special Notice.

Well-Known Montrealer Has An Experience.

A prominent business man of Montreal noticing an advertisement of a second hand "Gerhard" Heintzman piano to be sold by auction, and this being a most unusual incident, he arranged to absent himself from business for half a day and hied him forth with the full expectation of securing a work of art at the price of other new Canadian pianos, but he was doomed to disappointment, as the bidding went with leaps and bounds up to about the retail price of a new Gerhard Heintzman. He left the place with disgust, but finished a good day's work by visiting the warerooms of J. W. Shaw & Co., where he selected from a large stock, one of the latest art styles from the master hand of Mr. Gerhard Heintzman, securing the 15 per cent. discount. This discount will apply during the next 30 days and responsible parties can take advantage of this bona fide discount and will be given time without increasing the price by simply paying bank interest on the unpaid amount.

If you contemplate the purchase of piano don't fail to call on J. W. Shaw & Co., 2274 St. Catherine street, who are the only agents for the genuine "Gerhard" Heintzman in Montreal and vicinity. 129 2eod

FROM A FEMININE STANDPOINT.

Concerning June Days and June Weddings. . . . . .

Sunny June days, and starry June nights! Has Nature in her most lavish mood given us anything more perfect? And yet there are Philistines among us who prate of damp grass, of undue heat, of slight chills, or of sour strawberries; who, while railing, hide themselves behind green blinds and long for bright fires. There are people to whom the dandelions alight in the grass, the daisies breaking into "foam of flowers" suggest merely weeds to be eradicated. There are people with no color sense, no knowledge of the beautiful, no conception of what is best worth having.

Like most people with eccentric ideas they seem to impose their beliefs on those with whom they are brought in contact. There are people with so little imagination that they lack sentiment; so firm a belief in the practical that they fail to realize the beauties of the ideal. Of such people the worst are not the oldest nor the youngest, but the hard headed middle aged. Earlier in life they worship reason less vehemently; later they forget it altogether. Youth and age are always on the side of romance.

Surely it was a pessimist who insisted that the joys of June like those of youth, existed only in an overworked imagination. And certainly it was a bachelor of the most unpleasant type who promulgated the theory that the first month of summer was pre-ordained as a period to be spoiled by sentimentalists who married—and lived to regret it.

In some circles nowadays it's the fashion to laugh at love's young dream, but on investigation, the more cynical the critic, the more certain it's proved that he is one of the unfortunates who has missed his matrimonial opportunities, or failed to make the most of them. Sane, unbiassed men and women never sneer at marriage. They know too well that in domestic life lies the greatest happiness that is to be found. They know too, that its duties are not to be undertaken lightly, and that matrimony while it brings a very real happiness entails many sacrifices.

People who are happy are content to take things quietly and not rush into the glare of the limelight. It is only when their mistakes have driven them to misery that they seek popular sympathy, and find instead—publicity. The most serious advocate of single blessedness might change his mind if, instead of making capital out of the few mistaken marriages he has come across, he would begin to count up the happy homes he knows. In numbers there is no comparison.

The domestic life can hardly be perfect while men and women remain as human as they are, as fond of their own way, and as determined in their own opinions. Marriage is a game of give and take, in which each must seek the happiness of the other. It demands sacrifices but it rewards generously. Love is the sunshine of life, and like it gilds into radiance the meanest landscape. Marriage begins with love and trust, if it does not end with them, both parties to the agreement are to blame. Patience and forbearance are far more necessary in the newly established menage than an elaborate trousseau or fine wedding presents. Matrimony is a career, and yet the girl who has perhaps spent years qualifing for a teacher, or months learning a trade, or half her life perfecting herself in music, will sometimes adopt her real life work as lightly as she would purchase herself a new gown. Every home where there are daughters should be a school for wives. Every mother should be the head of such a school, and her training of her girls should be along practical lines. Certainly it's delightful to be sufficiently nimble fingured to embroider a pretty centre piece for the dinner table, but it's of far more practical value to know how to prepare the meal itself. There's nothing nicer than the ability to spend money; and there is nothing more necessary than knowing how to save it. The young wife with a moderate housekeeping allowance must be her own bookkeeper; yet personally I have a good deal of sympathy with the girl who said "writing down what things cost doesn't make them any cheaper." But the practice certainly tends to make one careful and less extravagant. The man's part of life is to make the income, the woman's to see how elastic she can make it become.

When a woman well equipped for her life work is prevailed upon to marry, she starts with everything in her favor. If on the contrary she marries without thought of the responsibilities that await her, and more concerned wih her trousseau than her future, she will in all probability add one more to the awful examples the unmatrimonially inclined hold up as a public warning.

LEAVES FROM A NOTE-BOOK.

Our Humane Street Railway.

Last Saturday the Note-Book ventured a suggestion to the effect that it would be a kindly thing for the Street Railway to utilize their power in helping overladen horses up steep hills. Only three days later when going up Cote des Neiges in an open car, the car came to a sudden stop beside two long carts piled up with bricks. Everyone jumped to their feet, supposing there had been an accident. The conductor got off, fastened a chain from the front cart—the two carts were already fastened together—to the rear end of the car, and off the car went up the hill, slowly, but not more slowly than the cars often do go.

There was a general smile of pleasure among the passengers when they saw the supposed accident was a deed of kindness and the conductor was plied with questions. He was a pleasant, handsome young fellow, very anxious to please everybody, and to one of his questioners he said: "You do not mind, eh?" To this she replied: "Mind! Of course not. I am delighted." And that was the sentiment of all on board. What the feeling of the two pairs of tired horses, relieved of their load was, we were not told but we could imagine. When the car reached Pine avenue it took but a second to unhitch the chain and everyone went on their way happier for the incident. May it be only one of many such deeds of kindness, and all honor to the officials for making such deeds possible!

More About the Million Stamps.

The Spectator had a short essay on fallacies, dealing more particularly with the one that embraced the belief that a million stamps obtained admission to some hospital or other. This belief it said was absurd and probably originated in some one saying long ago when stamps first came in: "I wonder if it were possible to collect a million stamps?"

This essay in the Spectator immediately brought out a horde of correspondents anxious to refute this statement. One writer tells of an aunt of his who collected a million stamps and sold them for one hundred and twenty pounds, $600. With this money she obtained admission to a hospital for some poor person. She collected a second million but was offered only twenty pounds for this second lot, and, as she thought it insufficient, would not sell.

Another letter quotes from a Girls' Friendly Society Paper, which gives a list of girls who have been sent to the seaside with the proceeds of the sale of used stamps. From these letters it is evident that there is a market for old stamps. One extremely interesting explanation of the million stamp collection comes from two correspondents. The first tells how his father was at a hydropathic establishment in Humberslade, Yorkshire, in 1848. At the same time a young poet, called Alfred Tennyson, was staying there. All the inmates were tremendously interested in the endeavors of a young couple nearby to collect a million stamps. The lady's father would not give his consent to their union until, as a prove of their love, they collected a million stamps. Consequently every friend and acquaintance was called upon to help. This seems a curious and almost incredible tale, but is given upon good authority and receives confirmation from a second writer, who gives the same story with less detail. We are not told how long it was before the young couple were married nor what they did with all the stamps. Perhaps they used them to paper their drawing room as a sign to all visitors of their constancy and determination.

IN AID OF THE CRECHE.

Under the patronage of Hon. Lomer Gouin and of Honore Gervais, M.P., an excursion in aid of the work done by the "Creche de la Misericorde," will be held on June 15th. The outing, which will take place by the steamer Beaupre to St. Ours, has been organized by the patrons of the institution to aid in paying off the taxes owed this year.

REPLIES TO CORRESPONDENTS.

E. L. (Morristown, N.J.)—Apply to the secretary of the Y.W.C.A., Montreal. (2) Yes, in Toronto.

E. L.—The best man attends the groom at the altar, and, after the ceremony, escorts the maid of honor to her carriage. He hands the clergyman his fee on behalf of the groom, and sometimes secures the railway tickets, etc., and sees to the checking of the baggage. Beyond sending a wedding present he has no expenses in connection with the wedding at which he acts as best man.

R. (Three Rivers)—A bride usually carries a bouquet, though sometimes instead of flowers she carries a prayer book bound in white. A bride's bouquet is usually of white flowers—roses, lilies of the valley, or carnations being the favorites. (2) A bride's wreath is usually of orange blossoms.

Violet.—People who are engaged should be careful not to appear so absorbed in themselves as to attract attention. You are very foolish to worry because your fiance is not much taller than you are. A man's worth does not depend on his appearance; and if you really cared for him such things would not worry you. If your friends' only objection to your choice is his lack of inches, you need not pay any attention to them. I fancy you cannot care as deeply as you should for the man you have promised to marry or you would not need advice. Marry him if you love him, and if you do not love him, explain the situation and ask him to release you from your engagement. (3) A chaperone is not necessary.

Vibo.—See reply to E. L.

Effie M.—An authority gives the following rules to be followed by the girl who would banish wrinkles: Steam the face once a week with hot cloths.

Massage the flesh every night with pore food.

Massage the cheeks nightly with something to make the skin brisk and lively.

Wash the face well every night before putting in the pore food.

And, finally, cultivate the habit of sleeping so that there may be no creases in the face. The Chinese women and the Japanese, who never have wrinkles, sleep on a hard bed with no pillow. They do not bury the face in soft feathers. They never get up with creases but with the face smooth and fair.

Dr. Hugo's Health Tablets for Women

Are the Up-to-Date Remedy.

Medicines, like clothes, are made from different materials now than they were twenty-five years ago. Some of the materials used in making Dr. Hugo's Health Tablets for Women had not been discovered then. You cannot get these new ingredients in the old time remedies. And yet these ingredients are used now in diseases of women by all the world's greatest physicians.

Progressive women—thinking women keep up-to-date in the matter of medicines as well as clothes. They are buying Dr. Hugo's Health Tablets, the twentieth century preparation for women, and the one now recognized beyond doubt or question as the one best adapted to their special needs.

They make healthy women.

Attempt to Color the Violet.

Considerable interest is being evinced in the fashionable world, over the attempt by the florists of Paris to color the beautiful little violet, the idea being to produce a deep, reddish mauve or mauve red shade, said to be very effective when combined with the natural clear coloring of the Paris violet.

As a table decoration, the combination of the two shades, relieved by the pure white violet, is described as being very novel and beautiful. The Paris florists are also, I hear, exhibiting blue carnations and hydrangeas.

To what length will the love of novelty not lead us? Surely man could be better occupied than in wasting his energies in seeking to improve upon the beauties of God's creations.

Women as Telegraphers.

To be a successful stenographer must have memory, perseverance, gift of spelling, and a fairly comprehensive knowledge of the English guage.

On this last point, however, opinseem to differ, as it is no uncom but, on the contrary, quite the acce thing, to find a stenographer deficient in the last qualification, manding a salary considerably in vance of that received by a less tunate confrere, possessed of cu and educational advantages far su lor.

FRAE AULD SCOTIA

MAIR AN' MAIR CRIMES

Frae Oor Ain Correspondent.

Glasgow, May 24.—I wonder mony a time what John Knox wad hae thocht—or is thinkin'—o' the Scotland that is noo makin' a fuss ower his "quater-centenary." I expect he wad first want to ken what that word means, for the folk o' his day werena in the habit o' keepin' sic occasions, an' nae didna need sic words. Onyway, he wad be sure to think there was as muckle need as ever for him to preach against the vanities o' the times, an' the fa'in' awa' frae the plain an' simple doctrines that he believed in wi' a' the licht he had. I'm no sure, for that maitter, that he wadna haud up his han's in holy horror even at his ain Kirk o' St. Andrews, where they're to put up a memorial to him, an' say "Vanity o' vanities, all things are vanity." It was in the parish Kirk o' St. Andrews he began his ministry in 1547, as a preacher to them wha believed in the "Reformed Faith," an' the idea is that the kirk should noo be improved, an' made mair a credit to the place an' its traditions, an' that an' inscription tellin' o' its connection wi' Knox should be put up inside it.

Even if the Reformer didna fin fau't wi' the inscription inside the parish Kirk o' St. Andrews, he wad hae plenty o' reason to pour out the vials o' his wrath, as he did in the Tron Kirk o' Edinburgh again puir Mary Queen o' Scots an' a' the Roman Catholics she took frae France wi' her. For we seem, for better or for waur, to be cuttin' adrift frae maist o' the auld-time ways, an' the principles which, if we are to believe the unca guid, made Scotland what it is. The city o' Glasgow has decided, by 53,389 votes to 45,181, that the new Art Galleries should be open on Sundays, an' noo the kirk folk are mournin' since mair the tendencies o' the age, an' the way we are a' losin' respect for the guid auld Scottish Sabbath. Just as if we didna already hae Sunday cars, daein a bigger trade than on ony ither day o' the week, an' some Sunday trains, some Sunday steamers to the coast, a' the parks, the haill o' the great hills an' bonnie valleys, the seashore wi' its white sands an' big cliffs, the country wi' its wee burns, its white gowans an' its bramble bushes alang the roadside—a' open for the public Sunday as weel as week day. Providence disna close His Art Galleries or the Sunday, but His servants, in their wisdom, wad close their bits o' stane an' lime huts an' keep us frae seein' their hits o' canvas wi' paint splashed on it, an' then think they were daein' Him service. It's a wonderfu' thing the inconsistency o' the human conscience.

But John Knox wad likely say history is provin' that the auld ways were the best. Look, he wad say, at your ain police reports. Your Prison Commissioners tell ye that in 1904, altho' there was less drunkenness, an' ye were mair orderly, ye were gettin' waur an' waur in the maitter o' serious crime. The cases o' fraud were 37 per cent. ower the average o' the past five years, an' the cases o' burglary 54 per cent. There were 13,000 persons wha saw the inside o' a gaol for the first time in their lives, an' ye passed sentence on nearly twa hunder boys an' lassies less than sixteen years auld. This is what a' your eddication an' civilization an' want o' strictness in religion has brocht ye. In my day the folk were less civilized, an' made less o' a fuss ower hoo muckle they kent, but I'm no sure but they were mair honest at heart than ye are, Catholics tho' lots o' them were.

An' then he micht tell us o' the lots o' honest folk in oor big toons that canna get a livin' because they canna get honest wark to dae. Last winter Edinburgh spent £4,000 odds in providin' wark for the warkless. The year 'afore the toon only spent £1,386, but even wi' the £4,000 there was but little done to redd up the great puzzle o' the unemployed. In Glasgow the money spent was a little mair, an' it, too, was mair than twice as muckle as in the year 'afore. An' for the £4,400 which Glasgow spent, it got only wark worth £3,400. This shows that warks for the relief o' the unemployed, while they only keep the folk frae starvin' in the cauld winter months, are at the same time a losin' concern. They're a sort o' expensive medicine that dulls the pain for a minute, but leaves the disease as bad as ever. What is needed is some law to abolish the disease.

The Reformer wad, I think, be interested in the kirks, maybe maist o' a' in the wee Original Secession Synod, which has been haudin' its meetin's in Edinburgh. It is mair connected wi' his day an' generation than ony o' the bigger kirks. An' there is somethin' pathetic aboot it that wad appeal to his feelin's an' mak him mair tender in his dealin's wi' Scotsmen o' the present day. The total amount raised by the denomination for religious purposes was £6,427, an' the average contribution per member was £1 14s. The membership o' the kirk was 3,733, an' the number o' adherents 1,354. As to the Divinity Hall o' the denomination there are only six students, an' only twa o' them belang to the Original Secession Kirk. The Original Seceders hae aye been the advocates o' the Simple Life, the life that disna tak a thocht o' what it shall eat, what it shall drink, or wherewithal it may be clothed, but does its duty faithfully in the warl'. But then it isna rich, an' in these days, when edicated men get big salaries in ither lines o' life, students winna be got to study an wark year after year for a prospect o' £125 an' a manse. Even if Knox cam back an' joined the Original Seceders, it wadna mak them a great denomination. For the day o' the Simple Life is past, never to come back ony mair.

Even in material things, entirely separate frae religion an' moral guidness, we're as far frae the days o' John Knox as east is frae west. There has been nearly a week o' trials o' motor cars on a' the maist uphill an' heaviest an' maist crooked roads in the Highlan's, an' sic an exhibition o' mad drivin' ower the King's highway has ne'er been seen in Auld Scotia. There is supposed to be a law against motor cars rinnin' at mair than a dizzen or a score o' miles an 'oor, but here were cars gaun at fifty miles an 'oor, an' ne'er a person to say they were daein' wrang. The authorities happened a' to be lookin' the ither way. The result was that in spite o' twa-three sma' accidents, the Scottish Automobile Club, which was carryin' oot the trials, proved that motor cars were terribly fast an' strong, an' nearly as safe as trains rinnin' on rails. This will help still mair to mak folk buy cars, an' to spoil the trade in 'cycles. We maun aye hae a craze o' some kind or ither, an' nae sooner does ae craze wear aff than anither comes on.

There seems to be nae end to the relics o Robbie Burns. Some months syne it was his ain Bible an' Highland Mary's Bible. Then later on it was his umbrella—or what the man wha discovered it believed was his umbrella—an' noo its his razor. But the curious thing aboot the razor is that it has turned up in the village o' Wardsville, Ontario where it has been for 40 years. Dr. W. H Rennie, o' that place, writes to the Glasgow Herald sayin' that Mr. Alex. McIntyre, o' Wardsville, got the razor frae a Mr. William Jameson, o' Troon, wha's faither got it frae Burns. When Mr McIntyre left Scotland he got the razor as a present, an' he has kept it a' the time he has been in Canada. A man frae London offered to buy it, but Mr McIntyre wad rather sell it to some Scottish Burns institution, an' noo that Burns men at hame ken o' it, they are sure to dae somethin' to lodge it in the monument at Ayr or the Cottage Homes at Mauchline or some ither place connected wi' the poet.

Ex-Bailie Willock, wha was a magistrate o' the city o' Glasgow, an' remains ane o' its maist respected public men, is just hame frae a tour in Canada an' the United States, an' he says there was naething that astonished the folk on that side o' the Atlantic sae muckle as when he said that Glasgow worked its ain gas, an' water, an' electricity, an' tramways, an' a lot o' ither things, without ony competition frae as muckle as ae private company. He says the chief men in the American an' Canadian cities were aye askin' him hoo the things were managed, an' he took guid care no to hide Glasgow's light under a bushel or under onything else. But he didna tell o' the big rows at the Toon Coonell the ither week which made the toon the laughin' stock o' the country. He hadna heard o' them, an' it was may be just as well. For the rows werena to the credit o' Glasgow.

If New Zealand wasna sae far awa' we micht hae been as weel acquainted wi' it as we are wi' Canada. Even as it is, there is a hame feeling aboot the name, an' we are aye hearin' o' somethin' that shows that the folk in New Zealand are thinkin' o' us. The ither day the Lord Provost got a letter askin' for things frae Scottish business men for a big International Exhibition which the New Zealanders are to open in November, 1906. The exhibition will gie Scotchmen a fine chance o' gettin' in close touch wi' New Zealand, an' as the shippin' companies hae promised reduced rates, an' goods can noo be shipped direct frae the Clyde, there's nae reason why there shouldna be a big "Scottish Section" at the exhibition.

The fairmers are glad that an Act o' Parliament which threatened to mak it law that ilka calf should carry a licht, was lost last week, though it was only by a majority o' ane. The motorists want a' kinds o' things that rin on wheels to hae lichts, sae that they mayna rin into them; but the fairmers canna see why they should be taxed simply because motorists will rin ower the roads after dark. The bill was killed maistly by the Scottish members o' Parliament, an' sae noo when a motor car rins into a fairmin cairt the man on the car winna be able to blame onybody but himsel'.

Workhouse Ghost Is Playing Havoc With Tramps In Clones.

FOR DAMAGE BY HUNTERS

M. F. H. of County Meath Mulcted for Riding Over a Farm—Irish Products.

From the Special Correspondent of the Montreal Star in Dublin.

Dublin, May 24.—The tramps who used to patronize Clones (County Monaghan) work-house have got a terrible fright, and it is unlikely that in future it will be as favorite a stopping place as it used to be. A work-house ghost is rather a rara avis, but a couple of big hulking tramps, who were guests for the night in the Casual ward, declare they were attacked at night, while in their beds, by an enormous ghost that handled them so roughly that one of the men fainted when let out. They declare that nothing on earth would induce them to face the horror of another night in that ward.

Another work-house horror took place Monday night at Naas (County Kildare), but in this case it was a lunatic that did the damage and not a ghost. An inmate of the lunatic ward, named James Dowling, was being removed from one room to another, and when he got out he seized a spade and struck an old man, named Nolan, a terrible blow on the head. Then running amuck, he got hold of an iron bar and smashed in the skull of a man named Pat Leary, who died that night from the effects of the blow. He also struck some others, killing two in addition to Leary, while the lives of others are despaired of. After a hard fight he was secured and locked up again.

A case which creates a great deal of interest in Ireland, where hounds and hunting are of such importance, has been going on in the Dublin courts this week, and ended last evening. It was one in which a Miss Mary Corrigan, who is the tenant of a large farm in the County Meath, sought to recover damages to the amount of £283 from Mr. John Watson, master of the Meath Hounds, and a well-known member of the Hunt, Mr. Briscoe, for injuries which she claimed her stock received by being frightened by the hounds crossing her lands in pursuit of a fox. It is a most unusual thing in Ireland for a farmer to take such action, and in such a fine hunting country as Meath, quite unheard of, so the action caused a lot of excitement. The Meath hounds are the finest pack in Ireland, and several thousands of pounds are spent on them each year, and most of it—directly or indirectly—finds its way into the pockets of the farmers, so it is looked upon that to take so very unsportsmanlike course really means killing the goose that lays the golden eggs. Some of the best barristers of the Dublin Bar were engaged on the case, and all that could be said pro and con was said. The case for the plaintiff was that on January 25th the defendants—Mr. John Watson, M.F.H., and Mr. Briscoe, members of the Meath Hunt—entered upon her farm, and that the effect of the presence of the horses and hounds was to cause the cattle to stampede, some into a ditch and some across fences, while a valuable brood mare dashed against an iron gate and seriously injured herself. For the defendants it was pleaded that everything possible was done by the master and by the members of the Hunt to prevent damage or annoyance to the farmers over whose lands they hunt, and that, as a rule, the most friendly feeling and good-will existed between farmers and fox-hunters. The jury found a verdict for the plaintiff, awarding her £110.

Last week, at the fine grounds of the Royal Dublin Society, at Ballsbridge, Dublin, the Countess of Fingall opened the All-Ireland Temperance Bazaar, which promises to be a brilliant and successful affair. This bazaar has been got up on an enormous scale. Ireland has the name of being a very bad country for drinking, but in reality, the Irishman spends nearly £1 less in drink than the Englishman, and some shillings less than the Scotchman, according to population. All the same a great deal of drink is consumed in Ireland and the object of the All-Ireland Temperance Bazaar is to obtain funds to fight the questions affecting the drink traffic on strictly non-sectarian and non-political lines. The main objects of the association are to secure the enforcement and maintenance of the Sunday closing Act, and its extension to the five exempted cities; to promote a Saturday early closing bill; to prevent the granting of additional licenses, and secure a reduction in the number of those already existing; to obtain control for the licensing authorities over all transfers of licenses; to secure some form of local popular veto, and generally to promote the cause of temperance by the dissemination of suitable literature, and the holding of temperance meetings and lectures. Associated with the Dublin body is the Irish Temperance League, which was established in Belfast in 1858, and from these two organizations was formed the Irish National Temperance Executive, whose sphere of operations extends over all Ireland.

The Irish language has so far taken hold that the Post Office authorities have issued instructions on the subject. It is provided that when a letter is found in the post addressed in Irish characters, an English translation is to be added if an officer with the necessary knowledge is available; but should a translator be wanting, the missive is to be sent to Dublin. An English translation will be added in Dublin, and the letter will then be forwarded in its ordinary course. Parcels or registered letters addressed in Irish will be refused unless the address is furnished in English also. Exception, however, is to be made in cases of genuine difficulty. In the case of money orders and postal orders, signatures in Irish may be accepted if the clerk is satisfied that the writing in Irish is the payee's proper signature.

A case was heard in the King's Bench division of the Dublin courts this week seeking to reverse the decision of the Dunfanaghy (Co. Donegal) magistrates, who had held that the Irish letters printed on a cart were not "legible letters" within the meaning of the Act, and had fined the defendant. The defence was that the letters painted on the cart were proper letters in regard to size, and they were adjudged illegible simply because they were not English characters. Three-fourths of the inhabitants of Dunfanaghy speak Irish exclusively and a considerable number both English and Irish. The Lord Chief Justice, who, with Mr. Justice Andrews and Mr. Justice Gibson, tried the case, seemed to be of the opinion that the issue narrowed into whether the name and address, being written in Irish characters, were legibly written. The Court reserved judgment, and it will be interesting to note what will be their decision in the matter.

A return was issued by the Royal Irish Constabulary authorities lately relative to the number of agrarian outrages reported throughout Ireland during 1904. The number was 206, and in 188 cases the alleged offenders were not convicted or made amenable. In four cases they were amenable, but not convicted, and in only 14 cases convictions took place. In 105 cases the crime consisted of threatening letters and notices; in 28 cases of incendiary fires; in 11 of maiming cattle; in 13 of injury to property, and in 12 of firing into dwellings.

If the bank balance is evidence of prosperity, Ireland should be a most prosperous country, as at the close of 1904 the cash balances in the various Irish joint stock banks amounted to £46,116,000, excluding £2,212,000 Government and other public balances in the Bank of Ireland. At the close of the previous year (1903) the amount in the joint stock banks was less by nearly a million. The amount in the Post Office Savings Bank amounted to £9,847,000, an increase of £300,000 as compared with the preceding year. These figures hardly go to show that the people of Ireland are in such a destitute state as is made out.

The Department of Irish Agriculture is about making arrangements to have official representatives attend the various markets in England to see that Irish produce gets fair play. The necessity for such protection is growing keener every day. Irish butter especially has many rivals to contend against. Australian butter, it is said, will now be conveyed here at a freight of one halfpenny per lb., and under the present system of quick refrigerator steamers the butter from the Antipodes is put on the market here in excellent condition. On top of the cheap freights the Australian Governments are preparing to send home representatives to boom Australian products in England, including butter. Canada has her official agents actively at work already, inspecting Canadian products as they arrive at the ports to see that they are in good condition, and are promptly unloaded. These agents report to the Central Canadian Offices, and the Canadian Agricultural Department is quickly made aware of any complaints, to which are added suggestions which keen representatives are ready to pick up. Danish agents are very busy looking after the interests of the butter, bacon, etc., now sent in such quantities from that thrifty country. Ireland, up to this, has had little or nothing done for her interests in respect of protection in the English markets. Irish creamery butter can compete with any butter sent into the English market, in respect to quality, but so far as London is concerned the Irish trade is suffering because of the incessant and ever-growing pushfulness of her competitors. In London trade—especially in provisions, and particularly in the case of butter, 'he country that has the best backing in the matter of official patronage and inspection has the best chance of gaining public favor. It is now very plain that if a proper official inspection is not established in the principal English markets for the protection of Irish butter, etc., it will be too late to try to remedy a mischief already in active operation.

FIRE IN A TOBACCO FACTORY.

Empire Tobacco Company Sustains a Loss of $25,000.

Special to the Montreal Star.

Granby, Que., June 3. — Fire broke out in the Empire Tobacco Company's leaf stemery, yesterday morning, completely destroying the building and machinery. The building is 120 feet by 40 feet and two stories high. About 150 or more hands employed therein will be put at work at one o'clock in one of the other buildings. The curing machine, the only one of the kind in Canada, is a serious loss. A favorable wind saved the other buildings. The loss is estimated at $25,000, and is covered by insurance.

The Empire Tobacco Company informed the Star yesterday that the damage done by fire was considerable, but that the execution of orders would in no way be delayed in consequence. They also stated that the cause of the fire was unknown and that the loss which has not yet been ascertained was fully covered by insurance.

Union Depot for Winnipeg.

Special to The Montreal Star.

Winnipeg, Man., June 3.—Negotiations between the Canadian Northern Railway and the Grand Trunk Pacific for the erection of a union station are still progressing, and a definite announcement is expected within a fortnight.

It is understood that the Northern Pacific also is interested in the project and these recent visits of the officials of that road is said to be directly connected with the scheme. It is expected the officials will return and meet Sir Charles Rivers-Wilson and Mr. Morse here in the near future, when the decision will be reached. The arrangements will include the establishment of local and through freight yards.

Commends the Canadian System.

Canadian Associated Press.

London, June 3.—The Earl of Derby, presiding at the annual meeting of the Agricultural Organization Society, said that in Canada agriculturists were far in advance of English farmers and they enjoyed the results of combination. He commended the system under which milk and other dairy produce was brought from various districts to the common factory, weighed and tested before being sold, the profits being divided among the co-operating farmers.

Man From New York Suicides.

Queenstown, June 3. — The steamship Baltic reports that on Monday a steerage passenger named F. B. Seeston, of Derbyston, jumped overboard on the voyage from New York.

Charles Bartlett, watchman on the steamer W. D. Rees, fell overboard while washing the decks, off Devil's Island, Lake Superior. His home was in Desoronto, Ont.

500,000 Women Will Benefit

Here is good news for five hundred thousand unhappy women! Never in the world was such a generous offer made before! Never was the value of $250,000 given away before in such an open-hearted manner. Think of this enormous amount, no less than a quarter of a million dollars!

We want every sick woman in Canada to know at once that St. James Wafers for pale and weak women can cure her. If we were not positive that our remedy cures women's diseases, we would never dream of giving away such an enormous value. We know what we are doing. We know the curing capacity of St. James Wafers for curing women's diseases.

We have authorized our Canadian agents, Messrs. Lyman Sons & Co., wholesale druggists, to deliver free of all cost, at the home of 500,000 sick women in Canada, one full size 50c box of St. James Wafers for pale and weak women. Remember the word FREE. It will cost you absolutely nothing. All we ask is that all pale, weak, sickly women in Canada take a box of our St. James Wafers at our expense.

One box of St. James Wafers is sufficient to put you in the way of a cure of an ordinary case of female weakness, the curse of women! The sickness that makes women look old before their time, that robs them of their beauty and their face of its charms, for when a weak woman is dragged down by painful irregularities, leucorrhea, prolapsus, nervousness, dyspepsia, headache, backache, sideache or bearing-down pains, her ailments show in her face. Every one can see the paleness of her lips and her ears, the black circles around her eyes, rough skin, pimples, etc., etc.

Don't the outside signs tell of troubles within? Men avoid pale, weak, nervous, sickly looking women. It is the rosy-cheeked, bright eyed, healthy looking girls who have the most admirers. It is the vigorous, healthy wife whose husband is a model man, and who cares well for her and her children.

St. James Wafers give rosy cheeks to pale women. They make weak women strong. They make them vigorous, strong and healthy in their vital organs. That is what they do, and nothing else; but that they do well. They are a specialty for women's troubles. Not a cure all.

There is no alcohol in St. James Wafers for Pale and Weak Women. They are nice little wafers, of a pretty lemon color, easily taken in the secrecy of home, they can be carried in the pocket and taken at work. No one need know that you are under treatment for so terrible a disease. Do not wait till to-morrow; all delays will only make your case more difficult to cure. If you are sick you must take a remedy sometime. Make no mistake, write to-day.

All we ask of every sick woman is to fill out plainly and promptly this coupon before this offer is withdrawn, and mail it to St. James Wafers Company, care of LYMAN SONS & CO., wholesale druggists, 350 St. Paul street, Montreal.

It is better than electricity; because it does not scar or produce a new growth. Better than X-ray, because it does not burn, scar or paralyze the tissues under the skin. THE JAPANESE - RUSSIAN WAR.—The desperate bravery of the Japanese was exemplified when they stormed the redoubts at Port Arthur.

THE JAPANESE - RUSSIAN WAR.—The irresistible advance of the Japanese in Manchuria.

FIGHTING ON LAND AND SEA SINCE WAR WAS DECLARED LAST FEBRUARY

Review of Operations by Which the Russian Navy Was Annihilated and the Army Driven Far Into Manchuria.

It was on February 6 of last year, that Japan broke off diplomatic relations with Russia, and it was on the ninth and tenth days of the same month, a very short period of time later when the first rupture of the war occurred. On those two days the Japs were busy and cables flashed the news throughout the wide world that seven Russian vessels had been sunk or disabled by Japanese torpedo boats off Port Arthur.

This was but the forerunner of what was to come, but few, although sympathy has been largely with the Japanese, had any idea that the Island nation would have such a walk over as has occurred. Russia's army brought to a standstill by a succession of defeats and her navy swept from the seas.

Following the reports of the sinking or disabling of the seven vessels came another, that on the ninth the Russian cruiser Variag and Korietz had been sunk off Chemulpo, Corea, and three days later the Russian torpedo transport Yenisei was blown up at Port Arthur by accidentally striking a mine. Next day came the blowing up at the same place, of the Russian cruiser Boyarin, another result of the submarine mines placed for harbor protection.

This was surely a good beginning for the yellow fellows. It was ten days following this last disaster before another move was heard of and then the news came that the Japs had towed five stone-laden hulks into the harbor of Port Arthur and sunk them in the channel in an effort to bottle up the Russian ships inside. On February 26, the Japs started the attack on Port Arthur and one Russian torpedo boat were blown. Then came a month of very little news outside occasional reports of the movements of fleets and armies until March 22, when the Japanese bombarded Port Arthur and sunk seven merchant steamships for the purpose of blocking the entrance to the harbor.

PETROPAVLOSK BLOWN UP.

On April 13, the Russians suffered again when their battleship Petropaviovsk was blown up in the outer harbor of Port Arthur. Admiral Makaroff along with 674 officers and men going down with her. The next day the Russian torpedo boat destroyer Istrashni was cut off from a fleet of scouts and sunk by the Japanese, only five of her crew escaping, while on the same day the battleship Pobieda struck a mine and was badly damaged.

Next came news of a launch being blown up while laying mines at Port Arthur, twenty-one Russians losing their lives. Three days later, on April 25, the Russian Vladivostok squadron entered the harbor of Wonsan, Corea, and sunk a Japanese merchant steamship. The next day the same squadron had better luck and sent the Japanese transport Kinshin Maru, with 173 men, to the bottom in the Sea of Japan.

At the period the armies had got down to business and on May 1, after six days of fighting along the Yalu River, the Japs attacked and routed 20,000 Russians at Kuliencheng and Hamatan, with a loss on both sides of more than five thousand men. On the 6th of May, in a desperate attack, the Japanese sunk five merchant ships at the entrance to the inner harbor, which was the final stroke in sealing up the port.

The following day the scene was changed back to land, when the Japanese cut the railway and telegraphic communications with Port Arthur at Polandien. On May 8 the Russians dismantled the forts at New Chwang and began to remove the guns and evacuate the place, while on the 12th they destroyed the piers, docks and harbor works at Dalny.

JAPANESE LOSSES.

The Japenese were the next to suffer loss, for while engaged on May 14th in removing Russian mines in Kerr Bay the cruiser Mikayo was blown up and sunk. Next day the Japs got it again, when the battleship Hatsuse struck a submerged mine off Port Arthur and went down with a loss of 480 officers and men. But this was not enough for one day, as the cruiser Yoshino was rammed and sunk by her sister ship the Kasugi, going down with 232 officers and men.

Matters were quiet for a few days at sea, but on May 26th the Japanese gained Kaichau, the Russians being driven from strong position on Nanshan Hill. Then came the occupation of Dalny by the Japs, the Russians however firing the town before evacuating it. A week of quiet followed, and then on June 7th the Russians were driven back from Samaitsa and Siujen, after hotly contested battles. On the 14th, 15th and 16th the battle of Vafangow was fought with decisive results in favor of the Japs.

The Japanese, on June 23, made an attack on the Russian fleet outside Port Arthur and prevented an attempted flight of the Russians from the blockaded harbor.

FIGHTING ON LAND.

June 27 saw the Japanese army really actively emerged. General Kuroki capturing Feushui, and Morrisey passes. The following days the Japs continued their good work and captured three heights within ten miles of Port Arthur. In June 30 the Russian Vladivostok fleet bombarded the harbor of Wosan and sunk a steamship and a schooner.

The Japs up to this period had been having all the best of it, but on July 3 and 4 they suffered a repulse when they attacked the Russian defenses of Port Arthur and some heavy losses were recorded against them. The ninth saw them regaining lost ground, however, and after a desperate battle Gen. Oku was successful in carrying Kaochen on July 17 an attack by 20,000 Russians on the Motien Pass was repulsed with heavy losses and on the following two days, after thirty-seven hours of fighting, General Kuroki's forces captured Khiotung, north-west of Motien Pass, routing the Russians, who lost twelve hundred men.

They at this date once more changed back to the sea when, on July 20, the Vladivostok squadron began a campaign against merchant shipping on the east coast of Japan, the British steamer Knight Commander being sunk and others captured, opening up grave international problems and raising the ire of the people in different countries. As a result of a protest by Great Britain this kind of business was soon stopped and Russia promised full indemnity to the sufferers.

July 31 saw the Russians once more showing their heels to the Japs in a retreat north of Tatcheklao, after a fight which had lasted four days. On July 28 the Japs commenced a general assault on Port Arthur, and on August 10 there was a naval battle off the harbor in another attempt of the Russians to get away, the result being that the Czarewitch was damaged. Four days later, on a Sunday, the Vladivostok fleet was defeated by Admiral Urin, the cruiser Rurik being sunk with a loss of 163 killed and 500 wounded. Then followed the sinking of the gunboat Otavjni by a mine near Port Arthur, on August 18, and of the cruiser Novik, on August 22, by a Japanese cruiser off the island of Sakhalien.

ADVANCE INTO MANCHURIA.

On August 25, the Japs resumed their advance into Manchuria, and on the 26th, had the advantage of heavy fighting near Liao Yang. The fighting continued day by day until September 1, when the Russians retired across the Taetsi River. On the second there was severe fighting with the Russian rear guard south of the Liao Yang, and on the third there was general fighting, the fifth seeing the Russians in full retreat to Mukden.

General Kuropatkin on Monday, October 10, announced that the Russians were ready to assume the offensive and then for several days followed the battle of the Sha-Khe, a river due south of Mukden, and in which the Japanese had great success, and after which operations looking towards Mukden were resumed. There were days in plenty now without news until on Thursday, December 1, the Japs captured 203 Metre Hill after several reverses and then dominated the harbor of Port Arthur. On December 7, the following despatch came from the headquarters of the Third Japanese army, via Fusan:

On the morning of December 2, the Russians granted permission to the Japanese to gather their dead and wounded from the eastern fort ridge fight of November 26. Yesterday the same concession was asked for by the Russians concerning 203 Metre Hill. The request was granted but the privilege was withdrawn to-day.

In the fighting of November 30, the second son of General Nogi was killed on 203 Metre Hill. General Nogi's eldest son was killed in the battle of Nanshan and he is now childless.

On the night of November 26th, the Japanese established military trenches inside the parapets of the two Riblung and North Kekwan forts, but on the following day they were compelled to retire beyond the moats. Since then, there has been practically no fighting done along the incline of the eastern ridge of forts, the main strength of the Japanese troops having been concentrated to effect the capture of 203 Metre Hill.

The close of the year saw nothing more of importance, but January 1 witnessed the capitulation after the long siege. The fall of Port Arthur was at last at hand; what the world had been waiting for and talking about for months.

The following vessels of the Russian navy operating in and around Port Arthur, were either destroyed or sunk by the Japanese, by Russian mines, or blown up by the Russians to prevent capture:

AROUND MUKDEN.

Matters settled at Port Arthur, all attention was now centred in Manchuria and the defence of Mukden by the Russians.

On March 7 both sides began most vigorous offensive operations, the Japanese attacking with especial energy the forces of General Tserpitsky, which were holding the position from Madyapu as far as the heights east of Mukden station, while the Russians, under General Gerngross, asumed an attack in the direction of Tatcheklao, and on the northern front General Launitz's command beat back all the attacks. On the whole the outcome of the fighting on March 7 was favorable to the Russians, who repulsed several attacks on their southern front, and assumed the offensive on the left, where General Linevitch's army, occupying eastern hill positions, repulsed numerous attacks and took several hundred prisoners and several machine guns.

The continued extension, however, of the Japanese lines northward and the concentration which their superiority in numbers enabled them to effect against the northern and northwestern fronts, rendered advisable a contraction of the Russian lines, and withdrawal from the Shakhe River to positions to the Hun River was determined upon. This was in no sense the beginning of the general retreat, and Kuropatkin and the generals commanding the armies were far from regarding the battle as lost. The first army to retire from the fortified positions east and southeast of Mukden, was the third army, which fell back to positions similarly fortified in advance on the north bank of the Hun River. The burning of abandoned stores, provisions and forage disclosed the Russian retirement, and the Japanese followed closely. A confusion in orders and retirement in impenetrable darkness across the country were responsible for the failure of some organizations to occupy the positions to which they had been assigned, and a remarkable dust storm the following day made it impossible to verify the alignment and fill the breaches, which the Japanese, however, were lucky enough to find and skilful enough to turn to their advantage. The Russian positions now formed a boot, the toe at Madyapu and the heel on the Hun River, at Fusan, about five miles wide, and to meet the apparent danger that the Japanese might plug the top of the boot, Kuropatkin sent thither forty battalions from the command of Gen. Miloff. The Russians slowly forced the Japanese back at this point, but the Japanese were reinforced, and Gen. Kuropatkin, determining to stake all on a decisive blow, collected the remainder of the strategic reserves, sending several other units and led them personally on March 9, to the north front and threw them on the flank of the Japanese, who were attacking Saintaintze, and endeavoring to cut the railway. The Japanese retired, abandoning a battery of eight guns.

At this moment it was reported that a column of Japanese was moving further north around the right flank and that the Japanese on the Hun River had thrust a column through at Fu Pass and Kvouzan, on the instep of the boot. Here the fords were defended by only four companies, which retired before Japanese cavalry and four mountain guns. With the entire Russian strategic reserves already engaged, it became impossible to meet the danger in these two sources, which was immediate and critical, and at 8 p.m. the order to retire to Tie Pass was given. Through the narrow bootleg passage, scarcely five miles wide, a densely packed mass of transports pressed northward, coming under the fire of the Japanese infantry and four mountain guns, which earlier had darted across the Russian line of communication and concealed themselves in the mountains. Gen. Tserpitsky began an orderly retirement from the boot toe and during March 10, Kuropatkin successfully held at bay the Japanese, who were trying to reach the railway.

The night of March 9 came the order to evacuate Mukden station and city, with directions that the movement of trains northward must be completed by 5 a.m. The enormous task was completed in nine hours, including the hasty embarkation of the wounded, who crowded the station platform and occupied the hospitals. Many had already left in the morning, when the private trains of Kuropatkin, Kaulbars, Sakharoff, Bilderling, and Zabelin departed, but thousands remained. At 9.40 p.m. eight trains were despatched, and a call sent trains were despatched, and a call was sent to Tie Pass for thirteen locomotives. At 3 a.m., the second string was started northward, and at 9.45 a.m. the last train of the third string of 16 departed.

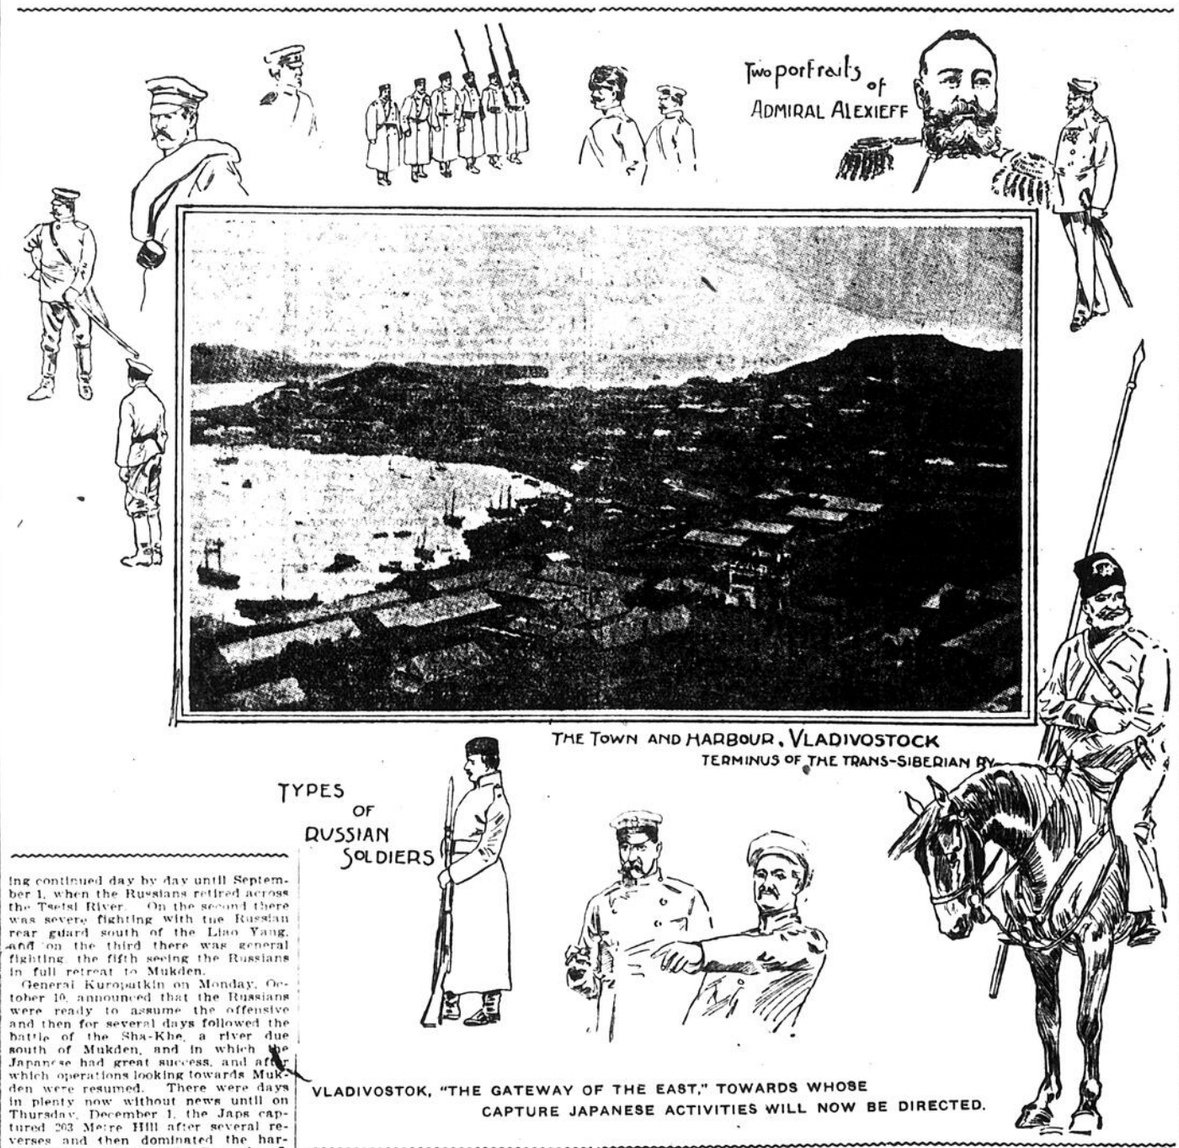
All the trains had from 52 to 54 cars. Three trains contained the ammunition of the park of artillery, which had been despatched the evening before in 540 cars; another train carried warm clothing, one was coal-laden, and one was loaded with red cross supplies; one with engineers depot supplies; three with commissariat freights and the remainder with wounded. The last train out was the service train, with all the employes of the railway, property and station papers. This party saved thousands of wounded soldiers, and an immense amount of ammunition and millions of dollars' worth of property and cash. It must be remembered that five miles north of Mukden an unceasing fight was in progress. Trains earlier had been bombarded with shimose shells, and the railway was twice damaged. The trains travelled unlighted, and without whistling, under eight minute headway.

All about fires blazed in a gigantic ring, burning straw, coal, wood, corn and biscuit. Occasionally boxes of cartridges exploded, or rockets burst. Over 3,600 carloads of corn and biscuit, and over 323,000 cubic feet of coal, straw and millet were destroyed. The wounded crowded the station, filled every vacant place in the cars, and the brake beams, buffers and roofs were occupied, while others were hanging on the steps.

The last train pulled out as General Tserpitsky's troops began to pass, before the explosion, which wrecked the Hun river.

Since Mukden most interest has centred in the movements of the Russian Baltic fleet, commanded by Admiral Rojestvensky, and those of the Japanese fleet under Admiral Togo. All sympathy for Rojestvensky died when, on his way through the North Sea he attacked the Hull trawlers thinking them to be Japanese torpedo boats. The result of the meeting of these two fleets is of too recent a date to dwell upon. Let it be said that the Japs continued their success of the past.

What is being looked for now is the next land battle.



VLADIVOSTOK, "THE GATEWAY OF THE EAST," TOWARDS WHOSE CAPTURE JAPANESE ACTIVITIES WILL NOW BE DIRECTED.

TOGO, THE VICTOR, AND HIS FOE, ROJESTVENSKY, THE VANQUISHED

Rojestvensky has furnished us with no facts upon which to found an intelligent opinion of his prowess as a warrior. He has fought one fight, and his defeat has been final. We can only repeat incidents known of him before the beginning of hostilities, and let them speak for themselves to any one curious to know what manner of man he is. That he has been a stern disciplinarian is well understood. He is also a taciturn man, and was called in the fleet "the silent admiral." We should judge that he would be most punctilious about such things as dress and deportment, as his personal tastes are dainty, and even sybaritic. His office in the Admiralty is described as a boudoir, filled with pretty trifles. His admirers have insisted that a love of luxury has never weakened the tough fibre of the man, and they point to the solitary cruises and long swims which have been his delight.

HIS PERSONAL BRAVERY.

Rojestvensky's personal bravery seems vouched for by the St. George's Cross which he wars. This was won by two signal feats of bravery in the war with Turkey. Of his seagoing career these incidents alone have been remembered. Until 1903 he served in the Black and Baltic fleets, slowly but surely winning his way to the top, but after the exploits of 1877-8 no unusual deed stands to his credit. His promotion seems to have been largely a matter of form. For twenty-five years he never saw a sea fight, nor a shot fired in anger. In 1903 he was made chief of staff, and undoubtedly as an administrator he ranks high. Rojestvensky made his department as efficient as he could. It distinguished him in Russia, and pointed to his selection as the commander of the second Pacific squadron.

TOGO, THE VICTOR.

In Togo we find a short, homely man, in an ill-fitting uniform. A grizzled beard, and eyes only slightly slanted, are not characteristic of the Japanese, and Togo is not a typical son of Nippon externally. With all his English speech, his English training, and his English naval ideas, he remains at heart a Jap. His victories are invariably ascribed to the virtues of the Mikado, and at the services in honor of those of his countrymen who had fallen at Port Arthur he made a speech, which no one but a Jap. could have made. He said:

"As I stand before your spirits I can hardly express my feelings. Your personality is fresh in my memory. Your corporeal existence has ceased, but your passing from the world has been in the gallant discharge of your duty, by virtue of which the enemy's fleet on this side of the world has been completely disabled. Our combined fleet retains the undisputed command of the seas. I trust that this will bring peace and rest to your spirits. It is my agreeable duty to avail myself of the occasion of my presence in this city, whither I have been called by the Emperor, to report our successes to the spirits of those who sacrificed their earthly existence for the attainment of so great a result. The report is rendered most humbly by me in person, Heihachiro Togo, admiral of the combined fleets."

AN ENGLISH-TRAINED SEAMAN.

The Nelson of the East was educated at Woolwich, and, returning home, was employed in various sailorly capacities until the beginning of the war with China. In this war Togo fired the first shot. It was excellently directed, and shattered the engine-room of the Kowshing, a Chinese ship filled with troops. In the Chinese war he saw much fighting, and took part in it. At the conclusion of hostilities he was made a rear-admiral, and promoted to the third in command of the navy. When the Mikado's advisers were considering what officer should be despatched to reduce Port Arthur, Marquis Ito said, "Send Togo. He struck first at the Yalu; he will strike first and hard at Port Arthur."

A most charming feature of this wonderful man is his modesty. One scans in vain his official reports for any sign of elation or pride. He refused to accept a welcome in Tokio after Port Arthur, on the ground that it would be premature. His home life is equally simple. One servant is kept. Togo has neither a horse nor an automobile. Not even a bicycle or a rickshaw belongs to him. When not on a great battleship, he walks quietly to and fro, insists upon a precedence, and cares little or nothing for applause. A wife, son and two daughters he has, and they it is said, are as unmoved by Togo's fame as he is himself. They can afford not to show their pride. The millions in Japan will make the contrast.

HAD PLENTY OF AMMUNITION.

Second Division of Baltic Fleet Could Have Fought on.

London, June 3.—The accounts received here of the surrender of Vice-Admiral Nebogatoff differ. The correspondent of the Telegraph at Sasebo, describes it as a disgraceful episode. He says that an examination of his captured squadron shows that while the guns were rusty and painted red, and the ships below the water line were covered with moss, there was no lack of actual fighting resources. There were heaps of ammunition. No trace of damage done by Japanese shells was found. The surrender of the ships cannot be accounted for. The firing of Nebogatoff's squadron was wild. None of the shells from his ships hit the hulls of the Japanese vessels. They only skimmed the masts and funnels. Thousands missed altogether. Many of the Russian shells fell on deck like bricks and failed to explode. Of the three lost Japanese torpedo boats one had her hull twisted out of shape at the bottom in consequence of a gallant but vain attempt to ram a Russian cruiser. The captain of the Dimitri Donskoi, in an interview said:

BEST NAVY ON EARTH.

"I am sure there is no navy in the world like the Japanese. The non-commissioned officers and the men are so cool and brave as to be almost demons not human. Their officers are equally calm and are great startegists. Their whole combination on the sea is as immovable and as passive as a rock. We made a foolish mistake in trying to force the Tsushima Straits. Now I weep tears of regret."

THEIR GUNNERY WON BATTLE.

Not Torpedoes Nor Submarines, But Superior Markmanship.

London, June 3.—The correspondent at Tokio of the Daily Mail, cabling to his paper concerning the naval battle between the Japanese and Russian fleets, says:

"Owing to the heavy sea in the earlier part of the engagement the Russian hulls were disclosed below the water line, presenting a good target and enabling the Japanese guns to usurp the functions of torpedoes.

"The commander of the torpedo destroyer Murazame, describing his attack on the battleship Kniaz Souvaroff, says he discharged two torpedoes against her from a distance of a hundred yards. All the Russian survivors confess that the Japanese formation was never broken, and say that their shooting was magnificent."

From the years 1894 to 1901 inclusive, Mr. Sherlock Holmes was a very busy man. It is safe to say that there was no public case of any difficulty in which he was not consulted during those eight years, and there were hundreds of private cases, some of them of the most intricate and extraordinary character, in which he played a prominent part. Many startling successes and a few unavoidable failures were the outcome of this long period of continuous work. As I have preserved very full notes of all these cases, and was myself personally engaged in many of them, it may be imagined that it is no easy task to know which I should select to lay before the public. I shall, however, preserve my former rule, and give the preference to those cases which derive their interest not so much from the brutality of the crime as from the ingenuity and dramatic quality of the solution. For this reason I will now lay before the reader the facts connected with Miss Violet Smith, the solitary cyclist of Charlington, and the curious sequel of our investigation, which culminated in unexpected tragedy. It is true that the circumstance did not admit of any striking illustration of those powers for which my friend was famous, but there were some points about the case which made it stand out in those long records of crime from which I gather the material for these little narratives.

On referring to my note-book for the year 1895, I find that it was upon Saturday, the 23rd of April, that we first heard of Miss Violet Smith. Her visit was, I remember, extremely unwelcome to Holmes, for he was immersed at the moment in a very abstruse and complicated problem concerning the peculiar persecution to which John Vincent Harden, the well known tobacco millionaire had been subjected. My friend, who loved above all things precision and concentration of thought, resented anything which distracted his attention from the matter in hand. And yet, without a harshness which was foreign to his nature, it was impossible to refuse to listen to the story of the young and beautiful woman, tall, graceful, and queenly, who presented herself at Baker Street late in the evening, and implored his assistance and advice. It was vain to urge that his time was already fully occupied, for the young lady had come with the determination to tell her story, and it was evident that nothing short of force could get her out of the room until she had done so. With a resigned air and a somewhat weary smile, Holmes begged the beautiful intruder to take a seat, and to inform us what it was that was troubling her.

"At least it cannot be your health," said he, as his keen eyes darted over her; "so ardent a bicyclist must be full of energy."

She glanced down in surprise at her own feet, and I observed the slight roughening of the side of the sole caused by the friction of the edge of the pedal.

"Yes, I bicycle a good deal, Mr. Holmes, and that has something to do with my visit to you to-day."

My friend took the lady's ungloved hand, and examined it with as close an attention and as little sentiment as a scientist would show to a specimen.

"You will excuse me, I am sure. It is my business," said he, as he dropped it. "I nearly fell into the error of supposing that you were typewriting. Of course, it is obvious that it is music. You observe the spatulate fingerends, Watson, which is common to both professions? There is a spirituality about the face, however"—he gently turned it towards the light—"which the typewriter does not generate. This lady is a musician."

"Yes, Mr. Holmes, I teach music."

"In the country, I presume, from your complexion."

"Yes, sir, near Farnham, on the borders of Surrey."

"A beautiful neighborhood, and full of the most interesting associations. You remember, Watson, that it was near there that we took Archie Stamford, the forger. Now, Miss Violet, what has happened to you, near Farnham, on the borders of Surrey?"

The young lady, with great clearness and composure, made the following curious statement:

"My father is dead, Mr. Holmes. He was James Smith, who conducted the orchestra at the old Imperial Theatre. My mother and I were left without a relation in the world except one uncle, Ralph Smith, who went to Africa twenty-five years ago, and we have never had a word from him since. When father died, we were left very poor, but one day we were told that there was an advertisement in the Times, inquiring for our whereabouts. You can imagine how excited we were, for we thought that some one had left us a fortune. We went at once to the lawyer whose name was given in the paper. There we met two gentlemen, Mr. Carruthers and Mr. Woodley, who were home on a visit from South Africa. They said that my uncle was a friend of theirs, that he had died some months before in great poverty in Johannesburg, and that he had asked them with his last breath to hunt up his relations, and see that they were in no want. It seemed strange to us that Uncle Ralph, who took no notice of us when he was alive, should be so careful to look after us when he was dead, but Mr. Carruthers explained that the reason was that my uncle had just heard of the death of his brother, and so felt responsible for our fate."

"Excuse me," said Holmes. "When was this interview?"

"Last December—four months ago."

"Pray proceed."

"Mr. Woodley seemed to me to be a most odious person. He was for ever making eyes at me—a coarse, puffy-faced, red-moustached young man, with his hair plastered down on each side of his forehead. I thought that he was perfectly hateful—and I was sure that Cyril would not wish me to know such a person."

"Oh, Cyril is his name!" said Holmes, smiling.

The young lady blushed and laughed.

"Yes, Mr. Holmes, Cyril Morton, an electrical engineer, and we hope to be married at the end of the summer. Dear me, how did I get talking about him? What I wished to say was that Mr. Woodley was perfectly odious, but that Mr. Carruthers, who was a much older man, was more agreeable. He was a dark, sallow, clean-shaven, silent person, but he had polite manners and a pleasant smile. He inquired how we were left, and on finding that we were very poor, he suggested that I should come and teach music to his only daughter, aged ten. I said that I did not like to leave my mother, on which he suggested that I should go home to her every week-end, and he offered me a hundred a year, which was certainly splendid pay. So it ended by my accepting, and I went down to Chiltern Grange, about six miles from Farnham. Mr. Carruthers was a widower, but he had engaged a lady housekeeper, a very respectable, elderly person, called Mrs. Dixon, to look after his establishment. The child was a dear, and everything promised well. Mr. Carruthers was very kind and very musical, and we had most pleasant evenings together. Every week-end I went home to my mother in town.

"The first flaw in my happiness was the arrival of the red-moustached Mr. Woodley. He came for a visit of a week, and oh! it seemed three months to me. He was a dreadful person—a bully to everyone else, but to me something infinitely worse. He made odious love to me, boasted of his wealth, said that if I married him I could have the finest diamonds in London, and finally when I would have nothing to do with him, he seized me in his arms one day after dinner—he was hideously strong—and swore that he would not let me go until I had kissed him. Mr. Carruthers came in and tore him from me, on which he turned upon his own host, knocking him down and cutting his face open. That was the end of his visit, as you can imagine. Mr. Carruthers apologized to me next day, and assured me that I should never be exposed to such an insult again. I have not seen Mr. Woodley since.

"And now, Mr. Holmes, I come at last to the special thing which has caused me to ask your advice to-day. You must know that every Saturday forenoon I ride on my bicycle to Farnham Station, in order to get the 12.22 to town. The road from Chiltern Grange is a lonely one, and at one spot it is particularly so, for it lies for over a mile between Charlington Heath upon one side and the woods which lie round Charlington Hall upon the other. You could not find a more lonely tract of road anywhere, and it is quite rare to meet so much as a cart, or a peasant, until you reach the high road near Crooksbury Hill. Two weeks ago I was passing this place, when I chanced to look back over my shoulder, and about two hundred yards behind me I saw a man, also on a bicycle. He seemed to be a middle-aged man, with a short, dark beard. I looked back before I reached Farnham, but the man was gone, so I thought no more about it. But you can imagine how surprised I was, Mr. Holmes, when, on my return on the Monday, I saw the same man on the same stretch of road. My astonishment was increased when the incident occurred again, exactly as before, on the following Saturday and Monday. He always kept his distance and did not molest me in any way, but still it certainly was very odd. I mentioned it to Mr. Carruthers, who seemed interested in what I said, and told me that he had ordered a horse and trap, so that in future I should not pass over these lonely roads without some companion.

"The horse and trap were to have come this week, but for some reason they were not delivered, and again I had to cycle to the station. That was this morning. You can think that I looked out when I came to Charlington Heath, and there, sure enough, was the man, exactly as he had been the two weeks before. He always kept so far from me that I could not clearly see his face, but it was certainly someone whom I did not know. He was dressed in a dark suit with a cloth cap. The only thing about his face that I could clearly see was his dark beard. To-day I was not alarmed, but I was filled with curiosity, and I determined to find out who he was and what he wanted. I slowed down my machine, but he slowed down his. Then I stopped altogether, but he stopped also. Then I laid a trap for him. There is a sharp turning of the road, and I pedalled very quickly round this, and then I stopped and waited. I expected him to shoot round and pass me before he could stop. But he never appeared. Then I went back and looked round the corner. I could see a mile of road, but he was not on it. To make it the more extraordinary, there was no side road at this point down which he could have gone."

Holmes chuckled and rubbed his hands. "This case certainly presents some features of its own," said he. "How much time elapsed between your turning the corner and your discovery that the road was clear?"

"Two or three minutes."

"Then he could not have retreated down the road, and you say that there are no side roads?"

"None"

"Then he certainly took a footpath on one side or the other."

"It could not have been on the side of the heath, or I should have seen him."

"So, by the process of exclusion, we arrive at the fact that he made his way toward Charlington Hall, which, as I understand, is situated in its own grounds on one side of the road. Anything else?"

"Nothing, Mr. Holmes, save that I was so perplexed that I felt I should not be happy until I had seen you and had your advice."

Holmes sat in silence for some little time.

"Where is the gentleman to whom you are engaged?" he asked at last.

"He is in the Midland Electrical Company, at Coventry."

"He would not pay you a surprise visit?"

"Oh, Mr. Holmes! As if I should not know him!"

"Have you had any other admirers?"

"Several before I knew Cyril."

"And since?"

"There was this dreadful man, Woodley, if you can call him an admirer."

"No one else?"

Our fair client seemed a little confused.

"Who was he?" asked Holmes.

"Oh, it may be a mere fancy of mine; but it had seemed to me sometimes that my employer, Mr. Carruthers, takes a great deal of interest in me. We are thrown rather together. I play his accompaniments in the evening. He has never said anything. He is a perfect gentleman. But a girl always knows."

"Ha!" Holmes looked grave. "What does he do for a living?"

"He is a rich man."

"No carriages or horses?"

"Well, at least he is fairly well-to-do. But he goes into the city two or three times a week. He is deeply interested in South African gold shares."

"You will let me know any fresh development, Miss Smith. I am very busy just now, but I will find time to make some inquiries into your case. In the meantime, take no step without letting me know. Good-bye, and I trust that we shall have nothing but good news from you."

"It is part of the settled order of Nature that such a girl should have followers," said Holmes, as he pulled at his meditative pipe, "but for choice not on bicycles in lonely country roads. Some secretive lover, beyond all doubt. But there are curious and suggestive details about the case, Watson."

"That he should appear only at that point?"

"Exactly. Our first effort must be to find who are the tenants of Charlington Hall. Then, again, how about the connection between Carruthers and Woodley, since they appear to be men of such a different type? How came they both to be so keen upon looking up Ralph Smith's relations? One more point. What sort of a menage is it which pays double the market price for a governess, but does not keep a horse, although six miles from the station? Odd, Watson—very odd!"

"You will go down?"

"No, my dear fellow, you will go down. This may be some trifling intrigue, and I cannot break my other important research for the sake of it. On Monday you will arrive early at Farnham; you will conceal yourself near Charlington Heath; you will observe these facts for yourself, and act as your own judgment advises. Then, having inquired as to the occupants of the Hall, you will come back to me and report. And now, Watson, not another word of the matter until we have a few solid stepping-stones on which we may hope to get across to our solution."

We had ascertained from the lady that she went down upon the Monday by the train which leaves Waterloo at 9.50, so I started early and caught the 9.13. At Farnham Station I had no difficulty in being directed to Charlington Heath. It was impossible to mistake the scene of the young lady's adventure, for the road runs between the open heath on one side and an old yew hedge upon the other, surrounding a park which is studded with magnificent trees. There was a main gateway of lichen-studded stone, each side pillar surmounted by mouldering heraldic emblems, but besides this central carriage drive I observed several points where there were gaps in the hedge, and paths leading through them. The house was invisible from the road, but the surroundings all spoke of gloom and decay.

The heath was covered with golden patches of flowering gorse, gleaming magnificently in the light of the bright spring sunshine. Behind one of these clumps I took up my position, so as to command both the gateway of the Hall and a long stretch of the road upon either side. It had been deserted when I left it, but now I saw a cyclist riding down it from the opposite direction to that in which I had come. He was clad in a dark suit, and I saw that he had a black beard. On reaching the end of the Charlington grounds, he sprang from his machine and led it through a gap in the hedge, disappearing from my view.

A quarter of an hour passed, and then a second cyclist appeared. This time it was the young lady coming from the station. I saw her look about her as she came to the Charlington hedge. An instant later the man emerged from his hiding-place, sprang upon his cycle, and followed her. In all the broad landscape those were the only moving figures, the graceful girl sitting very straight upon her machine, and the man behind her bending low over his handle-bar with a curiously furtive suggestion in every movement. She looked back at him and slowed her pace. He slowed also. She stopped. He at once stopped, too, keeping two hundred yards behind her. Her next movement was as unexpected as it was spirited. She suddenly whisked her wheels round and dashed straight at him. He was as quick as she, however, and darted off in desperate flight. Presently she came back up the road again, her head haughtily in the air, not deigning to take any further notice of her silent attendant. He had turned also, and still kept his distance until the curve of the road hid them from my sight.

I remained in my hiding-place, and it was well that I did so, for presently the man reappeared, cycling slowly back. He turned in at the Hall gates, and dismounted from his machine. For some minutes I could see him standing among the trees. His hands were raised, and he seemed to be settling his necktie. Then he mounted his cycle, and rode away from me down the drive towards the hall. I ran across the heath and peered through the trees. Far away I could catch glimpses of the old grey building with its bristling Tudor chimneys, but the drive ran through a dense shrubbery, and I saw no more of my man.

However, it seemed to me that I had done a fairly good morning's work, and I walked back in high spirits to Farnham. The local house agent could tell me nothing about Charlington Hall, and referred me to a well known firm in Pall Mall. There I halted on my way home, and met with courtesy from the representative. No, I could not have Charlington Hall for the summer. I was just too late. It had been let about a month ago. Mr. Williamson was the name of the tenant. He was a respectable, elderly gentleman. The polite agent was afraid he could say no more, as the affairs of his clients were not matters which he could discuss.

Mr. Sherlock Holmes listened with attention to the long report which I was able to present to him that evening, but it did not elicit that word of curt praise which I had hoped for, and should have valued. On the contrary his austere face was even more severe than usual as he commented upon the things that I had done and the things that I had not.

"Your hiding-place, my dear Watson was very faulty. You should have been behind the hedge then you would have had a close view of this interesting person. As it is you were some hundreds of yards away and can tell me even less than Miss Smith. She thinks she does not know the man; I am convinced she does. Why, otherwise, should he be so desperately anxious that she should not get so near him as to see his features? You describe him as bending over the handle-bar. Concealment again, you see. You really have done remarkably badly. He returns to the house, and you want to find out who he is. You come to a London house-agent!"

"What should I have done?" I cried, with some heat.

"Gone to the nearest public-house. That is the centre of country gossip. They would have told you every name, from the master to the scullery-maid. Williamson? It conveys nothing to my mind. If he is an elderly man he is not this active cyclist, who sprints away from that young lady's athletic pursuit. What have we gained by your expedition? The knowledge that the girl's story is true. I never doubted it. That there is a connection between the cyclist and the Hall. I never doubted that either. That the Hall is tenanted by Williamson. Who's the better for that? Well, well, my dear sir, don't look so depressed. We can do little more until next Saturday, and in the meantime I may make one or two inquiries myself."

Next morning, we had a note from Miss Smith, recounting shortly and accurately the very incidents which I had seen, but the pith of the letter lay in the postscript:

"I am sure that you will respect my confidence, Mr. Holmes, when I tell you that my place here will become difficult, owing to the fact that my employer has proposed marriage to me. I am convinced that his feelings are most deep and most honourable. At the same time, my promise is of course given. He took my refusal very seriously, but also very gently. You can understand, however, that the situation is a little strained."

"Our young friend seems to be getting into deep waters," said Holmes, thoughtfully, as he finished the letter. "The case certainly presents more features of interest and more possibility of development than I had originally thought. I should be none the worse for a quiet, peaceful day in the country, and I am inclined to run down this afternoon and test one or two theories which I have formed."

Holmes' quiet day in the country had a singular termination, for he arrived at Baker Street late in the evening, with a cut lip and a discolored lump upon his forehead, besides a general air of dissipation which would have made his own person the fitting object of a Scotland Yard investigation. He was immensely tickled by his own adventures, and laughed heartily as he recounted them.

"I get so little active exercise that it is always a treat," said he. "You are aware that I have some proficiency in the good old British sport of boxing. Occasionally, it is of service; to-day, for example, I should have come to very ignominious grief without it."

I begged him to tell me what had occurred.

"I found that country pub which I had already recommended to your notice, and there I made my discreet inquiries. I was in the bar, and a garrulous landlord was giving me all that I wanted. Williamson is a white-bearded man, and he lives alone with a small staff of servants at the Hall. There is some rumor that he is or has been a clergyman, but one or two incidents of his short residence at the Hall struck me as peculiarly unecclesiastical. I have already made some inquiries at a clerical agency, and they tell me that there was a man of that name in orders, whose career has been a singularly dark one. The landlord further informed me that there are usually week-end visitors—'a warm lot, sir'—at the Hall, and especially one gentleman with a red moustache, Mr. Woodley by name, who was always there. We had got as far as this, when who should walk in but the gentleman himself, who had been drinking his beer in the tap-room and had heard the whole conversation. Who was I? What did I want? What did I mean by asking questions? He had a fine flow of language, and his adjectives were very vigorous. He ended a string of abuse by a vicious back-hander, which I failed to entirely avoid. The next few minutes were delicious. It was a straight left against a slogging ruffian. I emerged as you see me. Mr. Woodley went home in a cart. So ended my country trip, and it must be confessed that, however enjoyable, my day on the Surrey border has not been much more profitable than your own."

The Thursday brought us another letter from our client.

"You will not be surprised, Mr. Holmes," said she, "to hear that I am leaving Mr. Carruthers' employment. Even the high pay cannot reconcile me to the discomforts of my situation. On Saturday I come up to town, and I do not intend to return. Mr. Carruthers has got a trap, and so the dangers of the lonely road, if there ever were any [illegible]

"As to the special cause of my leaving, it is not merely the strained situation with Mr. Carruthers, but it is the reappearance of that odious man, Mr. Woodley. He was always hideous, but he looks more awful than ever now, for he appears to have had an accident, and he is much disfigured. I saw him out of the window, but I am glad to say I did not meet him. He had a long talk with Mr. Carruthers, who seemed much excited afterwards. Woodley must be staying in the neighborhood, for he did not sleep here, and yet I caught a glimpse of him again this morning, slinking about in the shrubbery. I would sooner have a savage wild animal loose about the place. I loathe and fear him more than I can say. How can Mr. Carruthers endure such a creature for a moment? However, all my troubles will be over on Saturday."

"So I trust, Watson, so I trust," said Holmes, gravely. "There is some deep intrigue going on round that little woman, and it is our duty to see that no one molests her upon that last journey. I think Watson, that we must spare time to run down together on Saturday morning, and make sure that this curious and inclusive investigation has no untoward ending."

I confess that I had not up to now taken a very serious view of the case, which had seemed to me rather grotesque and bizarre than dangerous. That a man should lie in wait for and follow a very handsome woman is an unheard-of thing, and if he has so little audacity that he not only dared not address her, but even fled from her approach, he was not a very formidable assailant. The ruffian Woodley was a very different person, but, except on one occasion, he had not molested our client, and now he visited the house of Carruthers without intruding upon her presence. The man on the bicycle was doubtless a member of those week-end parties at the Hall of which the publican had spoken, but who he was, or what he wanted, was as obscure as ever. It was the severity of Holmes' manner, and the fact that he slipped a revolver into his pocket, before leaving our rooms which impressed me with the feeling that tragedy might prove to lurk behind this curious train of events.

A rainy night had been followed by a glorious morning, and the heath-covered country-side, with the glowing clumps of flowering gorse, seemed all the more beautiful to eyes which were weary of the duns and drabs and slate-greys of London. Holmes and I walked along the broad, sandy road inhaling the fresh morning air, and rejoicing in the music of the birds and the fresh breath of the spring. From a rise of the road on the shoulder of Crooksbury Hill, we could see the grim Hall bristling out from amidst the ancient oaks, which, old as they were, were still younger than the building which they surrounded. Holmes pointed down the long tract of road which wound, a red-dish yellow band, between the brown of the heath and the budding green of the woods. Far away, a black dot, we could see a vehicle moving in our direction. Holmes gave an exclamation of impatience.

"I have given a margin of half an hour," said he. "If that is her trap, she must be making for the earlier train. I fear, Watson, that she will be past Charlington before we can possibly meet her."

From the instant that we passed the rise, we could no longer see the vehicle, but we hastened onwards at such a pace that my sedentary life began to tell upon me, and I was compelled to fall behind. Holmes, however, was always in training, for he had inexhaustible stores of nervous energy upon which to draw. His springy step never slowed until suddenly, when he was a hundred yards in front of me, he halted, and I saw him throw up his hand with a gesture of grief and despair. At the same instant an empty dog-cart, the horse cantering, the reins trailing, appeared round the curve of the road and rattled swiftly towards us.

"To late, Watson, too late!" cried Holmes, as I ran panting to his side. "Fool that I was, not to allow for that earlier train! It's abduction, Watson—abduction! Murder! Heaven knows what! Block the road! Stop the horse! That's right. Now, jump in, and let us see if I can repair the consequences of my own blunder."

We had sprung into the dog-cart, and Holmes, after turning the horse, gave it a sharp cut with the whip, and we flew back along the road. As we turned the curve, the whole stretch of road between the Hall and the heath was opened up. I grasped Holmes' arm.

"That's the man!" I gasped.

A solitary cyclist was coming towards us. His head was down and his shoulders rounded, as he put every ounce of energy that he possessed on to the pedals. He was flying like a racer. Suddenly he raised his bearded face, saw us close to him, and pulled up, springing from his machine. That coal-black beard was in singular contrast to the pallor of his face, and his eyes were as bright as if he had a fever. He stared at us and at the dog-cart. Then a look of amazement came over his face.

"Halloa! Stop there!" he shouted, holding his bicycle to block our road. "Where did you get that dog-cart? Pull up, man! he yelled, drawing a pistol from his side pocket. "Pull up, I say, or, by George, I'll put a bullet into your horse."

Holmes threw the reins into my lap and sprang down from the cart.

"You're the man we want to see. Where is Miss Violet Smith?" he said, in his quick, clear way.

"That's what I'm asking you. You're in her dog-cart. You ought to know where she is."

"We met the dog-cart on the road. There was no one in it. We drove back to help the young lady."

"Good Lord! Good Lord! what shall I do?" cried the stranger, in an ecstasy of despair. "They've got her, that hell-hound Woodley and the blackguard parson. Come, man, come, if you really are her friend. Stand by me and we'll save her, if I have to leave my carcase in Charlington Wood."

He ran distractedly, his pistol in his hand, towards a gap in the hedge. Holmes followed him, and I, leaving the horse grazing beside the road, followed Holmes.

"This is where they came through," said he, pointing to the marks of several feet upon the muddy path. "Halloa! Stop a minute! Who's this in the bush?"

It was a young fellow about seventeen, dressed like an ostler, with leather cords and gaiters. He lay upon his back, his knees drawn up, a terrible cut upon his head. He was insensible, but alive. A glance at his wound told me that it had not penetrated the bone.

"That's Peter, the groom," cried the stranger. "He drove her. The beasts have pulled him off and clubbed him. Let him lie; we can't do him any good, but we may save her from the worst fate that can befall a woman."

We ran frantically down the path, which wound among the trees. We had reached the shrubbery which surrounded the house when Holmes pulled up.

"They didn't go to the house. Here are their marks on the left—here, beside the laurel bushes. Ah! I said so."

As he spoke, a woman's shrill scream—a scream which vibrated with a frenzy of horror—burst from the thick, green clump of bushes in front of us. It ended suddenly on its highest note with a choke and a gurgle.

"This way! This way! They are in the bowling-alley," cried the stranger, darting through the bushes. "Ah, the cowardly dogs! Follow me, gentlemen! Too late! too late! by the living Jingo!"

We had broken suddenly into a lovely glade of greensward surrounded by ancient trees. On the farther side of it, under the shadow of a mighty oak, there stood a singular group of three people. One was a woman, our client, drooping and faint, a handkerchief round her mouth. Opposite her stood a brutal, heavy-faced, red-moustached young man, his gaitered legs parted wide, one arm akimbo, the other waving a riding crop, his whole attitude suggestive of triumphant bravado. Between them an elderly, grey-bearded man, wearing a short surplice over a light tweed suit, had evidently just completed the wedding service, for he pocketed his prayer-book as we appeared, and slapped the sinister bridegroom upon the back in jovial congratulation.

"They're married!" I gasped.

"Come on!" cried our guide; "come on!" He rushed across the glade, Holmes and I at his heels. As we approached, the lady staggered against the trunk of the tree for support. Williamson, the ex-clergyman, bowed to us with mock politeness, and the bully Woodley advanced with a shout of brutal and exultant laughter.

"You can take your beard off, Bob," said he. "I know you, right enough. Well, you and your pals have just come in time for me to be able to introduce you to Mrs. Woodley."

Our guide's answer was a singular one. He snatched off the dark beard which had disguised him and threw it on the ground, disclosing a long, sallow, clean-shaven face below it. Then he raised his revolver and covered the young ruffian, who was advancing upon him with his dangerous riding-crop swinging in his hand.

"Yes," said our ally, "I am Bob Carruthers, and I'll see this woman righted, if I have to swing for it. I told you what I'd do if you molested her, and, by the Lord! I'll be as good as my word."

"You're too late. She's my wife."

"No, she's your widow."

His revolver cracked, and I saw the blood spurt from the front of Woodley's waistcoat. He spun round with a scream and fell upon his back, his hideous red face turning suddenly to a dreadful mottled pallor. The old man, still clad in his surplice, burst into such a string of foul oaths as I have never heard, and pulled out a revolver of his own, but, before he could raise it, he was looking down the barrel of Holmes' weapon.

"Enough of this, said my friend, coldly. "Drop that pistol! Watson, pick it up! Hold it to his head! Thank you. You, Carruthers, give me that revolver. We'll have no more violence. Come, hand it over!"

"Who are you, then?"

"My name is Sherlock Holmes."

"Good Lord!"

"You have heard of me, I see. I will represent the official police until their arrival. Here, you!" he shouted to a frightened groom, who had appeared at the edge of the glade. "Come here. Take this note, as hard as you can ride, to Farnham." He scribbled a few words upon a leaf from his note-book. "Give it to the superintendent at the police-station. Until he comes I must detain you all under my personal custody."

The strong, masterful personality of Holmes dominated the tragic scene, and all were equally puppets in his hands. Williamson and Carruthers found themselves carrying the wounded Woodley into the house, and I gave my arm to the frightened girl. The injured man was laid on his bed, and at Holmes' request I examined him. I carried my report to where he sat in the old tapestry-hung dining-room with his two prisoners before him.

"He will live," said I.

"What!" cried Carruthers, springing out of his chair. "I'll go upstairs and finish him first. Do you tell me that that girl, that angel, is to be tied to Roaring Jack Woodley for life?"

"You need not concern yourself about that," said Holmes. "There are two very good reasons why she should, under no circumstances, be his wife. In the first place, we are very safe in questioning Mr. Williamson's right to solemnize a marriage."

"I have been ordained," cried the old rascal.

"And also unfrocked."

"Once a clergyman, always a clergyman."

"I think not. How about the licence?"

"We had a licence for the marriage. I have it here in my pocket."

"Then you got it by a trick. But, in any case, a forced marriage is no marriage, but it is a very serious felony, as you will discover before you have finished. You'll have time to think the point out during the next ten years or so, unless I am mistaken. As to you, Carruthers, you would have done better to keep your pistol in your pocket."

"I begin to think so, Mr. Holmes, but when I thought of all the precaution I had taken to shield this girl—for I loved her, Mr. Holmes, and it is the only time that ever I knew what love was—it fairly drove me mad to think that she was in the power of the greatest brute and bully in South Africa—a man whose name is a holy terror from Kimberley to Johannesburg. Why, Mr. Holmes, you'll hardly believe it, but ever since that girl has been in my employment I never once let her go past this house, where I knew the rascals were lurking, without following her on my bicycle, just to see that she came to no harm. I kept my distance from her, and I wore a beard, so that she should not recognize me, for she is a good and high-spirited girl, and she wouldn't have stayed in my employment long if she had thought that I was following her about the country roads."

"Why didn't you tell her of her danger?"

"Because, then, again, she would have left me, and I couldn't bear to face that. Even if she couldn't love me, it was a great deal to me just to see her dainty form about the house, and to hear the sound of her voice."

"Well," said I, "you call that love, Mr. Carruthers, but I should call it selfishness."

"Maybe the two things go together. Anyhow, I couldn't let her go. Besides, with this crowd about, it was well that she should have someone near to look after her. Then, when the cable came, I knew they were bound to make a move."

"What cable?"

Carruthers took a telegram from his pocket.

"That's it," said he.

It was short and concise:

"The old man is dead."

"Hum!" said Holmes. "I think I see how things worked, and I can understand how this message would, as you say, bring them to a head. But while you wait, you might tell me what you can."

The old reprobate with the surplice burst into a volley of bad language.

"By Heaven!" said he, if you squeal on us, Bob Carruthers, I'll serve you as you served Jack Woodley. You can bleat about the girl to your heart's content, for that's your own affair, but if you round on your pals to this plain-clothes copper, it will be the worst day's work that ever you did."

"Your reverence need not be excited," said Holmes, lighting a cigarette. "The case is clear enough against you, and all I ask is a few details for my private curiosity. However, if there's any difficulty in your telling me, I'll do the talking, and then you will see how far you have a chance of holding back your secrets. In the first place, three of you came from South Africa on this game—you Williamson, you Carruthers, and Woodley."

"Lie number one," said the old man; "I never saw either of them until two months ago, and I have never been in Africa in my life, so you can put that in your pipe and smoke it, Mr. Busybody Holmes!"

"What he says is true," said Carruthers.

"Well, well, two of you came over. His reverence is our own home-made article. You had known Ralph Smith in South Africa. You had reason to believe he would not live long. You found out that his niece would inherit his fortune. How's that—eh?"

Carruthers nodded and Williamson swore.

"She was next of kin, no doubt, and you were aware that the old fellow would make no will."

"Couldn't read or write," said Carruthers.

"So you came over the two of you, and hunted up the girl. The idea was that one of you was to marry her, and the other have a share of the plunder. For some reason, Woodley was chosen as the husband. Why was that?"

"We played cards for her on the voyage. He won."

"I see. You got the young lady into your service, and there Woodley was to do the courting. She recognized the drunken brute that he was, and would have nothing to do with him. Meanwhile, your arrangement was rather upset by the fact that you had yourself fallen in love with the lady. You could no longer bear the idea of this ruffian owning her?"

"No, by George, I couldn't!"

There was a quarrel between you. He left you in a rage, and began to make his own plans independently of you."

"It strikes me, Williamson, there isn't very much that we can tell this gentleman," cried Carruthers, with a bitter laugh. "Yes, we quarrelled, and he knocked me down. I am level with him on that, anyhow. Then I lost sight of him. That was when he picked up with this cast padre here. I found that they had set up housekeeping together at this place on the line that she had to pass for the station. I kept my eye on her after that, for I knew there was some devilry in the wind. I saw them from time to time, for I was anxious to know what they were after. Two days ago Woodley came up to my house with this cable, which showed that Ralph Smith was dead. He asked me if I would stand by the bargain. I said I would not. He asked me if would marry the girl myself, and give him a share. I said I would willingly do so, but that she would not have me. He said, 'Let us get her married first, and after a week or two she may see things a bit different.' I said I would have nothing to do with violence. So he went off cursing, like the foul-mouthed blackguard that he was, and swearing that he would have her yet. She was leaving me this week-end, and I had got a trap to take her to the station, but I was so uneasy in my mind that I followed her on my bicycle. She had got a start, however, and before I could catch her, the mischief was done. The first thing I knew about it was when I saw you two gentlemen driving back in her dog-cart."

Holmes rose and tossed the end of his cigarette into the grate. "I have been very obtuse, Watson," said he. "When in your report you said that you had seen the cyclist as you thought arrange his necktie in the shrubbery, that alone should have told me all. However, we may congratulate ourselves upon a curious and, in some respects, a unique case. I perceive three of the county constabulary in the drive, and I am glad to see that the little ostler is able to keep pace with them, so it is likely that neither he nor the interesting bridegroom will be permanently damaged by their morning's adventures. I think, Watson, that in your medical capacity, you might wait upon Miss Smith and tell her that if she is sufficiently recovered, we shall wait upon Miss Smith her to her mother's home. If she is not quite convalescent, you will find that a hint that we were about to telegraph to a young electrician in the Midlands would probably complete the cure. As to you, Mr. Carruthers, I think that you have done what you could to make amends for your share in an evil plot. There is my card, sir, and if my evidence can be of help to you in your trial, it shall be at your disposal."

In the whirl of our incessant activity, it has often been difficult for me, as the reader has probably observed, to round off my narratives, and to give those final details which the curious might expect. Each case has been the prelude to another, and the crisis once over the actors have passed for ever out of our busy lives. I find, however, a short note at the end of my manuscript dealing with this case, in which I have put it upon record that Miss Violet Smith did indeed inherit a large fortune, and that she is now the wife of Cyril Morton, the senior partner of Morton & Kennedy, the famous Westminster electricians. Williamson and Woodley were both tried for abduction and assault, the former getting seven years and the latter ten. Of the fate of Carruthers, I have no record, but I am sure that his assault was not viewed very gravely by the court, since Woodley had the reputation of being a most dangerous ruffian, and I think that a few months were sufficient to satisfy the demands of justice.

American Press Comment on Togo's Victory Over Rojestvensky

VLADIVOSTOK, THE LAST OF RUSSIA'S PORTS ON THE PACIFIC.

Vladivostok, Japan's sole remaining naval station on the Pacific, is situated in the Gulf of Peter the Great, in the Sea of Japan. This gulf, which has a length of 50 miles and a width at its entrance of 112 miles, is divided into two large bays, Amur and Usuri—by the hilly peninsula of Muravioff-Amurskiy, continued in a group of islands.

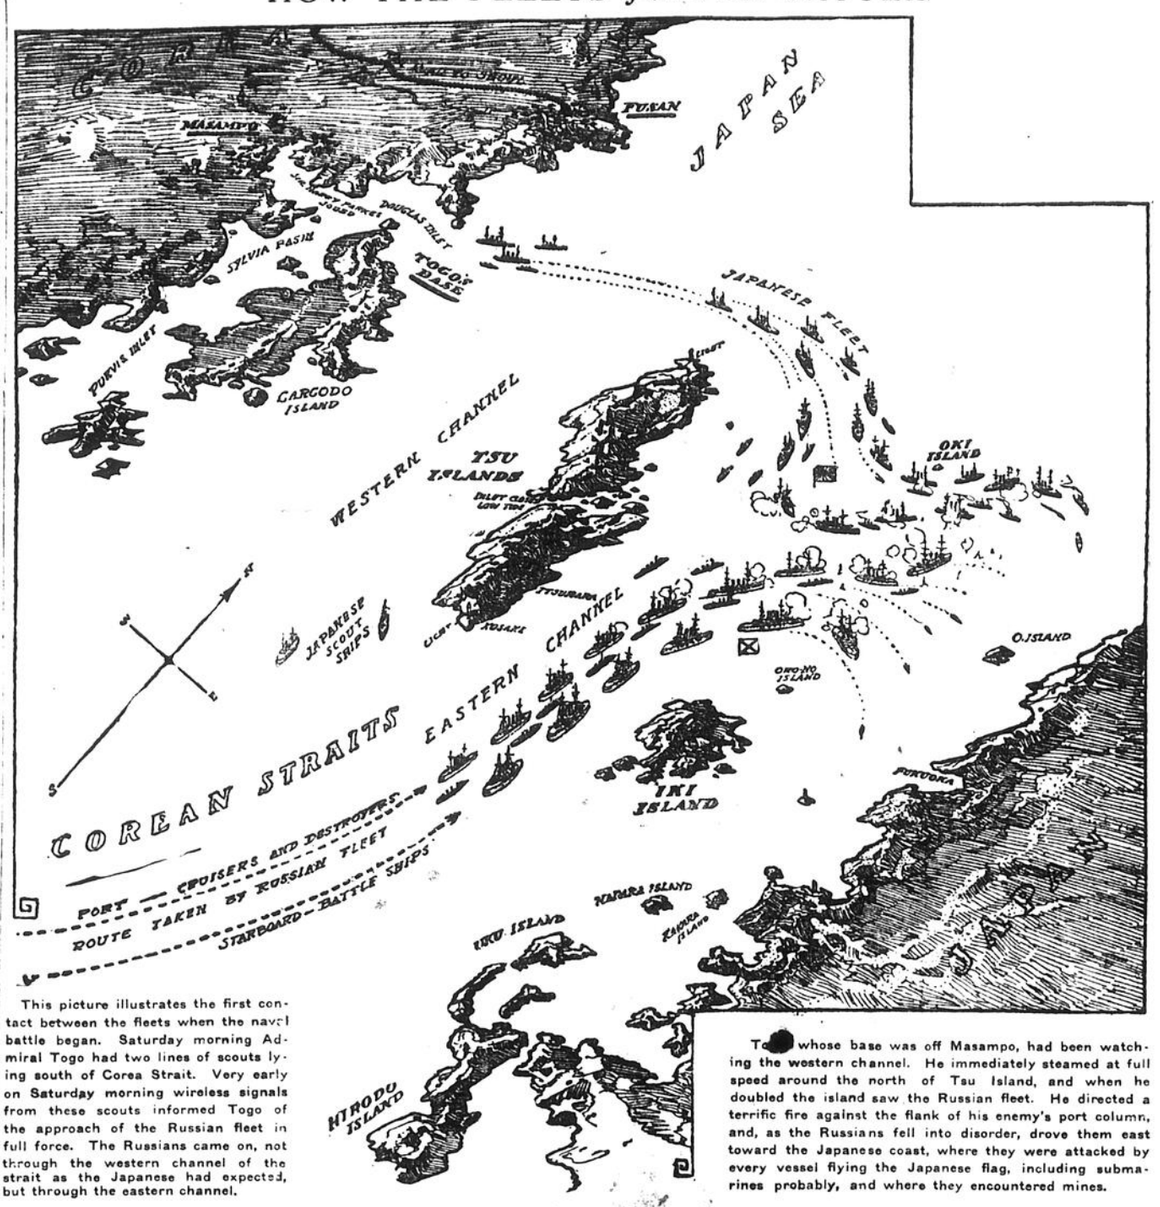
A narrow strait, which has received the high-sounding name of the Eastern Bosphorus, separates this from the peninsula and Vladivostok occupies the northern shore of one of its horn-like expansions, which the Russians have called the Golden Horn. The depth of the Eastern Bosphorus ranges from 13 to 20 fathoms, and that of the Golden Horn from 5 to 13, the latter thus affording a spacious harbor—one of the finest in the world. The hills are covered with forests of oak, lime, birch, maple, cork and a great assortment of other trees.

The climate is very severe if compared with that of corresponding latitudes in Europe. Though standing in almost the same parallel as Marseilles, Vladivostok has an average annual temperture of only 38.5 F., and although the gulf itself never freezes, a thin ice-crust forms along the shores in December, keeping ships ice-bound from thirty to forty-five days.

Though founded only in 1861, Vladivostok had a population of some 30,000 before the war broke out.

The Gulf of Peter the Great was discovered in 1852 by the French, and named the Golfe d'Anville. The whole gulf was mapped in 1859 by the Russians, and a post established, which afterwards was named Vladivostok, "the Gate of the East."

HOW THE FLEETS JOINED BATTLE.



This picture illustrates the first contact between the fleets when the naval battle began. Saturday morning Admiral Togo had two lines of scouts lying south of Corea Strait. Very early on Saturday morning wireless signals from these scouts informed Togo of the approach of the Russian fleet in full force. The Russians came on, not through the western channel of the strait as the Japanese had expected, but through the eastern channel.

Togo, whose base was off Masampo, had been watching the western channel. He immediately steamed at full speed around the north of Tsu Island, and when he doubled the island saw the Russian fleet. He directed a terrific fire against the flank of his enemy's port column, and, as the Russians fell into disorder, drove them east toward the Japanese coast, where they were attacked by every vessel flying the Japanese flag, including submarines probably, and where they encountered mines.

THE CHANCES OF PEACE.

THE CZAR—The war must go on. I cannot betray Russia's future merely for the sake of placating an unruly minority of my subjects.

COUNT CASSINI—Talk of peace is premature. The neutral powers can scarcely wish Japan to remain without a taste of defeat. Rojestvensky's defeat will prolong the war for years, until the tables are turned.

MINISTER TAKAHIRA—Ask Russia if the hour of peace has come. It is to Russia that the initiative toward peace is to be looked for.

BARON HAYASHI—This makes further Japanese military and naval operations very easy. We consider the victory the most decisive of modern times. Russia can no longer be reckoned with as a naval power. Togo's victory is on a par with Nelson's.

POPE PIUS—The loss of life is most deplorable, but I hope and pray it may be the end of the war.

UNITED STATES REAR-ADMIRAL ROBLEY D. EVANS — In my opinion the Russian Government will not be ready for peace until some great victory has been won by Russian arms either on land or sea. The new disaster has prevented instead of hastening peace.

UNITED STATES SECRETARY OF THE NAVY MORTON—It means that all great international disputes must be settled by arbitration or on the sea. Of course, there will be important battles on land, but the final decision will be on the sea.

UNITED STATES ADMIRAL DEWEY—The victory of the Japanese may be attributed to their trainings and preparedness. They achieved their victory by hurling their torpedo boats against the Russians.

ADMIRAL FREMANTLE—Rojestvensky's battle formation was responsible. He was hampered by coast defence ships. It is the man behind the gun who is the leading factor in modern naval warfare.

(New York Sun.)

If there is a good and great service which the United States can now render to the Russian Government and people, that service is justly due from us to them. Although there is no denying that throughout the present struggle popular sentiment in this country has inclined in a marked degree toward the cause of Japan — a circumstance mainly explained by past events in Manchuria and the unfortunate policies of the Czar's Ministers—it is equally true that the attitude of our Government during the war has been unexceptionable in point of correctness, impartiality and friendliness. Behind that is the fact that the people of America have never forgotten, and cannot forget, that we are Russia's debtor whenever opportunity offers for assistance that sympathy and friendship may properly give.

(New York Press.)

Togo is the Nelson of our age. We have had our Deweys and our Sampsons, but their work, measured with that of Togo, sinks far below the Eastern conqueror's. Our heroes were gallant sailors, and they won great victories; they take high rank among naval warriors; but with superior fleets in each case, with bigger ships and heavier guns and more men, they met and fought inferior ships, lesser guns and fewer men. No commander of war fleets shall stand higher than the captain who beats a mighty armada with a smaller, though it be a better, force. That man is Togo.

(New York Herald.)

There is a definite pathos in this defeat of Rojestvensky apart from its bearing on the exterior policies of the world. The defeated Admiral surely deserves a tribute of admiration for the skill with which, through good fortune or ill, he carried his fleet up to the supreme moment. Whether the chosen road to his objective at Vladivostok was well or ill chosen must await future judgment. At this moment it is uncertain whether he fell in the action, but we may be sure such a fate would for him be preferable to surrender. It has been believed that, like himself, his captains were inspired by the faith that they constituted the forlorn hope of Russia and that any failure to conquer would be compensated by the permanent damage they might inflict on Togo's fleet. This satisfaction has in a measure been denied them. A ship that goes down in action with colors at the masthead is one thing, but a surrendered vessel is always difficult to explain.

(New York Globe.)

Togo's achievements are all the more extraordinary that they were by a people who throughout the war have shown themselves indifferent to death. Their conduct at Nan Shan Hills, at Liao Yang, at Port Arthur, at Mukden, has proved their readiness to win at any sacrifice of life. No one can doubt, therefore, that in case of need Togo's men would have fought their ships till they sank.

In the battle of August 10, when Admiral Withoeft sought to break his way through the blockading fleet, Togo, while making sure that the enemy should not escape, kept his own vessels at a range which rendered the indifferent gunnery of the Russians totally ineffective. At the time he was criticised for not closing in and destroying the battered ships that were driven back to port, and historians of the day assert that he left his work unfinished only because his ammunition was exhausted. The results of the battle of May 27 show for what purpose he kept his fleet from useless risk of disablement in the Yellow Sea engagements. Had Togo annihilated the Port Arthur fleet, instead of leaving the final work of demolition to Nogi's artillery, and in doing so had lost three or four of his own ships, the immediate sensation would have been tremendous and his popular fame might have been greater than it is even now, when the Russian flag has been banished by him from Asiatic waters. But if he had thus pursued the course which most of the old sea fighters would have preferred, how would he have faced Rojestvensky?

(New York Mail.)

Does all this point to a "yellow peril?" If Asiatic renascence constitutes a peril to the world, it does. But we refuse to believe that a rebirth of Asia under Japanese or any other leadership necessarily menaces the western world. That it should mark the end of European territorial aggression in the continent of Asia is quite possible. America can stand, and so can Europe, any such development of the yellow peril as that. It is conceivable that it may result in a voluntary relinquishment of Wei-Hai-Wei by the English and by an eventual notice to the Germans to get out of Shantung. But it will not menace Hong Kong, where British tenure is of longer standing and where a perfectly normal trade function is performed under the British flag. And instead of cutting off American and legitimate European trade with Asia, it will extend it by promoting the development of China.

And in one direction the yellow peril, the distinctly Asiatic influence, will be lessened by this momentous sea fight—Russia will be thrown back upon Europe, reformed, and brought into closer touch with the life of the West. The frontiers of Asia would have been advanced into Europe if China had come under Russian influence, for Russia, by the same token, would have been Asiaticized. The modern, progressive, free western world may rejoice that, instead, its frontiers have been advanced into Russia by this result in the Corean Strait.

THEY MET.

Rojestvensky (soliloquizing)—"Togo thought he was darn cute, but I found him." —The New York World.

(Boston Herald.)

This great victory does not change the current of history, but it simply confirms what before appeared to be the irresistible trend of events. On the land the Russians in the Manchurian war have not succeeded in winning a single definite success, and the future has held out no hope to them so long as the Japanese, through their control of the water communications between Japan and the continent of Asia, could easily throw men and supplies upon the mainland in unlimited quantities. The only hope that remained to Russia was to send to the east a war fleet of sufficient size to capture or destroy the ships of the Japanese navy, and by possessing herself of the control of the high seas make it difficult, if not impossible, to have Marshal Oyama's army supplied with the men and materials needed to carry on a great and aggressive campaign. It was the last card that the Russian Government could play in the desperate game of war, and now that it has played this card and has been forced to acknowledge defeat, it seems to us that the Czar and his advisers, whether of the war or the peace party, must realize the entire futility of any longer postponing peace negotiations.

(St. Louis Globe-Democrat.)

Upon the fortunes of Russia in Manchuria the defeat of Rojestvensky is apparently complete enough to be decisive. Russia has no more fleets to send to Japanese waters. Rojestvensky's squadron represented the last of the various armadas which could be used for serious purposes of offence or defence Japan seemingly has as complete a mastery of the sea in 1905 as Great Britain had after Nelson crushed the Franco-Spanish fleet off Cape Trafalgar in 1905. It is possible, indeed, that at the outset Rojestvensky has as little heart in the undertaking as Villeneuve had in his campaign which resulted in his annihilation, but, as in Villeneuve's case, he seized the moment when his enemy was apparently weakened, and thus was lured to destruction. It was a desperate undertaking for Russia to send a fleet several thousand miles to meet an enemy who was better equipped, who had the experience and the prestige of victory, and who was in his own waters and fighting with his back to the wall. But the situation at home as well as in Manchuria no doubt seemed to Nicholas and his general staff to have demanded this tempting of fate.

(Brooklyn Eagle.)

The world will hope that the issue of this fight will not be confined merely to the destruction of material. It should bring peace appreciably nearer. Had the result been reversed all the efforts put forth by Japan on sea and land would have been nearly, if not quite, nullified. In the matter of a naval reserve the island kingdom is worse off than Russia. Every ship flying the Japanese flag is in active service to-day. Most, if not all, of them are under the immediate command of Togo, and most, if not all, of them were engaged in the historic battle of Saturday. Had this fleet been annihilated or crippled the Japanese coasts would have been open to Russian raids. The transport service upon which the very life of the army in Manchuria depends would have been suspended. Supplies of men, ammunition and provisions would have been cut off. The possession of Port Arthur, Dalny and the Liaotung Peninsula would have been acquired in vain. The blood poured out by Japan at the Yalu, at Nanshan, at Liaoyang and at Mukden would have been wasted. In contemplating what Japan escapes we may measure what she wins. Her very existence as a nation of importance in world politics rests upon her power at sea. She has trained a school of sailors admirably fitted to maintain that power unbroken. They have wrecked the one hope upon which the war advocates in Russia lately permitted themselves to build. Peace might have been accomplished four months ago had Russia agreed to pay an indemnity. Only the resolution or obstinacy of the bureaucrats surrounding the Czar prevented that payment. Will the obstinacy continue or will the war party appreciate the folly of further sacrifices? Circumstances suggest that the moment for surrender is at hand. Something may yet be saved from the ruins. One Asiatic sea port remains to Russia and the main line of the Siberian Railroad is not yet in the hands of the enemy.

A MODERN GULLIVER. —Newark News.

(Brooklyn Times.)

It remains to be seen, also, what the effect of this crushing blow will be upon Russia. The hopes of the Czar and of his people were centred in these ships, and they do not appear to have allowed themselves to contemplate the possibility of defeat. With Togo's fleet dispersed, the Japanese coast at the mercy of the victorious Russian navy, and Oyama's armies cut off from the possibility of re-enforcement of supplies, it seemed to them that the tide of battle would be turned, and that the Mikado would be compelled to sue for peace. It was a beautiful dream, and it has been cherished during these weeks until it has been accepted as a reality. The reaction will be terrible, all the more so because the hopes of the Czar have recently risen on high. None can tell what the immediate result will be. Is the Czar ready to make peace on these terms?

(Troy Times.)

The expected has happened. Togo has swamped Rojestvensky, and the Russian fleet, that country's last hope on the sea, has been practically destroyed. The Japanese are following what is left of the Russians. The history of this fleet, which parallels so closely that of the Spanish squadron under Admiral Cervera, continues the similarity to the deadly end. The military superiority of Japan is more firmly established. The Russians should now be willing to treat for peace. Will they have the prudence to do so. That is a question which many will try to answer within the next few weeks.

(Springfield Republican.)

A long stride toward peace has been taken, whatever may be the immediate course of the Russian autocracy. To anticipate peace negotiations at once may be premature, although there is not a neutral statesman in the world who would not advise the Czar to bring the war promptly to a close. There is a quality of stubbornness in the government at St. Petersburg that well matches its inefficiency and fatuity. After the battle of Mukden it was evident to impartial observers that Russia could gain nothing by more fighting, yet the war went on. Why, then, should we now expect a gleam of common sense to penetrate the heads of the Czar and his counselors? The answer is that this is a stunning event, a sledge-hammer argument, in the face of which the pride, or even the tenacity, of a ruler must crumble away. It is a long strife toward peace, because the pressure of opinion at home and the growing impatience of neutral powers for the return of normal conditions will be the more difficult to resist. Finally, the responsibility of prolonging so hopeless a contest could be borne only by a madman, and the Czar would be assassinated in his own household, like his imperial predecessor, Paul, were he for long to pursue wantonly so insane a course.

(Buffalo Enquirer.)

From the beginning of the war with Russia, the Japanese have made calculations for the events that have occurred on land and sea. They have not even considered the possibility of defeat. Remarkably characteristic of the Japanese has been the utter absence in their minds of so much as a chance for the Russians to win.

Russia is now well whipped. She is disgraced and humiliated by her chastisement, and she must end the war at Japan's terms. Admiral Togo, with an inferior fleet, so far as number of fighting machines is concerned, has almost annihilated the Russian squadron and taken at least 2,000 prisoners. It is most probable that several of the captured Russian warships are yet serviceable and they will, no doubt be at once put into commission with the flag of Japan flying above them. The Vladivostok fleet hardly dares meet Togo now, and it is not within reason to suppose that its commander will hazard such an undertaking.

FRANCE AND THE JAPS.

(From "Sur la Pierre Blanche," by Anatole France.)

In vain did serious-minded persons demonstrate to the Japanese that they ought to be vanquished in the superior interests of the European market, in accordance with well-established economic laws. In vain did the pro-consul of Indo-China, M. Doumer, himself bid them without delay suffer decisive defeats on land and sea. In vain did Dr. Charles Richet, skeleton in hand, represent to them that, being prognathous and having the calves of the leg insufficiently developed, they were under the obligation to flee to the tree-tops before the Russians, who are brachycephalous and as such eminently agents of civilization, as appeared when they drowned 5,000 Chinese in the Amur River. "Bear in mind that you are intermediary between the monkey and man," Dr. Richet obligingly told them "from which it results that if you whipped the Russians or finno-lettougro-slavs, it would be exactly as if the monkeys whipped you. Do you understand?" And the Japanese refused to take the slightest notice of him.

A PREDICTION.

(The New York World.)

In their desperation the Czar and his courtiers repeat that the war must go on. So they have declared after every great defeat, only to invite fresh disaster upon their country's head. What are the Russian people, their bodies and their treasure, that Nicholas shall not use them as his personal chattels? It has been their privilege to be sacrified to the hollow pride and flaunting corruption of the autocracy, to be cowed at home by starvation and Cossacks, and to be marshalled for slaughter abroad under unfit leaders. Why should they protest if the Czar again commands that peace be called impossible? The crimes of hereditary misgovernment have culminated in this war. For months the Russian masses have been crying out for peace. What was it to them if the Japanese won by the far Pacific if they themselves perished in Russia? Now that they have seen another great fleet blown off the face of the waters by Togo like a flotilla of paper boats they are to be ordered to furnish more regiments and squadrons at the Czar's will. Will they obey? Revolution may seem far off at the Tsarskoe-Selo Palace, where Nicholas remains in hiding. But it is the promise of a popular uprising in Russia, no less than the certainty of Japanese victory in Asia, that confronts the Czar if he persists in prolonging the war.

"ARISE!" —The New York World.

Special Notice.

"ROYAL"

EGYPTIAN CIGARETTES,

15c, 25c and 50c a box.

The sea power of Russia is a memory. By the virtual annihilation of Rojestvensky's fleet the capacity of the Czar to continue a naval warfare is checked for years to come. But Japan has done even more than to destroy the sea power of her enemy; both relatively and absolutely she has increased her own sea power by the capture of one of the very newest, the very best and the most powerful of Russia's battleships, the Orel, conforming to the highest standard of modern ships of the line, and other war vessels of less value and power (two of them ships of the line), but adding materially to the already triumphant strength of Japan's navy.

(New York Tribune.)

We have recalled Trafalgar. Between the two battles there are striking resemblances. Each was fought chiefly to preserve an island Empire from invasion and to keep its sea roads open and secure, and each was decisively successful in so doing. It may be—we hope not, but it may be—that the two will prove to be alike in failure to end the war. Crushing as was the defeat of the French at Trafalgar, there was no thought on that account of suing for peace. There followed, on the contrary, ten years of war, with Austerlitz and Jena, with the Berlin Decree, with the Milan Decree, with the Peninsular War, and, indeed, with the great bulk of the Napoleonic battles and campaigns. Crushing as is this Japanese victory to the sea power of Russia, and hopeless as is now the prospect of Russia's regaining ability even to menace Japan at sea for years to come, it would be rash to say that it must end the war. It ought to do so, but "ought" is not an omnipotent word in time of war. With Vladivostok still intact, and with half a million men encamped south of Harbin, it may be that Russia will decide to continue the struggle, and not until she has lost Vladivostok and had her armies driven back to Lake Baikal will it be judicious to say—if even then—that her last hope of success on land is gone. Nevertheless, despite the precedent of Trafalgar, it is to be said that few battles in history, perhaps none at sea, have ever more strongly prescribed the prompt making of peace than has this.

PRICE OF RADIUM STILL RISING.

Quotations are Now on Basis of $3,000,000 An Ounce.

The price of radium has increased so much recently, owing to the difficulty of obtaining further supplies, that research work is almost at a standstill. Sir William Ramsay told an English press representative that as much as £20 a milligramme, or at the rate of £600,000 an ounce, was being demanded, and the quantity available, even at that price, is very small indeed.

"What could be got for £2 some time ago, when radium was less known than it is," said one of the principals of Messrs. Armbrecht, Nelson and Co., at the Duke street pharmacy, where most of the radium that has come to this country has been stored. "Is now being sold for £100, and the price is steadily growing up. Strong radium is being manufactured by only one man that I know of, a German named Giesel, and the quantity available is exceeding small. I don't believe that there has been more than half an ounce of radium manufactured since Mme. Curie discovered the new element. Two mines in Cornwall were believed to have radio-active pitchblende, and a British company was formed to exploit it, but the venture was abandoned. Other efforts are being made in America to increase the supply. So far, however, they have been unsuccessful."

Another attempt is to be made to get radium from the Cornish mines. This time a German is to try the experiment.

A report from Adis Abeba, the capital of the Negus of Abyssinia, is to the effect that Emperor Menelik, the King of the Kings, has presented six of the finest Arabian horses ever raised to the representative of the German Emperor now at the Abyssinian capital. The horses will be shipped to Germany, for His Majesty's stables at Berlin.

But Dodd's Kidney Pills Made Him a New Man.

Richard Quirk Doctored for a Dozen Years and Thought his Case Incurable —Dodd's Kidney Pills Cured Him.

Fortune Harbor, Nfld., June 2.—(Special.)—Scores of people in this neighborhood are living proofs that Dodd's Kidney Pills cure all kidney ailments from backache to Bright's disease. Among the most remarkable cures is that of Mr. Richard Quirk, and he gives the story of it to the public as follows:

"I suffered for over twenty years from lumbago and kidney disease, and at intervals was totally unable to work. After ten or twelve years of doctors' treatment, I had made up my mind that my complaint was incurable. Reading of cures by Dodd's Kidney Pills tempted me to try them. I did so with little faith, but to my great surprise I had not taken more than half a box before I felt relief, and after the use of seven or eight boxes I was fully cured and a new man.

"Yes, Dodd's Kidney Pills cured my lumbago and kidney disease, and the best of it is I have stayed cured."

PUBLIC HOUSE TRUST WORKS WELL

Professor Macnaghten's Interesting Description of Its Methods.

LORD GREY'S INTEREST IN IT

Governor-General Was Largely Responsible for Its Success in Great Britain.

With the question of temperance reform gaining so much prominence, and its intimate association with the solution of the difficult problem of social reform, it should not be forgotten that what the scheme of the Public House Trusts has done for England may also be able to do for Canada.

His Excellency the Governor-General has placed himself in the front rank of the temperance reformers of the present time as the originator of the Public House Trust, which has been made the subject of an interesting and instructive paper in the June issue of the Canadian Magazine.

Prof. McNaughton gives a brief but accurate account of this remarkable movement, and shows how appropriately a similar experiment may be tried on Canadian soil.

NOT POLITICAL MOVEMENT.

In emphasizing the fact that it is not a political movement in any sense of the term, the writer stated "it is all the more necessary that this should be clearly understood, because in Canada the temperance question appears to some extent to have been made the shuttlecock of two political parties."

Hence it was that the movement in England received the warmest of support and encouragement of men of different political views and of leaders of the social and intellectual life of the country.

Dealing with the genesis of the movement which is illustrative of the "natural law of progression on the lines of least resistance," he stated that the endeavor to introduce the Gothenburg System, "the elimination of private profit," into the English Licensing System, was unfortunately met by the unreasoning opposition of the extreme section of the teetotal party, which had the effect of preventing statutory reform.

Then it was that Earl Grey appeared on the scene, four years ago, when he conceived the idea of applying personally for a license in a village in Northumberland, where the brewing interests had already given indictions of making a similar attempt. The application was successful and his lordship immediately handed over the license to a local Trust.

SPREAD OF MOVEMENT.

From this small beginning the movement so initiated spread to such an extent that in four years the number of houses under Trust management was 140, and during the year 1903 the houses that came under Trust management averaged nearly one a week. By the end of 1903 there were 42 Trust companies formed and registered, while so far as the colonies are concerned, South Africa has set the example to both Canada and Australia by the successful inauguration of a Trust Company in Durban, Natal, with a capital subscribed of £16,374, or over $78,000.

The essential principles of the Gothenburg System, on which the Trust System is based consists of the elimination of private profit, effected in the following way.

A manager is appointed at a fixed salary. He gets no commission on the sale of intoxicants, but he gets a commission on the sale of all food and non-intoxicating beverages. This practical method of dealing with the liquor traffic in a scientific manner recognizes the existence of the "law of commerce," by which every shopkeeper is impelled to endeavor to sell as much as he can of his own particular wares. Having recognized its existence, it uses it for the public benefit by making the publican an interested seller of non-alcoholic as opposed to alcoholic wares.

To blame the publican then is "illogical and absurd," for he is merely obeying the inexorable "law of commerce." It is the present system which makes the public house a shop with a partial and in some cases an absolute monopoly that is blameworthy and requires to be completely changed. So long as the public house continues a shop, so long must it be a menace to the public safety and welfare. Hence it was that the Gothenburg system diverted the shopkeeping instinct of the publican into legitimate channels. The method has not only the merit of extreme simplicity but of also always acting automatically.

DANGEROUS FEATURE ELIMINATED.

A further reason for this change is the fact, supported by scientific investigation, that the most dangerous and deadly forms of intoxication are invariably produced by the use of immatured alcohols which, under the present system, the publican naturally buys in order to sell at a profit. Thus, in eliminating the element of private profit the Gothenburg system has removed the tendency to push the sale of alcoholic stimulants as well as to purchase low-priced spirits."

In both these respects the Trust system is like the other, though its area of operations is extended to include all stimulants whether fermented or distilled.

HOW THE PLAN WORKS.

The plan adopted for safeguarding and securing the continuance of the Trust is as follows: A company is formed in any county or district where it is deemed advisable to form a Trust, shares being issued to the amount found necessary for starting operations. A certain number of deferred shares are vested in the Trustees, and these deferred shares carry with them half the voting power of the company. As an additional precaution, the directors are usually enpowered to refuse to sanction the transfer of shares at their sole discretion; so that the original purposes of the Trust are doubly secured first by the Trustees being able to control the voting power of the company by virtue of the deferred shares; and then by the fact that the shares can be prevented from passing into the hands of undesirable persons.

In other words, there is no possibility of such a company being eventually controlled by the majority of shares eventually passing into the hands of a brewing company or other allied institutions. The whole of the surplus profits are expended in providing counter attractions in order to remove the tendency to intemperance which the system of licensing public houses for profit necessarily fosters.

ITS SUCCESSFUL WORKING.

Prof. McNaughton then cites several examples to illustrate the successful working of the Trust system in the United Kingdom, and in discussing its application to Canada, he treats separately of the Territories now in course of settlement and the old settled provinces of the Dominion.

In the former case, he says: "Let no new license of any kind be granted except after a vote recorded in its favor by a majority of its inhabitants, and then only to a Trust company with profits regulated by the current bank rate of interest."

In the older settled portions of the Dominion he contends that the difficulties are certainly not greater than those which confronted the pioneers of the Trust movement in England; and in view of the extreme importance of the system being tested in a thorough and impartial manner, the Government might reasonably consent to its being tried throughout some one district or township; so that in the event of its success it might be applied on a larger and more elaborate plan throughout the Dominion. "It would not, of course, be necessary to secure a very large area of population for the first experiment (some locality like Farnham, in the Eastern Townships would be admirably adapted for the purpose), so long as the district in which the experiment was made was exclusively administered by the operations of the system. In case of failure, nothing would be easier after a few years of trial than to return to the old system of private licensing"; whereas in the case of success, the fact of the original experiment having been made on a small scale would facilitate its being extended to the whole of the Dominion on a large and enduring basis.

Pale-Faced and Anxious

The Countenance Indicates the Body's Awful Struggle for Health.

Impossible to work or think clearly when there is no reserve of vigor, no nourishment in the blood, no supply of nerve energy.

The life of the half-sick man is pitiful; in fact, almost criminal, when bounding strength is so quickly derived from Ferrozone.

This nutritive tonic is guaranteed to strengthen all men, women and children. Weak organs get new force, vital energy is generated. Muscle and fat are added, healthy color is restored and the blood fairly tingles with new found life.

Proved successful in debility and weakness by the people of many nations, Ferrozone stands unrivalled as the greatest of all uplifting medicines. Read the evidence of Mr. Jno. Carter, of 494 King street west, Toronto, who says:

"After a severe attack of grippe my health was almost shattered. I suffered constantly from nervousness and dyspepsia. At night I would waken with terrible palpitation and heart pains. Work became a great effort. At ten in the morning I was so tired and weak I could hardly work another minute.

"Then came a bad attack of rheumatism, which laid me up in bed. I could scarcely lift the weight of a pound, and to stoop or bend was impossible. My druggist recommended Ferrozone, and he knew what he was talking about, for it rebuilt my strength, gave me abundant appetite, better blood and new nerve energy. The rheumatism has disappeared. I weigh more, feel refreshed and vigorous, and am able to work ten hours a day. Ferrozone did it all."

You'll be steadied, toned and strengthened for all time to come, with Ferrozone. Get the genuine in 50c boxes or six for $2.50, at all dealers, or N. C. Polson & Co., Hartford, Conn., U.S.A., or Kingston, Ont.

Her Drunken Husband Cured.

One day, when he came home very much intoxicated, and his week's salary spent, I sent for the Tasteless Samaria Prescription, and put it in his coffee. He never suspected a thing, and before I had given him the full course, he stopped drinking altogether. I honestly believe this remedy will cure the worst cases."

Journalists From "Bay Tree State."

The Michigan Press Association, to the number of 150, will invade Canada on a sight-seeing tour on June 17th. They will leave Detroit, Mich., on a special train over the Grand Trunk Railway System, reaching Toronto in time to take the Richelieu and Ontario Navigation Company's boat for the trip through the Thousand Islands and down the rapids of the St. Lawrence River, arriving at Montreal on the evening of June 18th. The following day and night will be occupied in seeing Montreal and the party will leave early the following morning on a special train over the Grand Trunk for Portland, Me. After spending the day at Portland, and visiting its environments, steamer will be taken for the Maritime Provinces and the return journey to Detroit will be made via Boston.

In recent years the Grand Trunk has done more to advertise Canada and her attractions by their courtesies to the press associations throughout the American Continent, by bringing them to this country, than any other factor, and the results that have accrued through the many articles that have appeared in the leading newspapers throughout the continent have been exemplified by the large influx of tourists and travellers to Ontario and Quebec during the past few years. The Michigan Press Association are an influential body of journalists, who will, no doubt, tell their readers all about the attractive features which we can offer them on this side of the international boundary.

RUSSIAN FLEET WAS SEVEN MONTHS ON ITS VOYAGE FROM REVAL

It Was Thought Baltic Squadrons Could Arrive Before Port Arthur Had Fallen—Incidents of the Trip.

It was in October, more than seven months ago, that the Russian fleet of seven battleships, twelve cruisers and thirty-six torpedo boat destroyers, besides colliers and supply ships, left the port of Reval to take their slow course down the Baltic on the way to meet the victorious armada of Japan under Togo.

Rojestvensky's start was made before the fall of Port Arthur. It was expected in Russia that the warships would reach Port Arthur in time to prevent that catastrophe. That it would consume more than seven months was not even thought of in St. Petersburg, where great results were looked for from the total collection of warships, representing a naval power one-fifth greater than that of Japan.

STIRRING TRIP TO EAST.

Many stirring incidents were crowded into the seven months of Rojestvensky's progress. His trip through the North Sea was signalized by his firing on the British fishing fleet of sixty vessels, which he supposed was a squadron of torpedo boats, which, it had been reported, Japan had purchased in England. One of the boats was sunk, a number crippled and some of the crews killed and wounded.

Great Britain was prompt in demanding reparation. Russia was by no means quick to grant it, and a crisis wes only averted by a court of arbitration which met in Paris and decided against Russia. The damages were paid.

Meantime part of the fleet had been detained at Cherbourg, for it looked for a time as if all the Czar's warships would be needed to protect the Russian coast against the English.

The fleet was later divided at Cherbourg, Rojestvensky proceeding around the Cape of Good Hope with most of the vessels and sending the others through the Mediterranean, the Suez Canal and the Red Sea to the Indian Ocean. The fleets were reunited off Madagascar and after another long delay to make repairs, caused by storms at sea and to coal up and take on provisions, the great array of warships proceeded for Singapore, the first squadron passing that point on April 8th.

In the meantime Russia had sent a vast amount of material for repairing ships and many dockyard employes to Vladivostok, in anticipation of the naval battle for which the entire world waited from the time it was known that Rojestvensky's fleet had actually entered the China seas. But every one of Rojestvensky's ships was weighted down with barnacles and seaweed. In many cases the growths on the bottom plates of the ships was more than two yards in length. This was especially true of the warships. The vessels were in no condition to manoeuvre in a sea fight, and the Russian Admiral knew it.

MYSTERY IN TOGO'S PLANS.

Then, too, he did not know where the Japanese fleet was. He had no inkling apparently of what the wily Japanese Admiral had been doing or how he was preparing to meet the last hope of the Czar at sea. The whereabouts of the Japanese warships was a mystery to the entire world about this time, but it was shrewdly suspected that Togo managed to get the under bodies of some if not all of his ships cleared of sea growths.

The disappearance of the Japanese fleet dated from March 19, and on April 19, just one month later and eleven days after Rojestvensky's warships passed Singapore, three of the Japanese warships were seen off Formosa, and word was received that the Mikado had ordered Togo to advance and give battle.

On that day, too, it was learned that the Russian warships, so far from seeking battle of their Japanese foes, after passing Singapore, had headed straight for Saigon, in French Cochin-China, and had anchored in Kamranh Bay. Japan had protested to France that they had been there beyond the time limit. Matters were hearing a crisis in this regard when, on April 22, the Czar cabled to Rojestvensky, ordering him to sail. The Russian fleet left Kamranh Bay at once, but returned there a week later to await Rear-Admiral Nebogatoff with the second squadron.

Vice-Admiral Togo had in the meantime begun a systematic campaign in cutting off the Russian's coal supply. He captured and sunk a number of Russian colliers.

Nebogatoff arrived off Saigon on May 19, according to advices, and on May 18, it was reported that Russia's reunited squadrons had departed from the coast of Annam to meet the Japanese. Togo's ships were then said to be awaiting battle off Formosa.

TOGO CHOSE BATTLEGROUND.

Japanese Admiral Forced the Fighting at Point Selected in Advance.

No better battlefield could have been desired by a Japanese naval commander than that where the victory of Tsushima was won by Admiral Togo. The Japanese fleet was in its home waters with its chief bases close behind it.

off the coasts of Corea and Japan, respectively, lie the islands of Quelpart and Goto. Both are of volcanic origin, having conspicuous mountain heights, from which ships can be descried far out to sea. There are nine principal islands in the Goto group, which run for fifty miles in a northwesterly direction, and which the Russian ships would keep well away from, owing to the dangerous channels adjacent.

Togo's scouts, already informed by wireless messages of the approach of Rojestvensky's fleet, saw the advancing vessels on Saturday morning and Togo set his fleet in motion to accept the desperate challenge. The western channel of the Corean Strait is known as the Broughton Channel, the eastern as the Krusenstern. It is not as yet clear whether Kojestvensky kept his two columns together, but the fight went on along the forty of fifty miles of the channel along the coast of the Tsushima.

There had been heavy fog, but the mists lifted and bright sunshine prevailed. From April to June northerly and northeasterly winds generally blow with occasional southwest winds and calms. The southwest winds bring moderate and fine weather. On the west coast of Japan fogs, though not so prevalent as on the east coast, occur during the summer months, increasing in frequency and density as Tsugara Strait is approached. These fogs begin early in May, but are likely to be met with at any time. Typhoons generally occur from July to October. Along the coast the fogs form in detached banks and it is often clear within a mile or two of the land when it is very thick further off shore.

Saturday's battle was all in favor of

TORPEDO BOATS AND BATTLESHIPS MUST ACT IN CONJUNCTION

This Is the Great Lesson Which Naval Attaches Draw From the Method of Togo's Victory Over Rojestvensky.

Washington, June 3.—What part, if any, was played by submarine torpedo boats in Togo's attack on the Russian fleet is not known in Washington. No official despatches either to the United States Government or the Japanese Embassy throw light on this question, which is of immense importance, because the war is the only one which has been fought since submarines reached their present stage of high development.

It is known to the Navy Department that the Japanese Government has at least a dozen submarines. Most of these are of the Holland type, and were built in this country and shipped to Japan less than a year ago. Commander Takeshita, Naval Attache of the Japanese Legation, said that he did not know whether submarines had been used. He was disposed to doubt it, remarking that they were ill-adapted to use with a fleet which was rapidly changing position. Whether Togo had submarines with his fleet he is not informed.

American naval officers express the opinion that the Japanese, did they desire to use submarines, could do so to better advantage in the narrow straits where the battle was fought than anywhere else. Submarines fire the same size torpedo as surface torpedo craft. The criticism has been made of most submarines already built that they are unable to operate in any kind of a seaway. If this be true it is thought unlikely that they proved effective during this battle.

"Torpedo boats vs. battleships," has been an issue of recent years.

Although neither official nor press despatches throw much light on the way in which the Russian ships were sunk, officers incline mostly to the idea that they were finally sent to the bottom by torpedo fire, but that this did not prove effective until gunfire from the Japanese fleet had swept away the quick firing guns relied upon to stand off torpedo boats.

With the rapid fire batteries of the enemy out of action, it is supposed the Japanese torpedo craft were able effectively to torpedo the Russian ships. It is thought altogether unlikely that the fire even of the largest guns sank the Russian ships. Naval officers recognize in this a convincing demonstration of the value of torpedo boats, but they say also that without battleships to cover the torpedo boats their attack could not be nearly so effective.

In view of what has been learned of the battle, the most prominent naval officers think that the policy of building both battleships and torpedo craft mainly by these small craft, and that Admiral Togo's bigger ships did not participate until after the victory was won.

I am convinced that when the final reports come in it will be shown that the Japanese used their submarine boats with great effect. We have a fleet of seventeen of these boats, and the battleground was just the place for their use. The water is shoal there and the channel is filled with islets through which a submarine could thread its way unobserved.

You will remember that a few months ago there was widespread talk that torpedo boats were useless. Japan has always thought differently. The average European officer wants to command a battle ship or a cruiser, because it is a bigger boat, and they look with indifference or contempt on the little destroyer. But the torpedo boat gives the Japanese man the chance that he wants. He is willing to risk his life, and he is essentially cool in the midst of the most terrific fighting. So when he took his life in his hands and went against the big Russian battleships and cruisers in the Corean Strait, he exulted in the work before him. The result justifies the money and the time that the Japanese Government has spent building torpedo boats, for by the time the Russian fleet had finished with them the battle was over to all intents and purposes.

What I am puzzled over is the whereabouts of Admiral Uriu, with his flying squadron of fast cruisers. They may be almost anywhere for all that the world knows, for the Japanese Government is very secret regarding them.

Finally, one word should be said regarding what you call team work. It is not only the man behind the gun who is winning the fight for Japan, it is also the perfect team work to which they have been trained.

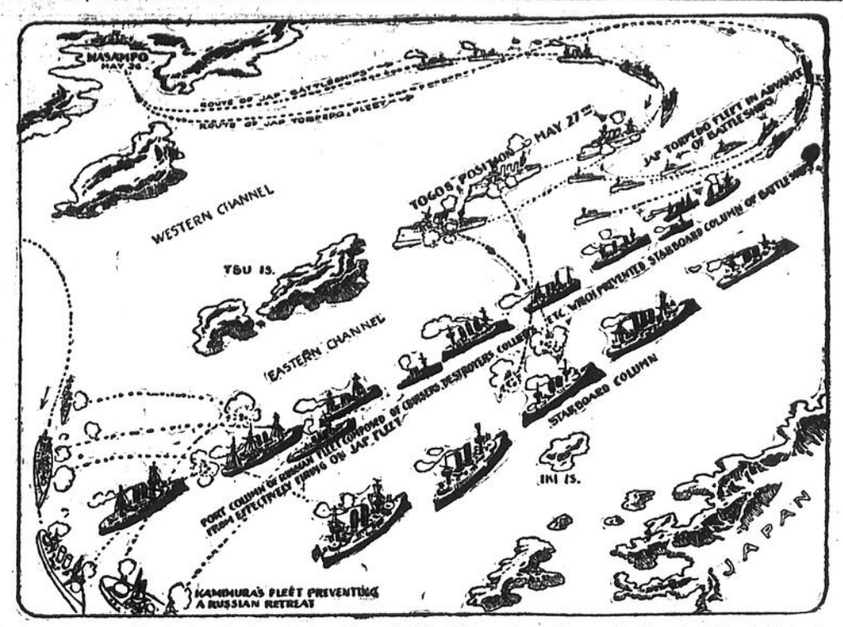
FAITH IN TORPEDO BOATS.

Lieutenant Unno, of Japanese Navy, Discusses Togo's Victory.

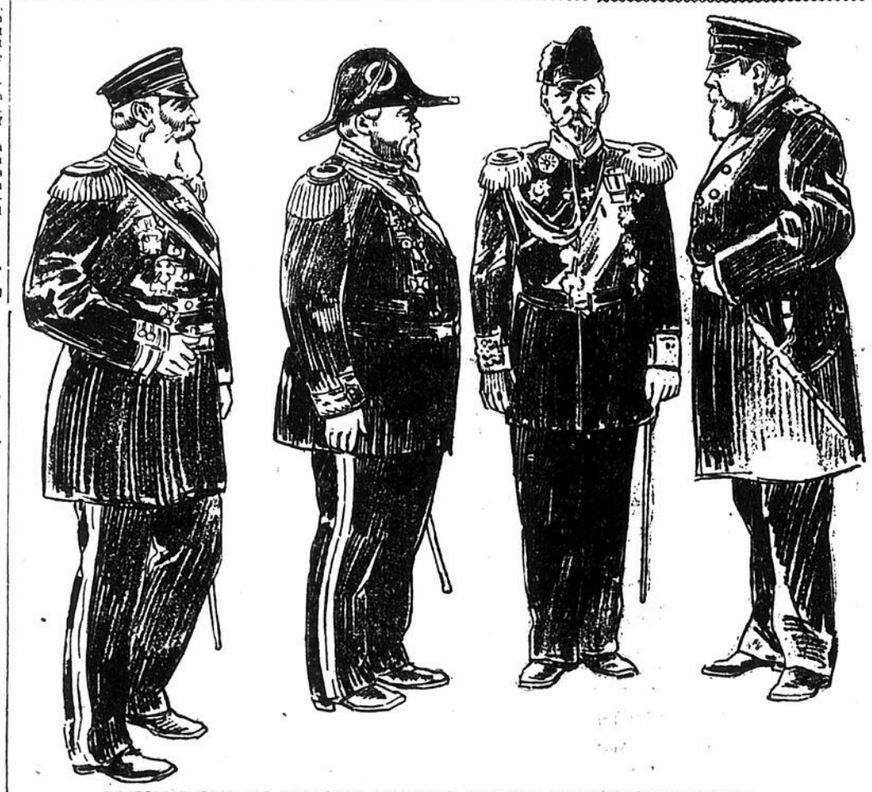
Lieut. P. K. Unno, a Japanese naval officer, attached to the U. S. navy yard at Brooklyn for instruction, made the following statement after reading the story of Togo's victory:

The Japanese victory is a vindication of their faith in torpedo boats. From the despatches it appears certain that the battle was fought on our side has been a wise one. There is little doubt expressed that the lessons of this battle will give an impetus to torpedo tactics.

The United States list has fifty-seven torpedo boat destroyers, torpedo boats and submarines. The Japanese had in the Straits of Corea probably one hundred torpedo craft.



Togo's master move lay in steaming to attack on the port side of the cruiser column. He thus had the lightest of the Russian ships between him and Rojestvensky's heavier vessels, and while he was enabled with his big guns to reach the double target of cruisers and battleships, the Russian Admiral's free firing was smothered by the line of his own vessels.



ROJESTVENSKY, HIS TWO VICE-ADMIRALS, AND THE MINISTER OF THE NAVY.

MAP OF THE BATTLE OF THE SEA OF JAPAN.

THE BATTLE OF TRAFALGAR RECALLED BY TOGO'S RECENT GREAT VICTORY

"He leads: we hear our seaman's call
In the roll of battles won;
For he is Britain's Admiral
Till setting of her sun."

That Trafalgar was a great British victory, won by splendid seamanship and by magnificent courage, everybody knows. The great Japanese victory over Russia recalls Britain's own great decisive naval fight, that one may contrast the old with the new. On October 21, 1805, Nelson, with twenty-seven line-of-battleships, attacked Villeneuve, in command of a combined fleet of thirty-three line-of-battle ships. The first British gun was fired ten minutes after noon; at five o'clock the battle was over; and within those five hours the combined fleets of France and Spain were simply destroyed. No fewer than eighteen ships of the line were captured, burnt or sunk; the rest were in flight, and had practically ceased to exist as a fighting force.

But what very few people realize is that Trafalgar is only the last incident in a great strategic conflict—a warfare of brains rather than of bullets—which for nearly three years raged round a single point. For that long period the warlike genius of Napoleon was pitted in strategy against the skill and foresight of a cluster of British sailors; and the sailors won. They beat Napoleon at his own weapons. The strategy which preceded Trafalgar represents Napoleon's solitary attempt to plan a great campaign on the tossing floor of the sea, and it is a marvelous fact that a cluster of British sailors guessed all Napoleon's profound and carefully hidden strategy and met it by even subtler plans and swifter resolves than those of Napoleon himself.

When, in 1803, the war which brought to an end the brief peace of Amiens, broke out, Napoleon framed a definite, formidable and profound plan for the invasion of England. Fifteen millions of people, he argued, must give way to forty millions.

So he formed the vast camp at Boulogne, where he gathered 130,000 veterans and, with his flotilla of 1,000 boats for their transportation, powerful batteries mounted to protect them and the men drilled into embarking and disembarking to such an extent that the whole process could be counted by minutes, Napoleon thought that to be master of the Straits for six hours, would make him master of the world. Imagine the possibilities of "the most brilliant soldiery of all time" led by a military genius of the first order!

ENGLAND'S SAFEGUARD.

But England was guarded by the "streak of silver sea" and the skill and energy of the British navy were taxed to the utmost to prevent Napoleon from gaining for the briefest possible time the command of the Channel.

Thus, though France had a great fleet, it was scattered and held imprisoned in fragments in widely separated ports by Nelson, Pellew, Cornwallis, and Collingwood. The hardship of their long sea watches was terrible, but it was those iron blockades that in the long run thwarted the plans of Napoleon and changed the fate of the world.

Having tried in vain to release his ships from the perpetual check in which they were held by the British admirals, who guessed the plans of their opponent, Napoleon had the tide of fortune turn for a while in his favor by the outbreak of hostilities between England and Spain, which made the latter an ally of the French. In a clever manoeuvring of the fleets which followed their escape from the British blockade, a bold and successful attempt was made by Villeneuve to effect a junction with the squadron in Ferrol. Had it been met by Sir Robert Calder, as the Admiralty intended, when they sent him west of Finisterre, right in Villeneuve's track, Trafalgar might have been fought four months before. But, a month afterwards, when Villeneuve had his choice between Brest, with Boulogne beyond, and where Napoleon was watching eagerly for the white topsails of his fleet; and Cadiz, where Collingwood, with a tiny squadron, held the Spanish fleet bottled up, the French Admiral's nerve failed him when he knew that Cornwallis was laying across his track to Boulogne. On August 21, he swung round and bore up for Cadiz, and with the turn of the helm which swung Villeneuve's ships away from Boulogne, Napoleon's last chance of invading England vanished.

Villeneuve pushed Collingwood's tiny squadron aside and entered Cadiz, where forty ships of the line were riding at anchor while Collingwood, with delightful coolness, solemnly resumed the blockade with four ships.

Thwarted in his design, Napoleon, with swift and terrible decision, turned away from the shores of Albion and launched his troops on the road which led to Austerlitz and Jena, and beyond to the flames of Moscow and the snows of the great retreat, and which finally led the general, himself, to St. Helena.

Villeneuve's great fleet meanwhile lay idle at Cadiz, till on October 20 the ill-fated French Admiral led his ships out to meet Nelson in his last great sea-fight.

NIGHT BEFORE BATTLE.

The night of October 20, 1805, was moonless and black. In the narrow waters of the Strait of Gibraltar Nelson kept his frigates signalling Villeneuve's movements, while the main body of his fleet was west of Cape St. Mary. He allowed some false news as to his strength to leak through to the French Admiral, who, under the impression that he had an inferior British force to engage, ventured out of Cadiz. Nelson would not alarm his foe by making too early an appearance over the sky line, but held aloof until Villeneuve was too far from Cadiz to make a dash back to it and safety. All through the night of the 20th Villeneuve's procession of phantoms were dimly visible against the Spanish coast and British frigates sent the news in alternate pulses of sound and flame to

ADMIRAL LORD NELSON.

The morning of the 21st broke misty, yet bright, and the two fleets were at last in sight of each other. Villeneuve's ships stretched a waving and slightly curved line running north and south with no regularity of order. The British fleet in two compact and parallel columns, half a mile apart, came majestically from the west. Villeneuve, with a tactician's brain, laid an admirable battle plan, and in his general order just before the battle, explained that the enemy would attack in column and the French would meet it in close line of battle.

Nelson's plan was simple and daring. The order of sailing was to be the order of battle, Collingwood leading one column and he the other, in such wise that the enemy's lines would be pierced at points which would leave some twelve of their ships to be crushed between the two British lines. Nelson gave minute instructions on scores of details which included the capture of the French commander-in-chief, so confident was he of victory.

At noon the two huge fleets were slowly approaching each other; the British columns compact, grim, orderly; the Franco-Spanish line loose, but magnificently picturesque, which prompted the remark of a British tar, who was surveying the scene from an open port, "What a fine sight, Bill, yon ships would make at Spithead!"

Collingwood led the lee division and began the mighty drama. With the Royal Sovereign he broke through the French line and sustained its fire for full twenty minutes before the Belleisle could fire a gun for his help. The fire of the enemy, like so many spokes of flame converging to a centre, broke upon him. But in silence his great ship moved ahead to a gap in the line between the Santa Anna and the Neptune. As the bowsprit of the Royal Sovereign slowly glided past the stern of the Santa Anna, Collingwood cut his studding-sails loose, as Nelson ordered, and they fell a cloud of white canvas, into the water. Then, as the broadside of the Royal Sovereign fairly covered the stern of the Santa Anna, Collingwood spoke. He poured with deadly aim and suddenness a broadside into the Spaniard's stern, which spread death and destruction in every quarter and wrecked the vessel. Then turning his attention to the Neptune, he swept her decks with his guns again and again.

A STORM OF SHELLS.

But Collingwood was in the heart of a volcano. No fewer than five of the Spaniards were emptying their guns upon the Royal Sovereign at one time. Ship after ship of Collingwood's column came steadily up and the roar of battle deepened as in quick-following crashes each new line-of-battle ship broke into the thunder of broadsides. Nelson had given his last orders as he steered the weather column a trifle to the northward to head off the enemy towards Cadiz. As he paced the quarter deck of the Victory with the signal "Engage the enemy closely," it bethought him to give the fleet something of a fillip, and then went up the immortal signal, "England expects every man to do his duty."

Nelson then at the head of his column made straight for the flagship of the enemy. A shot tore a rent through the upper canvas of the Victory. An awful silence followed. Slowly the Victory drifted on her path and then no fewer than eight of the great ships against which she was moving broke into such a tempest of shot as perhaps never before was poured on a single ship. Still the Victory drifted majestically on her fiery path without an answering gun.

The irregularity of the French ships made "cutting" the line difficult; and as Nelson could not pick out the French flagship he said to Hardy: "Take your choice, go on board which you please." At one o'clock the Victory moved slowly past the stern of the Bucentaure and a 68-pounder was fired into the cabin windows of the French flagship. The Victory then engaged the Redoutable. With her lower deck guns actually touching the side of the Redoutable, the Victory kept them in full and quick action and finally rendered her helpless. In the meantime the Bucentaure and the gigantic Santissima Trinidad thundered on the British flagship.

The tempest of sound and flame was fiercer around the two ships that carried the flags of Nelson and Collingwood. The finest bit of heroism in the heroic fight was shown by the Redoutable, only 35 of her crew living to see England as prisoners, and it was due to the venomous and deadly fire from the tops of that vessel that Nelson owed his death.

By five o'clock the roar of guns had died almost into silence. Of thirty-three ships of the Franco-Spanish fleet one was burnt, seventeen captured, as mere blood-stained hulks, and fifteen were in flight, while Villeneuve was a prisoner. But Nelson was dead.

FIRST TURBINE BATTLESHIPS.

British Government Asks for Tenders for Two New Vessels.

The British naval authorities, having concluded elaborate experiments with turbines, have decided to adopt them for a new battleship which is to be built.

Hitherto turbines in war craft have been confined to torpedo vessels, and the decision of the Lords of the Admiralty to apply them to a battleship is a big step forward. However, experts declare that they now know enough to justify full confidence in the step.

The Clyde yards on the navy list have been asked to tender for the turbines for the battleship. Their power will be 23,000 horse-power, which is indicative that the battleship will be not only the speediest, but the largest in the world. The engineers will follow the same method adopted with such success in the cruiser Amethyst, with the exception that there will be four shafts, each with one propeller, instead of three sets, as in the first case. There will be separate small turbines for speed.

The engineers have received the schedules, and are to have them returned by June 14, as the battleship is to be constructed with all possible speed.

Was Struck by Travelling Crane.

Joseph Gingras, living in Lagauchetiere street, was struck on the side of the head by a travelling crane while he was at work at 186 Hutchison st. He narrowly escaped being killed into the Spaniard's stern, which spread death and destruction in every quarter and wrecked the vessel. Then turning his attention to the Neptune, he swept

BRITISH ARMY SHORT OF OFFICERS

Causing Serious Misgivings Among Those in Authority.

SOME OF THE CHIEF CAUSES

Special Cable to the Montreal Star.

London, June 3.—The military forces of the Crown are by the latest computation 4,000 officers short of the requirements as laid down in the army and auxiliary establishment for 1905-6.

This serious shortage combined with the fact that resignations are still as numerous as ever, is causing considerable misgiving in the minds of the authorities, and conferences are now taking place at the war office under the director of staff duties and other officials, the object of which is to find a remedy for the situation.

The bankruptcy of an officer recently has shown the futility of subalterns attempting to meet their expenses out of pay. The decision of the army council that this officer should resign has spread alarm through the subaltern ranks for numbers of young officers are heavily in debt to tradesmen or in the hands of money lenders.

In spite of the smallness of his pay the officer is burdened on every hand with expenses for mess, band, regimental clubs, servants and social items.

The changes in uniform absorb an abnormal amount of his pay. First it is a new undress then a new full dress alteration, a change in head gear or an overcoat a new pattern sword or field service dress.

At Sandhurst recently the cadets had changes of headdress involving the possession by each cadet of no fewer than five caps, none of which are of any use after passing to a regiment. The cost of altering cadet kips to regimental pattern involves an outlay of from $100 to $150.

A MASSACRE IN SUMATRA.

It Occured in April When Women and Children Were Burned to Death.

Special Cable to the Montreal Star.

Amsterdam, June 3.—The Telegraff publishes a vivid account of the massacre of women and children by a Dutch force at the village of Batoe-Batoe in Sumatra last April.

The affair created a great stir when the news first reached Europe. The official explanation was that the killing of the women and children was unavoidable as the warriors pushed them to the front and used them as shields.

M. Wybrands, editor of the News of the Day of the Dutch Indies, published at Batavia, who has carefully investigated the facts in the case, sends to the Telegraff a detailed account of the tragedy. This shows that the village was first set on fire by the troops.

"The people could not escape," he says, "because of the fire (started at one end with petroleum by the besiegers) which spread and prevented them doing so. Upon their leaving at the other end, the deadly lead of our men met them. And what that deadly lead could not accomplish was completed by the fire. Batoe-Batoe is burnt with almost all the inhabitants.

"The wounded shared the fate of those killed by the bullets, for they were roasted or suffocated in the flames."

SCHEME FOR BETTERMENT OF ARTISTS' CONDITION.

Special Cable to the Montreal Star.

Paris, June 3.—Millet died poor, leaving his family in straightened circumstances, and his famous "Angelus," which had brought him in a few pounds, was sold after his death for thousands, dealers, of course, pocketing the profits. Maitre Jose Thery, a barrister, recalling this incident, is starting an agitation to obtain for artists some right equivalent to literary copyright. He proposes to form an association on the lines of the Authors' Society. On the first sale of the picture the artist would furnish all information regarding his work. Thus a record of the canvas would be preserved. At each sale the society, if the picture's market value increased, would claim one-half of the artist's or his heirs as a royalty, a percentage of the excess of the last over the previous price paid. Artistic copyright would be guaranteed by law for sixty years. At the same time the society's records would furnish warranties for the genuineness of a work of art. Every buyer would find it to his advantage to insist upon seeing the "pedigree" of a picture before purchasing it. Had some such society been in existence formerly, Maitre Thery points out, the market would not, as it is now, be deluged with sham Corots to menton only the artist whose work has been most copiously forged.

TWO IRRIGATION SCHEMES.

Special Cable From a Montreal Star Correspondent.

London, June 3.—The Secretary of State for India has sanctioned two important irrigation schemes in accordance with the policy recommended by Sir Colin Scott-Moncrieff's commission. The first of these schemes is the irrigation at a cost of 18 1-2 laks of rupees of Divi Island at the mouth of the Kistna River, in the Madras Presidency. Water is to be raised from the river by the means of centrifugal pumps driven by Diesel oil engines. The area of land to be fertilized is 50,000 acres, and the net revenue anticipated will be equivalent to 9 1-2 per cent. on the total capital outlay. The other scheme sanctioned is of a "protective" rather than a "productive" character. At a cost of over forty laks of rupees a canal is to be constructed from the Dassan River in the Hamirpur district of the United Provinces, a distance of 20 1-2 miles, with branches to Jalalpur and Mandha, 28 1-2 and 14 1-2 miles respectively in length, and with a system of tributaries, whose total length is estimated at 210 miles. The canals will protect a huge tract of country very liable to drought. Commanding a sufficient area of 326,000 acres, they are expected to provide sufficient water to irrigate 57,000 acres in ordinary seasons, and about 73,000 acres in years of deficient rainfall. The estimated net revenue will yield a return on the capital of from two to six per cent.

NEW SOURCE OF SUPPLY FOR THE WORLD'S COAL.

Special Cable to the Montreal Star.

London, June 3.—Lord Ranfurly, who of all of the leaders of thought and action in the British Empire is best posted upon the Australian colonies, announces a new source of supply for the world's coal. He says that the New Zealand balance of trade is a large one on the right side, and that it gives promise of becoming even greater in the near future. He says that the coal worked at the Westport collieries on the west coast of South Island is for naval purposes little inferior to Welsh or Cardiff coal. In case of an emergency a supply obtained at this the most distant coal port in His Majesty's dominions must be of very great importance. For some time colliers had been engaged in carrying coal for the use of His Majesty's ships on the China Station.

BUBONIC PLAGUE IN SCOTLAND.

Special Cable From a Montreal Star Correspondent.

Leith, June 3.—Bubonic plague, about which little has been heard of in the last year has broken out here. One man, a rag-picker named Hughes, has died. Fully twenty-five persons who lived in the same house have been removed and the place has been thoroughly disinfected.

Hughes was attacked by the disease after sorting rags which came off a foreign ship. His wife, who worked by his side and who is now lying ill at the Isolation Hospital, her two children by her side equally sick, declares that she saw a number of rats running about among the rags. Some serum which was taken from the body of Hughes has been examined by three specialists, and these doctors are unanimous in pronouncing the disease bubonic plague. The tenement house in which Hughes lived was in the most densely populated portion of Leith. The house has been not only renovated but closed and the inhabitants of the adjoining buildings are being kept under strict medical observation. It is generally believed that the disease was brought to Leith by rats, the port authorities have employed a number of rat-catchers with instructions to rid the place of the vermin regardless of cost.

A gigantic lily, the phormium tenax, is a valuable plant peculiar to New Zealand. Its leaves are nine or ten feet long, and are so tough that, by splitting one into narrow ribbons and joining the ends, the New Zealender has a first-class rope ready to hand.

is a pure, scientifically made soap, which washes linens perfectly white without the least discoloration or injury to the fabric.

KING OF ILESHA DEPORTED.

He Showed Want of Respect for British Authority.

Special Cable to the Montreal Star.

Zambesi, June 3.—The King of Ilesha has been deported by Mr. Walter Egerton, high commissioner of Southern Nigeria, for showing a want of respect for British authority.

According to news brought from Lagos there was consternation among the chiefs and the people when it was known that their King was to be removed.

Mr. Egerton somewhat allayed their alarm by announcing that the King's absence was only for two months, after which period he would be returned to Ilesha. For two days the chiefs sat with their ruler in his palace to console him.

Then the King in full robes set out with Mr. Egerton. His chiefs and some 200 of his followers accompanied him for two days, when they were ordered by the British to return home.

This they did and no disturbance took place. It is believed that the lesson taught the King will have a salutary effect.

WAR IN LONDON ON THE FOREIGN WAITER.

Special Cable to the Montreal Star.

London, June 3.—War on the foreign waiter is being urged in London. The Hon. Claude Hay, M.P., who is president of the City and National Waiters' Bureau, in an interview this week stated that the bureau he represents does not object to competent foreign waiters coming to England, but it does object to the thousands of untrained young men, many of them of doubtful character, who come to this country to work for very low wages or no wages at all in hotels and restaurants, the sole idea being to learn English.

"You would hardly believe," he added "what a hold the foreign waiter has in London, and it has come about almost solely through the Geneva Union, an organization which ramifies all over the continent, its object being to distribute over the various European countries, all grades of men serving in the public catering, with a view to their learning languages, and thereby rising in their profession.

"They take little or nothing in wages, and consequently oust the British waiter. When they have learned English they go back to their own countries and become prosperous.

"As to the character of these foreigners, I have found cell after cell in London and the South of England tenanted by them because of their stealing propensities.

"It is a mistake to suppose that the British waiter is incompetent and slovenly. I can say on behalf of the London society that it prefers British waiters."

TEN YEARS IN PRISON; HAS CURE FOR LEPROSY.

Special Cable to the Montreal Star.

Lisbon, June 3. — After ten years' imprisonment in the great penitentiary here, following a conviction for poisoning, Dr. Urbino de Freitas, one of the most distinguished of European physicians, has had his sentence of twenty-five years commuted by King Carlos to simple banishment from Portugal.

Throughout his long confinement the Doctor is said to have jealously guarded a secret which he has discovered, an assured cure for leprosy. Accompanied by his devoted wife, he has gone to Paris.

When the Doctor was first arrested Lisbon society received a shock. The charges against him were to the effect that he had poisoned five little sisters and brothers of his wife, relatives who stood between him and a large fortune. The evidence against Dr. de Freitas was mostly circumstantial, but a number of incidents related by witnesses and the obvious interest he had in the death of the children convinced the jury of his guilt.

POLITICIAN GOES TO THE PEN.

Was a Prominent Man in Australia for Twenty-five Years.

Special Cable to the Montreal Star.

Sydney, June 3.—The Hon. T. M. Slattery, member of the New South Wales Parliament has been sentenced to three and one half years' imprisonment. He asked that full penalty be imposed, adding that he had asked for no mercy and that he despised the recommendation of mercy from the jury.

It was claimed that he had converted to his own use about $35,000 belonging to Mrs. Mary Ellen Scanlon. As for Mrs. Scanlon, her own career had in it the elements of a romance. She had lived for many years in dire poverty and was on the point of going to the poor house when it was discovered that she was one of the next of kin of James Tyson, the great Australian millionaire. From his enormous estate she inherited nearly $450,000. Some of this was entrusted to Slattery to invest and he fraudulently appropriated a considerable portion of it to make good heavy betting losses.

Justice Pring, in passing sentence said that betting was responsible for more crimes than any other vice that he knew of. He hoped that one of the results of the shock of the conviction would be to send such a feeling of indignation against betting throughout the entire community that anything of this sort would be checked in the future.

The trial created a great sensation throughout Australia, for Slattery had been prominent in politics in New South Wales for over twenty-five years. He was on three different occasions Minister of Justice, was Minister of Mines in Sir George Dibbs' administration, and he had served as Chairman of the Committees of the Legislative Assembly and Acting-Speaker. He was also one of the thirteen centenary commissioners for the celebrations of New South Wales.

EXPERIMENTS IN MOUNTAINEERING.

Special Cable to the Montreal Star.

Geneva, June 3.—Some sensational experiments were undertaken this week on Mount Saleve, near Geneva, by members of the Geneva Mountaineering Society and the Collonges Mountain Life-Saving Society, with a view to rendering prompt aid in case of mountain accidents.

The mountaineers raised and lowered each other from the most difficult and dangerous positions by means of new appliances for aiding the victims of climbing accidents.

HAPPY DAYS FOR BABY.

The healthy child is a happy child. All its little troubles vanish when it is digesting its food well and is free from childish ailments. The greater part of these ailments arise from stomach and bowel troubles, feverishness, teething and worms. Baby's Own Tablets act like magic in these cases, and when children are restless at night they always give sound refreshing sleep. Mrs. A. LePage, St. Florence, Que., says: "Baby's Own Tablets had marvellous results in the case of my two months' old baby. He was nervous, troubled with colic and badly constipated, but after giving the Tablets he began to improve at once and is now in good health. I also gave the Tablets to my three-year-old boy, who was troubled with worms, and they cured him as well. Both children are now the picture of health, and I am always praising the Tablets to my friends." You can get Baby's Own Tablets from any druggist or direct by mail at 25 cents a box by writing the Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

A WONDERFUL DISCOVERY.

This is the age of research and experiment, when all nature, so to speak, is ransacked by the scientific for the comfort and happiness of man. Science has indeed made giant strides during the past century, and among the—by no means least important—discoveries in medicine comes that of

THERAPION.

This preparation is unquestionably one of the most genuine and reliable Patent Medicines ever introduced, and has, we understand, been used in the Continental Hospitals by Ricord, Rostan, Jobert, Velpeau, Maisonneuve, the well-known Chassaignac, and indeed by all who are regarded as authorities in such matters, including the celebrated Lallemand, and Roux, by whom it was some time since uniformly adopted, and that it is worthy the attention of those who require such a remedy we think there is no doubt. From the time of Aristotle downwards, a potent agent in the removal of these diseases has, like the famed philosopher's stone) been the object of search of some hopeful, generous minds; and far beyond the mere power—if such could ever have been discovered—of transmuting the baser metals into gold is surely the discovery of a remedy so potent as to replenish the failing energies of the confirmed roué in the one case, and in the other so effectually, speedily and safely to expel from the system without the aid, or even the knowledge, of a second party, the poisons of acquired or inherited disease in all their protean forms as to leave no taint or trace behind. Such is which may certainly rank with, if not take precedence of, many of the discoveries of our day, about which no little ostentation and noise has been made, and the extensive and ever-increasing demand that has been created for this medicine wherever introduced appears to prove that it is destined to cast into oblivion all those questionable remedies that were formerly the sole reliance of medical men. Therapion may be obtained of the principal chemists and merchants throughout the world.—Diamond Fields Advertiser, KIMBERLEY.

THE NEW FRENCH REMEDY

PHYSICAL COURSE GIVEN.

A Move for the Betterment of the British Soldier's Physique.

Special Cable From a Montreal Star Correspondent.

London, June 3.—An army order has been issued that all cavalry and artillery recruits shall undergo a twelve weeks' course of physical training. It is calculated that this training, combined with good food and rational recreation will bring a recruit of ordinary physique into a condition in which he will be fit to begin his special training. The physical training course will consist of four drills daily of not more than an hour's duration, and a modified course of gymnastics. After the day's work is over the recruit can go where he pleases. There will be no drills on Saturdays, and passes from Friday afternoon until Sunday night will be given freely to men of good character. The recruits will be medically examined and remeasured at the end of twelve weeks. If he is found unfit, he will be discharged at once as not likely to become an efficient soldier. If, on the other hand, he is fit, he will be sent to the riding school for ten months' training. He will then undergo training in the various duties of the cavalryman, and at the end of three years he will be one of the finished "eyes and ears of the army."

There is only one absolutely certain way to get new health and strength, and that is through the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. These Pills make new, rich, red blood, strengthen the nerves and bring health, strength and happiness to those who use them. Mr. D. W. Before using them I was weak and nervous; my blood was poor; I was pale and suffered from pains in the region of the heart. Now after the use of eight boxes of the pills my nerves are strong; my blood is pure and rich; I have a good color and my heart action is regular. I think there is no medicine can equal Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for these troubles."

HERE IS A CURE FOR

Sleeplessness

Weak, Listless, Sleepless Men and Women Cured Every Day by Dr. Hamilton's Pills.

The physical suffering and mental anguish that victims of sleeplessness endure is indeed a sad story. But in Dr. Hamilton's Pills there is swift relief from this awful condition. Thousands have proved the merit of this grand medicine, among them Mrs. G. T. Lyons, one of the best known residents of Geneva, who writes: "My health ran down and I was unable to sleep. I had headache and pains in different parts of my body. In the morning I was weary and exhausted—no rest or comfort came from the snatches of sleep I got.

"No medicine I ever used gave such telling results as Dr. Hamilton's Mandrake and Butternut Pills."

Don't let sleeplessness drive you crazy; take Dr. Hamilton's Pills and get well. You will increase in flesh, your appetite will be vigorous, force and energy will be instilled into your nervous system.

By nourishing and purifying the blood and by stimulating the action of the kidneys, liver and stomach, Dr. Hamilton's Pills accomplish wonders. Try a 25c box, or five boxes for $1.00, at all dealers, or N. C. Polson & Co., Hartford, Conn., U.S.A., and Kingston, Ont.

NO REASON YOU SHOULD GIVE UP

Because Your Indigestion Has Become Chronic—Dodd's Dyspepsia Tablets Will Cure It Just the Same.

If your indigestion has turned to dyspepsia and become chronic that is no reason you should despair. Others just as bad as you have been cured by Dodd's Dyspepsia Tablets. Take the case of Mrs. James Bradley, of Smith's Cove, Digby Co., N.S. Here's what she says about it herself:

"I had dyspepsia for nine years. I tried the best doctors in the place and never found relief. I had to starve myself from eating. No tongue can tell what I suffered.

"I bought six boxes of Dodd's Dyspepsia Tablets and six boxes of Dodd's Kidney Pills, and before I had finished taking them I could eat most anything and sleep comfortably."

There is no need to comment on a statement like this. It's true. What was done for Mrs. Bradley has been done for thousands of others. Dodd's Dyspepsia Tablets will do it for you.

Home Run Haggerty's Reminiscences.

The S[illegible] Case of the Grasping Manager and the Confiding Pitcher Who Finally Squared Himself.

(Copyright and published in The Montreal Star by special arrangement.)

"A feller that takes advantage o' trusting' humanity an' then soaks him," says Pete Brown to me one night, "he ain't no good, an' he'd ought to get soaked back, good an' hard."

"It was pay day, an' Pete had just got his little envelope from the Alfalfa Baseball Club with two weeks' wages into it, an' he found that Josh had fined him $2 for not appearin' for mornin' practice on two days sence the last pay day. An' then Pete went on to tell how he, bein' a little hard to wake up, and asked Josh to call him at 9 o'clock so's he could git to the grounds by 10, an' Josh hadn't done it, an' he had slep' till noon an' met us when he was comin' home, an' he seemed to think the fines shouldn't go, an' that Josh was all to blame for him bein' late, an' he repeated, in solemn an' emphatic tones:

"'Yes, a feller that takes advantage o' trustin' humanity an' then soaks him had ought to git soaked himself—an', by Jinks, I'll do it.'

"Now, while he had been talkin' my mind had been revertin' back, an' when it had reverted back as far as Pitcher Morphus Wyatt, why I held up my hand an' says:

"'No you won't, Peter. You won't soak him at all. Josh ain't took advantage o' trustin' humanity one-half a circumstance as much as Tim McGinnis had done to him once. Did you ever heard tell o' Morphus Wyatt, the pitcher?'

"Pete, he shook his head an' says he never did, an' I took a good chew off a plug o' tobacco an' he lit a butt an' I says:

"'Josh Hapgood is a honest an' honorable gentleman alongside o' Tim McGinnis,' says I. 'An' when you talk o' takin' advantage o' trustin' humanity, why I got to jump in an' defend him.' Just to explain what I meant I told him about Morphus Wyatt. It was this way:

"The first year I played with McGinnis on the Russetvilles there wasn't nothin' could touch Morph. He was a McGinnity an' Chesbro an' Cy Young all boiled into one. He had everything—speed an' control an' regular summerset curves, an' slow ball that looked like a balloon till it got to the plate, an' then it would shrink to about the size o' a double B shot. He c'd field bunts like Jimmy Collins, an' he was the best battin' pitcher I ever see.

"Morphus only had one drawback—he was sleepy. No matter where he was, nor what was the time an' place he was willin' to curl up, lay his head down on his arm an' take a nap. Why, he'd snooze between innings, while he was on the bench, an' you'd have to poke him with a bat to git him up an' started mowin' down the enemy when three men was out.

"He was supposed to pitch every third day, an' when the game was over he'd start for the hotel an' have a big meal sent up to him, an sleep right through till dinner time the next day, layin' sprawled out like a dead man. An' then he'd git up an' git his dinner an' then go back to bed an' sleep another twenty-four hours, an' get up an' eat an' then go to bed an' sleep till the day he pitched again. He was such a good pitcher that McGinnis let him do it, for no matter what his other pitchers did, he was sure o' winnin' a game every third day when Morphus was in the box.

"An' then Morphus began to get worse. He got so he'd sleep through two days without eatin', and then pretty soon he'd go the hull stretch between the games—goin' to sleep at seven o'clock on Monday night, say, an' never liftin' a foot nor movin' a muscle till Thursday at noon—just snorin' away to beat the band. An' when the fellers'd laugh at him, he'd say:

"'Wotinell if I do sleep all the time. I ain't boozin' nor playing cards or chuckin' dice, or wearin' out shoe leather walkin' round a pool table. Sleep is a great rejuvenator an' beautifier. I wouldn't be able to pitch such good ball or look so good as I do if I didn't sleep. An' as fer snoring' my young life away, as you fellers say, I figger that the longer I sleep the longer I'll live. If I sleep two-thirds o' the time I'll live that much longer than you guys. I admit that I'm asleep, but what of that? Some o' you fellers are dead all the time.'

"An' then they'd let him alone, an' he'd turn over an' snore an' be asleep in half a minute.

"Well, everything would a-gone swimmingly only one Tuesday mornin' after Morphus had pitched on the day before, Jim Hughes an' Billy Avery, McGinnis's two other pitchers, they ran into each other runnin' for a ball an' Tim got a broken collar bone an' Billy a busted rib. An' Sammy Smelzer, the shortstop, who was sometimes put into to pitch, he fell off the sprinklin' cart we was all ridin' on to the hotel and was in no condition to go into the box. So McGinnis was in a hole. Comin' to me he says:

"'Hag,' says he, 'what'll I do? No time to get no pitcher here, no club't I can borry one from. Two pitchers in the hospital an' another gittin' ready to go there. What'll I do?' says he.

"I say there was nothin' to do but wake Morphus up an' make him pitch.' Tim shook his head.

"'He's only been asleep one day now,' says he. 'You couldn't wake him with a shinglin' hatchet,' says he. 'I know him.'

"However, about 1 o'clock, after we'd had our dinner, Tim an' me went into Morphus's room—not on tiptoes either—an' shook him an' pinched him, and battered him over the head, an' we never got a grunt out o' him. An' then big Tim Hollahan, who was once a copper in Brooklyn, he says, 'Here's the way we used to fake 'em on the last train f'm Coney,' an' he got a bat an' pulled one o' Morphus's feet out the bed an' hit him a brutal rap on the sole o' it; an' he sat up.

"'Wake up, Morph,' says Tim, cool as a iceberg. 'Time to go to the ball grounds.'

"'Thursday already?' says he.

"'Sure thing,' says Tim, never battin' a eyelash. 'Tumble into your things.'

"'Gosh, it don't seem's though I'd been to sleep more'n an hour,' says Morphus. And then he gets up an' we go to the ball grounds, an' Tim keeps him away from the reporters, who wanted to know how the great twirler felt pitshin' two straight games, an' we won. An' then we come home an' Morph went to sleep again.

"The next day Sam Smeltzer had had the sprinklin' cart fall onto him an' hurt him worse'n ever, an' so Hollahan fanned Morph again, an' agin Tim lied to him about it bein' Sunday next when it was only Wednesday, an' again he went out an' got the opposi'n batters for another victory. An' then the unholy greed o' gain come over Tim McGinnis's hull bein' an' he says to himself:

"'Fer what sh'd I fool around with a guy that goes an' boozes three or four times a month,' says he, an' with two fellers that don't know no better than go smash-bang into one another in practice,' says he, 'when I got in my stable the greatest pitchin machine that ever was trotted out? says he. 'This here sleepin' beauty o' mine, says he, 'he won't never know no difference in a year o' Sundays. I'll pitch him every durn day f'm now till the end o' October an' win every game an' the pennant, an' everything else.'

"When he told me this I says to him:

"'Tim,' says I, 'don't go too far,' says I. 'This business o' takin' advantage o' trustin' humanity ain't no good,' says I. Them was my exact words. But he disregarded 'em an' fanned Morphus's poor tired feet agin that afternoon, an' Morphus pitched and won another game.

"'An' so it went. Every day at 1 o'clock he'd wake Morphus up an' say:

"'Good gosh! Asleep three days an' not willin' to pitch!' says he. 'Git up an' git out to work,' says he. Then Morphus he'd stretch an' rub his eyes an' crawl out an' wonder what made him feel so stiff. But after he'd been warmed up he'd pitch the same winnin' ball, an' Tim 'ud rub his hands an' smile like the villian that he was.

"One day about the middle o' July, with the sun pourin' out of a cloudless sky an' us all in undershirts to keep cool, we went to wake up our prize package pitcher. He was layin' all rolled up an' bound 'round in heavy blankets an' was shiverin'.

"'Hope he ain't sick,' says Tim anxiously, as I batted him on the feet.

"'Br-r-r-r' says Morphus, when he woke up. 'Shet that winder, will you? I'm near froze.'

"Tim an' I looked at one another. 'Stead o' bein' sick the man had gone crazy.

"'Wot's the matter with you?' says Tim. 'Why, it's hot out. You're lucky to be cold a summer's day like this.'

"Summer's day eh? says Morphus. Summer's day on the 11th o' November likely.

"'Eleventh o'——' Josh was about to say somethin' when somethin' else struck his hardened sensibilities. This here trustful, slumberin' Rube had figgered it up on the basis o' his pitchin' every third day that we was in next November.

"'Br-r-r-r!' says he shiverin'. 'Wot you playin' so late fer this year, Tim?'

"'Er-er-a post season series,' says Tim. Buckle in an' win it an' you kin sleep two days—no, I mean four days—the next game you pitch.'

"'That was the beginnin' o' the end. The next day comin' from the ball ground Morphus got away from Josh, run into a store an' got them to tell him the real date. I suspected wot was up, but said nothin' to Tim. I was busy cookin' up a story to tell Morphus in case he should soak me.

"But Morph never said a word. He pitched steady for a week more, winnin' every game, an' my fears began to blow over. An' then come the Sorrelton, who were leadin' the league, an' their manager had a big roll o' money, an' he bet a thousand with Tim right off the reel, an' a hundred with me, an' more with Hollahan an' the other boys.

"Just before the game started Morphus, after warmin' up with me, calls Tim an' says:

"Mr. McGinnis. I'd like a little money this afternoon to back myself in this game. C'n you let me have a thousand o' what you owe me?'

"A thousand,' says Morphus.

"'I don't owe you no thousand dollars,' says Tim, most screamin.. Your money is in your envelopes down to the office, where you've let 'em lay.'

"Yes, I know,' says Morph, 'the last money I had was on June the third. This is November the eighteenth. Twenty-five weeks at fifty a week is $1,250. Lemme have a thousand of it quick. There's a Sorrelton feller wants to bet it right here.'

"'Wants—er—how— who —when do you want it?' Tim was so eternally flabbergasted he could't speak. The idea of a Rube that didn't know enough to do nothin' only sleep an' play ball figgerin' that a week's pay went along with every two games pitched—that the pay days mounted up the same as play days! It was a side o' the question Tim had overlooked, an' he was flabbergasted.

"Good gosh,' says he, 'a thousand dollars! I ain't got no money like that here.' Then a little thought struck him. He began to get his nerve back. 'It's down to the hotel,' says he. 'Go ahead and pitch an' you'll get your envelopes after the game.'

"'I can't pitch,' says Morphus, 'I fergot my arm. Left it down to the hotel. Send down an' git it an' bring it up an' the money too.

"'Mebbe there wasn't a pow-wow then—all hands pleadin' with Morph to go in an' win, an' him stickin' out fer his money. Finally he went into the box an' the game began. He had Tim's promise that he'd send for the money.

"Well, as usual, he fell asleep between innings, and soon he lost track o' how many had been played, an' when the eighth opened Tim told him it was the sixth. That was because the money was to be there before the eighth inning.

"Well, in our half of the eighth I put out a homer with Pinch on first, an' them two runs were all that was scored. The Sorreltons hadn't got any yet, an' when we went out for the last innin', which Morph thought was the seventh, why it looked like we'd win.

"But a durned coacher on the other side spoiled it. He sung out that it was their last chance. I saw Morph look at Tim with one of them blasted confidence looks, an' then, when he had two strikes on the first batter he began to pass up balls. After he'd pitched twelve balls a foot off the plate an' the bags was full, I walked out to the box. He waved me back.

"'Git behind your cage, you big larrupin' stiff,' says he. 'I'm pitchin' this game,' says he.

"McGinnis come runnin' out.

"'That twelve hundred an' fifty right now, or the next ball goes into the grandstand' hissed Morph.

"There wasn't nothin' else to do. Tim shelled out, an' Morph walked back to the box, ketched the man at first nappin' an' struck the next two out. Then he walked in, put on his clothes an' walked out of the grounds an' never come back.

"Before he went he says: "Twelve hundred and fifty fer eight weeks' work,' says he. 'Not so bad for a guy that sleeps all the time. I kin afford to take a rest. ' An' he did, but McGinnis said:

"'A feller that takes advantage o' trustin' humanity an' then soaks him,' says he, 'he ain't no good, an' he ought to git soaked back.' Them was his exact words. After that experience any feller named Pete Brown ain't got no kick comin' over a $2 fine for oversleepin'."

THE TOURIST SEASON.

The season for the summer tourist is at hand.

We know the gladsome genus by the confident way in which they wear other kinds of clothes, by the natural manner in which they play tricks with our familiar language, and by their frank interest in all the things which have become commonplaces with us. That some of them are critical, we know; but the vast majority of them are at least polite. If they cannot admire a thing, they can keep silent. But they do not generally feel the necessity of keeping silent.

Montreal is becoming one of the chief tourist cities of the Continent, and that is no small advantage. Tourists are holiday-makers, and holiday-makers commonly travel with loose purse-strings. Then tourists are the best advertisers in the world. When they have seen a place, they have an insatiable itch to tell their friends all about it, and they frequently succeed in infecting those who hear them with an overpowering desire to go and see too.

Those among us whose business it is to cater to tourists are fairly certain to treat them well, if for no other reason than that this brings grist to their mills. But there is no reason why all the task of entertainment be left to the professionals. The ordinary citizen often has an opportunity to turn a smiling face to an enquiring stranger, and thus to make him feel more at home. One of the things which is always a difficulty to a visitor in a new city is to find his way about, and he is always grateful for help. When he is trying to blast some information on this subject out of a busy street-car conductor, he will not be at all offended if a native sitting next him undertakes his enlightenment in a more leisurely and painstaking fashion.

There are parts of the United States where the people are wonderfully kind in this way to strangers. Nothing seems to be too much trouble for them to do to get you right. They appear to take a real and personal interest in the tourist's plans, and are quick to suggest changes and amplifications from their fuller local knowledge. A little of this spirit in Montreal would be appreciated very quickly by the stream of visitors who spend most of their time getting here and going home again, comparing notes on how they were treated by the native Montrealer.

We have, as a matter of fact, a very interesting city to show. It is doubtful whether any other city on this Continent has quite so good a combination for the sight-seer and the pleasure-seeker. We are not so "Quebecky" as Quebec; but we have a larger city and a more varied population, and more imposing buildings, and more impressive evidences of business. Then we have much more of the elements which make Quebec city a jewel for the lover of the picturesque and the historic than any other city in this part of the hemisphere, and we are on the way to Quebec.

No city can show finer neighboring drives than Montreal. None has a finer Mountain Park at its rear. Few have finer buildings. In ecclesiastical architecture we probably lead the American Continent. The approaches to Montreal are especially attractive, whether the visitor comes by way of the noble St. Lawrence and the Rapids, or by way of lovely Lake George and broad Lake Champlain, or down the Ottawa from our picturesque Capital, or up the St. Lawrence, through peaceful Quebec province, from the Citadel City. Our popularity with the summer tourist is deserved, and we can do something to increase that popularity if we take pains to regard the traveller — in some slight and unobtrusive manner our personal guests.

SMOKE AND ITS PREVENTION.

That the people of Montreal live in an atmosphere of official indifference as well as a smoky one is evidenced by the announcement in the papers that Boiler Inspector Champagne in his annual report, just issued, deals very briefly with the smoke nuisance. He is credited with saying that towards the end of the year there were fewer complaints about smoke owing to the increasing number of manufacturers who were doing all that was possible to decrease the nuisance.

It is gratifying to have an official intimation of this character from the gentleman who is charged with the enforcement of the by-law against the smoke nuisance, but the average everyday citizen may be pardoned if he holds to the opinion, gathered from his daily experience, that there remains much still to be done. Furthermore, it is not quite clear whether the fewness of the complaints toward the end of the year was due to the satisfaction of the people with the prevailing conditons or neglect on the part of the inspector. It should be remembered that, while it is the privilege of the citizen to complain of the nuisance, it is no part of his duty to do so. On the other hand it is the especial duty of the inspector to abate the nuisance in accordance with the terms of the civic by-law, which makes the emission of black smoke an offence and gives the boiler inspector the power to suppress it.

What the people want from the inspector, therfore, in his annual report, is not a brief reference to the matter, but a statement as to what he has actually done, with a view to the ultimate and absolute suppression of the nuisance. As a man experienced in boiler inspection, Mr. Champagne does not need to be told that the patient, persistent enforcement of the by-law will be no hardship to the maker of black smoke. It is well known that there are numerous appliances that will not only prevent the making of black smoke but be absolutely economical in the consumption of coal. Black smoke is simply another name for unconsumed carbon, which the maker is wasting owing to his unscientific and careless method of stoking. As the suppression of the smoke nuisance will, therfore, prove a financial benefit to those who are making it; an inestimable comfort to those who now suffer from it; and a gratifying clearing up of the beautiful natural landscape with which Montreal is favored, there are three excellent reasons why the inspector should take vigorous action to bring it about.

THE ZIONIST CONVENTION.

The meeting of the convention of Zionist societies of the Dominion in Montreal will be a notable gathering. It will include in its membership some of the most useful citizens and progressive merchants in Canada. Some of the great Zionist movements will be considered. It comes, too, just after the Hebrews of the United States have celebrated the 250th anniversary of the settlement of their race in North America.

They can indeed look with pride on the progress that has been made by their people during the two and a half centuries since the little band of twenty-three Hebrews landed on Manhattan island, in the middle of the seventeenth century. Those first settlers of the tribe of Israel were not outcasts, nor were they unusued to the conditions of the pioneers of that day. They bore the restrictions placed upon them with the characteristic fortitude of the race. They met with various forms of opposition in New Amsterdam, at the hands of the domineering Governor of the Dutch West Indies Company, Peter Stuyvesant, and his associates. It was Stuyvesant's wish to banish the Hebrews from North America, but he had no opportunity to carry out his plan, as the Jews proved law-abiding, and peacefully dispersed to the neighboring villages, where they founded various commercial interprises.

Inhospitable as their reception was, and inauspicious as their beginning, these people have gradually multiplied in and around the metropolis of the new world, until now on that same Manhattan Island where the first little band were officially ostracised, every fourth person is a Jew.

They overcame prejudice and lived down slander, winning their way by a quiet persistence, making their conquest by the methods of peace rather than the arts of war. When Peter Stuyvesant thought to crush out any Jewish immigration by publishing the edict that no Jews should become public charges, he helped them more than he knew. Instead of hurting them this proved one of their greatest sources of strength. If they were to have restrictions imposed on no others, they must have exceptional arrangements. This laid the foundation of a system of caring for their own unfortunate that has developed remarkably, until in the United States and Canada it can be said of the Jews as of no other people that none are to be found charges upon the public.

No other class of immigrant has caused so little industrial or political disruption as the Jews. None other have more rapidly adapted themselves to their new home, and become substantial, progressive and patriotic citizens. The Hebrews of Canada can take pride in the development that their race has made in this country, and in the world at large since the first settlement. In music and other branches of art they excel; in literature they stand in the front rank; in mechanical pursuits their tireless industry and far-sightedness have practically placed some of the great branches of useful manufacture in their hands. A people which in modern times can point to a Rothschild in banking, a Disraeli in statesmanship, a Zangwell, a Pinero and a host of others in literature, may well feel that the ancient race is preserving its verility.

In welcoming the gathering of Canadian Hebrews to Montreal, one can recall the fact that Edward Jenkins, whose novel defending the Russian Jews attracted so much attention, received his early training here and graduated from McGill. He was a man who had travelled and had exceptional opportunities of observation. In the last pages of his book, his Hebrew hero, driven into exile by Russian cruelty, has arrived in North America, and gazes from the deck of a steamer in the St. Lawrence at Montreal and "looks out upon the freest country on earth."

PRESIDENT HOLT ON THE PRICE OF GAS.

Mr. H. S. Holt, president of the Gas Company, declines to admit that the price at which gas can be manufactured and delivered in other cities should govern in Montreal. He argues that conditions differ for different cities; and that each city must be judged on its own basis.

This is undoubtedly true,—as far as it goes. Where conditions do not differ, however, they ought to have something like the same effect in different cities. Then disadvantages in one place are very likely to be offset by other disadvantages in other places. The whole question is frankly a difficult one, and it can only be discussed with intelligence by experts.

And the way to get experts discussing it with frankness and practical demonstration is to get various groups of capitalists competing for the right to supply the citizens with gas. That will soon shake out of the question all there is in it, and we will not only know what experts think that gas can be made for, but for what they are willing to risk money and reputation in making it.

Competition is the great reducer of prices. Competition puts every producer on his metal. If the city will take over the gas plant and so get control of the business, and then lease it to the highest bidder, we shall get our gas at the lowest price at which any responsible capitalists will agree to deliver it; and the city will get all the benefits of municipal ownership without the evils of municipal operation.

This year is the centenary of the cab in Old London. One hundred years ago travellers came back to London from Europe and felt so disgusted at the stuffy, slow-going coaches, that they made an attempt to introduce from Paris the cabriolet de place. This vehicle was similar to the modern gig and carried only one passenger, inside with the driver. In 1823 the design was changed so that the driver sat outside and there were two seats for passengers inside, and the name was shortened from cabriolet to cab. In 1835 was invented what proved the original of the famous "hansom." The first was driven into London by Joseph Aloysius Hansom, a Birmingham contractor, from whom it took its name. The body of the vehicle was almost square, and the wheels were seven feet six inches in height, a trifle taller than the cab itself. The driver sat on the roof and there were two doors in front. This design was modified first by Hansom, who reduced the size of the wheels, and later by John Chapman, who brought it to its present appearance. Chapman's patent for the Hansom was secured in 1836, and about the same time the "four wheeler," the "ansom's" chief competitor today on London's streets, was introduced. A glimpse of the growth of the cab industry in the century is shown by the facts that in 1805 there were only nine cabs licensed in the whole of London, while to-day there are 4,000 "four-wheelers" and 7,500 "hansoms."

The deepest sounding yet made in the oceans is said to be in the Aldrich deep, to the east of New Zealand. Here the sea is 30,930 feet deep.

Loch Tay is one of the deepest lakes in the British Isles. A maximum sounding of 503 feet has been made in this lake, whilst the mean depth is 199 feet.

RUSSIA MAY HAVE TO DO WITHOUT A WARM WATER PORT.

(The Toronto Telegram.)

Canada has a better moral right to Portland, Me., than Russia has to any of the winter ports that her statesmen covet.

Russia's inevitable growth is supposed to justify the theft of a warm water port from some weaker people.

Canada's inevitable growth would justify the theft of Portland, Maine, from a stronger people.

Canada must accommodate the conditions of her expansion to the inconvenient fact that the United States holds a winter port that rightfully belongs to this country.

Russia may have to accommodate the conditions of her expansion to the fact that there is nothing necessarily sacred in her hunger and thirst for the ports that are the property of other nations.

FINE DAY—FINE, FINE!

(With Apologies to the Toronto Telegram.)

This is a fine day, and why?

Because the sun is shining, the air is beautiful, and we have lots of things to "scrap" about.

We would like to see the chap who would dare to say we have not the right to "scrap."

We would also like to see the chap who would dare to say it is not a fine day.

We wouldn't do a thing to him.

Wow!!

THE PASSING HOUR

There are signs that the man who rocks the boat is going to cut an unusually large figure in the cemetery statistics this season.

Why will the Montreal baseball team insist upon losing games when there are so many other more pleasant forms of amusement?

Straw hats should be sold for half price in a city like Montreal, where the climate will only allow them to be worn every other day.

What worries France so much is the fact that it paid out good money for those Russian bonds.

As Togo reports he only sank 25 ships, Japan may demand a recount.

When you own a daily calendar how easy it is to take a day off.

The difference between Russia and the Montreal ball team is that the ball team once connected with something that looked like a victory.

However, the Czar allows his subjects to think, even if they are not allowed to think out loud.

Why doesn't somebody take Norway and Sweden off in a corner and apply the slipper?

With the circus and baseball teams here the same day will there be enough peanuts to go around?

Toronto wants it distinctly understood that the School Question is still doing a fair line of business at the old stand.

The strange part of that Liberal victory in England was that the winner never took lessons at the same night school Togo attended.

With all that counterfeit money floating around Ottawa we trust none of it will get into Mr. Fielding's surplus by mistake.

Admiral Dewey gracefully compares his fight to Togo's. Any competent jury would award Togo damages on that statement.

The situation would be relieved if the magazines would establish a closed season for articles on John R. Rockefeller.

"Please be convinced," is Togo's quaint Japanese way of saying, "Put that in your pipe and smoke it."

Through the working of the Japanese wireless telegraph and fearless fleet, the Russians have acquired a shipless navy.

What pains the poor people in Russia more than anything is the fact that the Japs failed to sink any Grand Dukes in the excitement.

A RHAPSODY.

(Chicago News.)

If it, perchance, should be your wish
With joy to see me beam
Just set me down before a dish
Of strawberries and cream.
Unblemished berries, freshly culled,
Bright with a scarlet gleam—
My appetite is never dulled
For strawberries and cream.

The sugar must be pulverized,
The cream both sweet and thick,
The plate must be one goodly sized;
I want no stems to pick.
I do not ask a greater treat;
It ever was my dream
To get as much as I could eat
Of strawberries and cream.

Talk not to me of shortcake, please,
For that excites disgust.
Should one put berries such as these
Within a soulless crust?
Ah, no! That is the great mistake,
The foolishness supreme
The simple berry takes the cake.
Just serve 'em up with cream.

President Roosevelt is raising a loud call for a bigger navy, just on the chance that the Japs may take a liking to Washington, one of these days and go over and take the place.

By losing $75,000,000 worth of warships in 24 hours, Russia is also open to the charge of frenzied finance.

Perhaps some London, Ont., people may miss voting for Mr. Gray on the excuse that they were color blind.

HOPE FOR THE DUDES.

(Boston Globe.)

The physicians who are treating a 16-year-old boy in New York whose brain is undeveloped are confident that he will be cured within a short time. This ought to be encouraging to many young men in society.

In order to win success a man must be in a position to grasp opportunity by the back of the neck.

News of Linevitch's defeat may be expected almost any day now. The necessity of going through the usual formality of a battle is all that delays it.

What He Found Out.

In the early morn the fresh city boarder met the rustic dairymaid carrying a couple of foaming milk pails.

"Ah, good morning, my dear," he said, patronizingly. "How is the milkmaid?"

"'Tain't made at all, kind sir," she said. "We takes it from th' cows."

In the old days our athletes played lacrosse for love of the game. In these days they play it for love of money.

Honest, now, doesn't it tickle you to have other men try on your hat and find it too large for them?

Togo's Medals.

(Chicago News.)

By the time Togo has had one or two more rounds with the Russians he will have to hire a man with a wheelbarrow to carry his medals when he goes about in state.

Having destroyed 5,000 lives in thirty-six hours, Japan's claim to a place in the front rank of civilization can no longer be disputed.

Being engaged is a condition where it would be a cold damper on happiness to have any sense.

The Czar declares that he has no intention of suing for mercy. He may, however, sue the Japanese Government for breach of promise or damages or something like that.

INTERESTING JUDICIAL TANGLE.

The ten-hour law for bakers in New York State had an interesting judicial experience. It was pronounced constitutional by the State Court of Appeals by a vote of 4 to 3; then the United States Supreme Court pronounced it unconstitutional by a vote of 5 to 4. Combining the two courts, it will be found that sixteen judges passed upon the law, and that of the sixteen there were eight for the law and eight against it. The law is now null and void, because there is no appeal from the decision last handed down.

THIS DATE THIRTY YEARS AGO.

The Cabinet Ministers, according to Ottawa reports, are busy considering appointments in connection with the North-West Council. It is said that Mr. John Norris, the well known journalist of this city, will be appointed to the clerkship, but nothing definite has been made public as yet.

THE late Mr. Norris was one of the oldest writers that has ever been connected with the Montreal press. He had a facile pen at all times, and in "The Gallery" was called the little "Giant," he worked so hard, turning out good "copy" for his party. He went out to British Columbia many years ago, and died in the city of Victoria.

Chief Justice Dorion and Judges Monk, Ramsay and Sandborne, left by steamer last evening for Quebec, to preside at the term of the Court of Appeals, to be held for that district.

THE Chief Justice and his learned colleagues have since gone to their eternal rest. They were each and all great jurists, and their decisions rarely disputed by the members of the bar.

A large and fashionable audience, including many families of high respectability, attended De Bars House last evening to witness the debut of Miss Ada Gray in her rendition of the difficult, but ever popular character of "Camille."

THE late Miss Gray was an actress of no mean ability, though not in the same rank as Adelaide Nilson or Matilda Heron. She appeared in this city many times, and was always received with much favor by the public.

Messrs. E. R. Greene and John T. Molson are the visiting governors to the Montreal General Hospital for the ensuing week.

BOTH the governors above mentioned have passed away. They were prominent merchants in banking and commercial circles for a long period, and deeply interested in the city's development.

THE GIRLS' HOLIDAY HOUSE.

This Institution Will Be Re-opened on July 1 Next.

The holiday House for working girls, maintained by the Good-Will Club, will re-open at Berthier on July 1. As the actual revenue of the House does not meet expenses, subscriptions to the work will be received as formerly, by Miss Howard, 22 Tupper street.

At Holiday House, which is situated on the Berthier channel of the St. Lawrence, the girls resting enjoy boating, bathing, berrying, driving and other rural pleasures. Besides getting into the pure country air, the girl on a holiday trip at Berthier lives in a cool, quiet house, where she is not disturbed by the rattle of waggons or cars or any of the din of the city she tires of when at work the rest of the year. There are instead long stretches of green sward and woods and the bright company of other girls holidaying.

Ladies of the committee in town superintend Holiday House throughout the summer months. The Good-Will Club has been closed for the summer and all communications for the club should be sent to Miss Howard.

Take the journey some evening after dinner with your wife and children. Then slam the door on the doctor for 1905, by taking the family on a Real Journey to Muskoka this summer.

The deceased was foreman of the works, and was supervising the laying of a large stone which slipped from the derrick while he was hoisting it, and fell upon him. The case is being investigated by the coroner to-day.

Peevie was about 45 years of age. His home is at Pembroke, Ont., where his wife and family live. The deceased boarded at 243 St. Antoine street. After the inquest the body will be taken to Pembroke for interment.

NOT AGAINST ALFONSO.

Was An Anarchist, But Not In the Last Plot.

Paris, June 3.—The Petit Republique says that the anarchist, Malato, who was arrested after the attempt to assassinate King Alfonso, said, when examined by the police: "I am an anarchist. I approve of the propaganda, but I did not take part in the attempt on the King's life. It is true that the explosives came to me from Barcelona, but I hid and threw them into the moat of the fortifications."

The Libre Parole says that the police of Bordeaux believe they have secured the author of the bomb outrage. Upon the arrival of the express from Paris they arrested a man named Martino, who had wounds on the face, knees and hands. He says he was hurt in a fall from a bicycle. He had upon him 300 francs in Spanish money, and had a ticket at Juvisy, near Paris, for Irun, Spain.

A thanksgiving mass will be celebrated in the Church of St. Francis Xavier to-day for the escape of King Alfonso.

Indictments Prepared Against Labor Leaders by Grand Jury.

Chicago, June 3.—Indictments connected with the teamsters' strike have been voted by the Grand Jury, and will be returned to-day. The names of the men indicted could not be ascertained to-day.

It was reported, however, that bills would not be voted in connection with the charge made by President Shea, of the Teamsters' Union, that he was offered $10,000 to call a strike against Sears, Roebuck & Co. It was found that the statutes of limitation barred any indictments, and the evidence given was largely of hearsay character. It is rumored that some indictments would be based on the charges of conspiracy to injure the business of a number of large concerns, and it was said that some indictments would be found for perjury. There was nothing definite, however, in any of these statements.

PHILADELPHIA'S LOCAL POLITICS

More Officials Resign and Their Places are Filled.

Philadelphia, June 3.—At the request of Mayor Weaver, Alexander Volville, jr., assistant director of public safety, and Wm. H. Baker, assistant director of public works, handed in their resignations yesterday and were immediately succeeded by new men. The Mayor appointed Thomas W. South, a former police magistrate, to fill the position vacated by Mr. Colville, and Thomas L. Hicks, a former postmaster, to take the place made vacant in the Department of Public Works. The salaries of the assistant directors are $4,000 a year. Rumors of other changes are still in circulation. Mayor Weaver has announced that hereafter strict economy is to be practised in all departments under his jurisdiction.

W. A. Kennedy, manager of the Bank of Nova Scotia at Winnipeg, has been promoted to the position of inspector, with headquarters in Toronto.

PIUS X LOVES VENICE.

It is well known that Pius X loves Venice with the intensity of emotion that the city has bred in many great minds, and not even the 1000-roomed palace of the Vatican can turn his thoughts from the city in which he wrought so honorably and enjoyed so large a measure of freedom.

HOW MONEY GROWS WHEN SOWN IN THE RIGHT SPOT

Money will grow abundantly and profitably if you will but plant a modest seed of a dollar or more weekly in a spot where the harvesting is certain, and where the demand for the product is more than the supply. And while we are on this subject let us state, as a matter of fact, that there are thousands of men and women to-day that are reaping the reward of their timely sowing, and their only regret is that they depended for so many years upon the 3 per cent. interest of the savings banks, when they might have benefited a hundredfold by planting their money in BUILDING LOTS, and reaping without risk the profits of their foresight.

Lay aside from your weekly earnings 13 CENTS PER DAY, and sow the accumulated seeds of this 13 cents per day in valuable, productive ROSEMOUNT or ALEXANDRA PARK EARTH, surrounding the great East End C.P.R. Works. Then you can afford to put your hands in your pockets and watch and see that money grow.

RUSSIAN ADMIRAL WILL RETURN HOME

PEOPLE CLAMOR AGAINST HIM

If Czar Follows Precedent, the Defeated and Disgraced Admiral Will Be Shot.

London, June 3.—A despatch to the Times from Tokio states that the Emperor has ordered that Vice-Admiral Nebogatoff be released in order that he may take to the Czar a report of the battle of the Japan Sea and a list of the Russian casualties.

STILL IN THE DARK.

Tsing Tao, June 3.—The Russian Government is receiving scanty information of the Russian losses in the battle of the Sea of Japan, and has requested the German authorities at this port to telegraph information to St. Petersburg.

PITIABLE APPEAL.

In order to relieve the suspense of thousands of families, Russia has appealed to France to secure, through the French minister at Tokio, the most complete list possible of the Russian officers and men who perished or were saved. The fate of hundreds will probably never be established.

CANNOT FIND THEM.

The Admiralty has practically given up all hope that the Russian protected cruisers, Aurora and Oleg, might limp into port. Both these vessels are now believed to have foundered.

BAD TIME FOR NEBOGATOFF.

St. Petersburg, June 3.—Feeling in the Admiralty against Rear Admiral Nebogatoff continues to run high, the majority of the naval authorities being deaf to the appeals of the few who insist that the admiral's action in surrendering his warships should not be condemned until the circumstances become fully known. The majority say they could forgive anything but surrender, and point to the precedent set in the case of the Russian warship Rapahael, which, in 1829, during the Russo-Turkish war, struck its colors to the Turkish ships which surrounded it. Nicholas I. meted out a terrible punishment to the officers and crew of the Raphael, ordering that all of them should be shot after a court-martial, and directing that if the ship should ever be recaptured its infamous history should be blotted out by the total destruction of the vessel.

The Raphael, it has to say, was recaptured thirty-four years later at Sinope, during the Crimean war. A son of the captain who surrendered her taking part in the battle, and to this son fell the task of executing the dead Emperor's orders in destroying her. Many naval authorities declare that the Emperor should reserve the same fate for Admiral Nebogatoff.

While hope for the safety of the protected cruisers Oleg and Aurora has been generally abandoned, some of the naval authorities believe it possible that their commander, realizing that the fleet had been practically destroyed, and that Vladivostok as a harbor of refuge would only prove a death-trap in the end, laid their course either for Ishinoseki or the mouth of the Amur River, or for Petropavlovsk, in Kamchatka. There is plenty of coal at both places to replenish the bunkers of the cruisers. The ships could then proceed to the North Pacific and either be interned in the United States or return by way of Cape Horn.

THEIR GUNNERY DEFECTIVE.

Russian Ships Might as Well Fired Bricks from Cannon.

Tokio, June 3.—While naval officers very generally accept Admiral Togo's view that his victory was owing to the superhuman agency, it being impossible for unaided human effort to secure such a marvellous result, scientific naval experts attribute it to the deplorable inaccuracy of the gunnery, the deplorable waste of ammunition, of which the enemy finally ran short, the low power of their projectiles, and the fact that the sun was behind the Japanese, who also flew with the wind. Admiral Togo has also given his gunners a long training in firing in rough seas. The quality of the Japanese explosives was superb.

WOUNDED ADMIRAL ON THE MEND.

Kindness of Mikado Sends Message to His Wife.

St. Petersburg, June 3.—Mme. Rojestvensky has received the following despatch from the director of the naval hospital at Saßebo:—"By superior orders, I have the honor to inform you that the wounds of Admiral Rojestvensky are in a good way of healing. His temperature is normal. His wounds do not afford any ground for anxiety. WOUNDED, HE HID IN THE HOLD

London, June 3.—The Telegraph's correspondent at Sasebo, describing Admiral Rojestvensky's capture, says that when he embarked on the destroyer Bedovy, the destroyer attempted to break away, first pointing her head one way and then another in her efforts to find a gap in the ring of the enemy's guns. The Japanese destroyer Sasonami advanced from the lines to meet the Bedovy, pouring a terrific fire into her at close range. The Bedovy became disabled, and her steering gear was useless. Admiral Rojestvensky and his chief of staff were wounded when they left the Knias Suvaroff, and were wounded again on the Bedovy, the Admiral seriously. The Sasonami's crew boarded the Bedovy, and made all aboard of her prisoners. Admiral Rojestvensky was discovered at the bottom of the hold bleeding freely. He is now in a special ward of the naval hospital at Sasebo, where Japanese naval surgeons are attending him. He has a shell splinter in his forehead and slight wounds in the back and legs. He is very fatigued and pale.

The converted cruisers Nippon Maru and Hong Kong Maru, which were despatched to search the seas, laden with food and medical comforts, have returned. They saved more than 600 Russians. The total number of prisoners is now nearly 5,000.

SHELLS DID THE TRICK.

London, June 3.—According to the Telegraph's Moji correspondent, the Ural, the fate of which hitherto was not clear, was sunk by the Japanese shells. After she was finally disabled, a shell struck her, and she remained afloat only forty minutes, during which time 500 of her crew, including her captain, were transferred to a transport. Thirty-four men remained aboard of her and vainly tried to save her. These men embarked in a small boat just before the Ural sank. After being afloat for thirty hours they landed. All the officers and crew of the vessel are now at Moji. The officers say that three 12-inch shells alone caused the sinking of the Ural.

TOGO NOW LOOKING FOR MORE

Unable to Find Traces of Missing Russian Ships.

Tokio, June 3.—Admiral Togo, telegraphing yesterday, says:

"The ships sent northward to search for Russian ships returned yesterday. The cruisers Iwate and Yakumo and other vessels sent to the south to find Russian ships returned to-day. They thoroughly searched the Shanghai course from Tsushima to Okinoshima on both sides found no trace of the Russians.

THE JEMTCHUG WAS SUNK.

Admiral Shimamura, on board the cruiser Iwate, reports:

"During the battle of May 27th, at 2.07 p.m. the cruiser Iwate vigorously attacked the protected cruiser Jemtchug at a distance of about 6,000 thousand metres. The Jemtchug sank in one minute. The loss of the Jemtchug is, therefore, confirmed.

"During the engagement fire broke out on the Jemtchug and smoke completely filled the hull of the ship. Consequently, the remainder of our fleet were unable to see the ship."

Russia's Internal Troubles.

Lodz, Russian Poland, June 3.—There was a renewal of rioting here yesterday morning. A crowd of people stoned a detachment of Cossacks and the latter fired, killing two persons and wounding others.

SENDS MESSAGE TO THE CZAR.

Two o'clock arrived and Count Cassini, the Russian Ambassador, called by appointment at the White House at 2.30 o'clock. He entered by the north Blue Room, where he was joined immediately by the President, and a conference followed, lasting until after 3 o'clock.

A general and entirely informal and personal conversation took place, and the situation followed. The President informed the ambassador that he earnestly hoped for an early peace in the Far East, and that in expressing this hope he voiced not only his strong personal sentiments and those of his Government, but he believed these were held by all of the powers. His opinion was that it would be to the advantage for Russia to continue the war.

Briefly, the arguments used by the President in support of the conference were that, as between a continuation of the war and immediate peace, the latter would be greatly to Russia's advantage.

NOT THE TIME TO DISCUSS INDEMNITY.

Having received no word from his Government since the annihilation of Rojestvensky's fleet, he gave no brief official despatches telling of the engagement. Count Cassini was unable to do more than to express the President his own personal opinions on the situation. The Ambassador was deeply touched by the cordiality shown him on his reception and the frank and friendly manner in which the President spoke. He could not say definitely that there was anything in the present situation, unfortunate as it undoubtedly was, which would have been which necessitated Russia's suing for peace. As to territory, he pointed out that China and not Russia had been driven by the Japanese from Port Arthur was held under lease. On the sea, Russia had nothing more to lose than it had. It was the Ambassador's firm opinion that this was not the "Psychological moment" in which to discuss peace with Japan. Whatever might be the ultimate decision of his Government, he took the ground that official notice of nothing either by waiting or by continuing the war on land. There was hope yet of a victory on the Manchurian arms and in any event Russia had not yet lost one foot of territory, nor was the Russian frontier endangered.

WHAT WILL JAPAN WANT?

The ambassador pointed out that there was not at the slightest official information from any source as to Japan's probable terms and that these demands, as stated unofficially, were entirely impossible." If Japan's terms should prove anything like as severe as they have been reported, it was the ambassador's opinion that Russia could advantageously accept. Count Cassini left definitely and eventually win a victory on land. That his Government would so decide, he did not feel authorized to say, but at last accounts the Emperor was for a continuation of the war.

Regarding his visit to the White House, all that Count Cassini would say was, "I had a most interesting conversation with the President this afternoon, during which the whole situation in the Far East was discussed informally and in a general manner. No peace overtures were received from Japan, nor were any made. Our talk was confidential, of course, and of a very general character."

When Count Cassini leaves Washington for St. Petersburg early in July, he will be the bearer of a personal message from the President to the Emperor.

After American Autoists.

Special to the Montreal Star.

St. Catharines, Ont., June 3.—The Lincoln County Council this afternoon passed a resolution giving a reward of $25 for the first conviction in this county under the act respecting the speed and operation of automobiles. This was done to bring up short certain motorists from Buffalo and Niagara Falls, who come over here and run their machines at a rate of 25 or 30 miles an hour, frightening farmers' horses and causing runaways.

JAPANESE ADVANCE HAS NOW BEGUN

VLADIVOSTOK TO BE CUT OFF

Japan's Offensive Operations are Unlimited and Russia May Be Driven from the Coast.

St. Petersburg, June 3. — General Linevitch, in a despatch to Emperor Nicholas, says: On May 29 the Japanese began an advance and attacked our troops in the valley of the Sinlin river, about three miles beyond Fenshu Pass, which remained in our hands."

Tokio, June 3.—With the destruction of Russia's naval power, interest is not be found a match for the Japanese. One of the most scientific of these calculations was that of a French writer, M. Delaporte, in L'Illustration, who based his conclusions that Togo had the greatest strength upon his side on a strict analysis of each fleet and the factors that might be regarded as determining the result.

Each ship of the two fleets had to be examined as regarded, first, its tonnage, the ship's dimensions, giving some indication in this respect as to its endurance at sea and coal capacity; second, the power of its machinery, affording its speed and extended radius of action; third, its offensive armament, in regard chiefly to the power of its artillery, and, fourth, its defensive armament or shield armor.

Aggregating these different factors for each fleet, the following figures were obtained. Japanese fleet, consisting of 86 ships, including 20 torpedo destroyers and 49 torpedo boats:

1. Tonnage—204,000.
2. Speed of Japanese fleet by engine power under forced draught—500,000 horse power.
3. Offensive armament of Japanese fleet, reckoned at 79 tons discharged in a minute by broadside firing.
4. Defensive armament of the Japanese fleet would be represented by a mass of steel 20 metres long, 10 metres high and five metres thick; the armor plating carried by the Japanese warships, the estimate of this armor protection being put at 4,495 cubic metres.

Against these are placed for the Russian fleet, which consists, or is to consist of 46 ships, of which 11 were torpedo destroyers and 11 auxiliary cruisers.

1. Tonnage—183,000.
2. Speed of Russian fleet by engine power under forced draught, 350,000 horse power, including ships of the Volunteer fleet and converted German liners.
3. Offensive armament of Russian fleet, reckoned at 76 tons discharged in a minute by broadside firing.
4. Defensive armament of the Russian fleet would be represented by a mass of steel 10 metres high and 5 metres thick, but only 81 metres long (as compared with Japan's 200), the estimate of this armor protection being put at 4,071 cubic metres.

ESTIMATED TOTAL OF CREWS.

The aggregate crews of the Russian armored ship and unarmored cruisers amounted to about 10,200; the crews of the Japanese ships of corresponding classes amounted to about 13,500. The crews of the Japanese destroyers and auxiliary cruisers exceeded those of the Russian in nearly the proportion of the numbers of the respective craft.

A RUSSIAN EXPERT'S OPINION.

The naval expert of the Novoe Vremya, the chief Russian paper, having compiled a list of the opposing fleets, including the doubtful Yashima, arrived at the following comparison: Tonnage of the Russian fleet, Borodinon, plus the Vladivostok fleet, 201,500; guns, new twelve-inch, 20; old, 6; new eight-inch, 8; old, 8; new six-inch, 146; old, 26; new, four-seven-tenths-inch, 80; new three-inch, 202; torpedo guns, 91.

Admiral Togo's tonnage was given as 208,240. He is said to have four old 12-inch guns, while his new weapons are as follows: Twenty 12-inch, one 10-inch, thirty-seven 8-inch, 314 6-inch, 101 4.7-inch, and 240 3-inch. His torpedo guns number 112. This list embraces battleships, armored cruisers and despatch boats.

The Russians had, besides five converted cruisers, from eight to twelve new torpedo boats of from 240 to 350 tons, and eight coast defence torpedo boats of from 26 to 180 tons.

The Japanese had eight converted cruisers, nine coast defence vessels, eighteen gunboats and about seventy torpedo boats, of which about twenty were seagoing.

HIDDEN PARTS OF ONTARIO.

Systematic Exploration by Bureau of Mines.

Toronto, June 3. — The Bureau of Mines has made arrangements for carrying out during the present season a systematic exploration of certain portions of Ontario. Parties will be sent into the Michipicoten division, into a region west of Lake Abitibi, into the district near Chapleau Station on the Canadian Pacific Railway, and into Loon Lake iron region, near the township of MacGregor, east of Port Arthur. Prof. W. G. Miller, provincial geologist, will continue the examination of the rich silver cobalt area on the Temiskaming & New Ontario Railway, and also will institute a thorough enquiry into the clay and shallow resources of the province, being assisted in the latter by W. H. Baker, of Queen's University, Kingston, and E. T. Corkell, inspector of mines. The Bureau also has made

"Freedom of the Press" in Russia.

A PAGE OF THE WEEKLY STAR AFTER IT HAD BEEN TREATED BY THE CENSOR.

A striking example of the strict censorship exercised over the press in Russia is afforded by the above, which is a reduced facsimile of page 21 of the issue of the Weekly Star of April 12, after it had been through the hands of the official censor. The paper was sent in the regular way to one of our subscribers in Russia, but in accordance with the automatic custom of the censor to see if it contained anything that might be unsuitable reading for the loyal subjects of the Czar. Two paragraphs seemed to him hardly fit for a good Russian to read and three he promptly blackened out, as shown in the above fac-simile. The paper was then allowed to go on to the subscriber, who has returned the page to us, with a marginal note, "Sample of Russian censorship." The paragraphs that were obliterated were as follows:

DEATH TO THE CZAR THE ASSASSIN.

St. Petersburg, April 8.— The workmen of Smolensk made a demonstration yesterday, the occasion being the burial of an employe of the Hahl factory, who was killed by policemen a few days ago. Six thousand persons assembled early in the morning in a heavy snow storm, and awaited the funeral procession. Red flags everywhere, and a wreath deposited by socialists on the coffin was inscribed: "Died an innocent victim in the struggle for victory." After the interment revolutionary proclamations were scattered among the people and a procession was formed, headed by a socialist carrying a banner inscribed "Death to the Czar, the assassin." At this juncture a large force of military and police interfered, dispersed the mob, and seized the wreaths and banners. The workmen did not attempt serious opposition and were seriously injured.

HOW THE CZAR IS GUARDED.

London, April 6. — The St. Petersburg correspondent of the Daily Mail says that preparations are being made for the Czar to remove to Peterhoff for the summer. These preparations include the encircling of a square mile of the park with a high, spiked iron fence. In the meantime, His Majesty will remain at Tsarskoe Selo, where he never goes outside the inner ring of guards surrounding the palace. The correspondent quotes an informant as follows: Tsarskoe Selo to the effect that the Czar is cheerful and that no body would suspect from his demeanor the serious condition of the Empire. He reads much English political and non-political literature, varying the time with card playing.

returning to military operations on land. Togo's victory tremendously alters the military situation and removes all limits of offensive operations against Russia's maritime provinces. It is now possible to effectively close Vladivostok, seize Sakhalen, the mouth of the Amur river, Kamchatka and any point between the Tumen river and the Arctic Circle that the Japanese may desire.

A foreign military observer, discussing the question with the correspondent of the Associated Press, says: Togo's victory may drive Russia away from the Pacific coast of Asia. Japan now has a free hand in Russia's maritime provinces and her offensive capabilities are unlimited. Nothing bars the way except the Russian force at Vladivostok, whose speedy isolation is possible.

The Amur river is open to Japan, and Russia's defensive capability is limited by the limited capacity of the Chinese Siberian Railway.

HOW EXPERTS SAW FLEETS.

French Writer Claimed Japanese Were Superior by One-ninth.

So great was the scale on which Russia made preparations for the sending of the battle fleet to the Far East and so numerous the ships—fighting vessels, auxiliaries and supply ships—that composed the Armada on its disastrous voyage that it was difficult to find any basis on which to institute a trustworthy comparison as to the relative strength of the Russian and Japanese naval forces. In some cases the standard of measurement was made the relative number of battle ships and cruisers, in others, the total tonnage of vessels possessed by either side. Or, again, the number of great guns or coal capacity was taken as the test by which the superiority of one combatant over the other could be estimated.

By deliberate calculations of the elements of naval power, several experts, however, come to the general conclusion that notwithstanding its size and the modern equipment of its best vessels, Rojestvensky's fleet when ranged in battle against Togo's would

CALL OF THE WILDERNESS.

Dillon Wallace Again Heeds Lure of Labrador.

Halifax, N.S., June 3.—Dillon Wallace, of New York, author of "The Lure of the Labrador Wild," and one of the principals of Leonidas Hubbard's fatal expedition to Labrador two years ago, is in Halifax on his way to Labrador for another attempt to reach George River. Indian district a region only once before, and that 70 years ago, trodden by the foot of a white man. His object is to meet the Nascaupee Indians, unknown to white men, and to spend some time with their caribou hunt, when they lay in food for the long winter, obtain specimens of fur-bearing animals and perhaps report on the mineral resources of that mysterious part of the Far North.

Mr. Wallace came by the steamer Rosalind from New York, and with a party of five men, who are all here, he will proceed to-day for a journey which will last till the early winter and probably for a year. It will be a year, if on his return he is caught by the ice and forced to go round the coast, and, making connections by the Saguenay River, return to civilization through Quebec province.

No panic resulted and no lives were lost. The loss will reach $150,000; fully insured. The fire is believed to have been caused by a crossed wire. The Avenue has been closed for several weeks and no one was in the building except the watchman, but the Opera House a matinee performance was in progress when the fire broke out. The theatre was half filled, but through the systematic work of the employes, the audience was gotten out without the semblance of a panic. Indeed, the majority did not know there was a fire until they reached the street. Several women fainted.

PRISONERS WERE IDENTIFIED.

Man Under Arrest in Ottawa Hails from Quebec.

Ottawa, June 3.—Through a member of the parliamentary press gallery the police have received important information concerning Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Clement, arrested Wednesday in connection with the recent robberies in the capital. Clement turns out to be the son of a Quebec alderman, while his companion has confessed to being Elizabeth Goodfellow, the daughter of a well-to-do family in Hamilton.

Clement has not lived with his father, Major R. O. Clement, for some years. Major Clement owns a number of valuable horses, some of which took part in the ice races on the Ottawa river last winter. Joseph Clement came here then and subsequently went to Fraserville, Que., acquiring at a local hotel under a fictitious name. Someone stole $100 from the hotel one night during the fire-engine races and Clement was among the missing on the following morning. He was seen in Quebec later, but left for Montreal.

The next seen of him by the journalist was in Ottawa, about three weeks ago, when he was noticed on Parliament Hill with a young lady. The newspaper man took the latter's companion for a girl known in Quebec as Mrs. Chamberlain, and with whom Clement was supposed to have eloped in March. He believes that Lizzie Goodfellow is none other than Mrs. Chamberlain.

Church Acquired by Hebrews.

Special to The Montreal Star.

Toronto, Ont., June 3.—The McCaul Street Methodist Church, it is expected, will be sold for $20,000 to the Hebrews of the town, whose gift to Bond Street Synagogue, and who have offered the price named for the building. The sale is practically completed, and awaits only the confirmation of the Toronto Conference.

When the church was built, about seventeen years ago, to take the place of the old Richmond street church, which was acquired for the Methodist Book Room and church offices, the Methodist population had justified the erection of the church known as New Richmond Street Church.

Since then the Jewish and Roman Catholic population have come in and the Methodists have moved out, with the result that the property is no longer to continue to hold the church.

RT. HON. WM. COURT GULLY WAS ONE OF SURPRISES OF ENGLISH POLITICS

The Right Hon. William Court Gully, who has just resigned from the position of Speaker of the English House of Commons, is in many ways a remarkable man, and one of the most highly esteemed of England's statesmen.

Although recognized as perhaps the ablest lawyer on the northern circuit, Mr. Gully, at the time of his appointment as Speaker, had made no reputation in political life, except that he had twice been an unsuccessful candidate for Whitehaven and was then recently returned for Carlisle by a very small majority. The seat he held then was so precarious that to promote him to the Bench, which by common consent was his due, was very possibly to lose a seat for the Government.

It was a critical period, for the man so highly esteemed in the legal profession was little known outside of it. He had separated himself to a large extent from his profession by his devotion to politics, and if he were not to drift into the monotonous round of ordinary members' duties, the Bench, for which he was eminently qualified, seemed the only way out of it. But the Government did not want to lose a seat. There was speculation then among Mr. Gully's friends, and as a result political England rubbed its eyes one day to find the persistent lawyer Speaker of the House. The grandson of a prize-fighter had become the first commander in aristocratic England.

It was an undoubted surprise to England, astonishing Mr. Balfour himself as well as the man on the street when this man who was scarcely know by name to the majority of the members, and who had scarcely ever opened his mouth in the House or served on any committee, was raised at a single leap to the proud position of Speaker.

A FORTUNATE CHOICE.

Never was a choice more seemingly risky, and yet more fortunate. The ideal lawyer had all the hidden potentiality of a Speaker, which time has revealed. "Courteous, accessible, vigilant, and prompt, with a reserve of strength and a courageous self-assertion," as Sir John Mowbray testified, he has long justified his title to rank among the really great occupants of the chair of the House of Commons, and to these qualities he adds a picturesque and dignified presence almost unique.

RIGHT HON. WM. COURT GULLY,
Ex-Speaker of the House of Commons.

Physically he was said to be the ideal lawyer, with shaven face and clean-cut, classic features for which a barrister's wig seemed the only appropriate frame. He possesses a singularly keen, logical mind, a profound knowledge of the law and of Parliamentary observances, a gift of fluent speech, and a personal charm that speedily converts acquaintances into admirers. His physique is splendidly strong, as might be expected in the grandson of a prize-fighter. For such he is said to be.

William Court Gully was born at London, August 29, 1835, the second son of James Mauby Gully, M.D., and educated at Trinity College, Cambridge. Even at college as president of the Cambridge Union he won quite an enviable reputation as a facile and powerful speaker, but for some time after he was admitted to the Bar success came slowly. At one period of this upward fight for success he had serious intentions of emigrating to America.

According to the late Lord Chief Justice, three disheartened young counsel of the Northern Circuit met at dinner one night, and weighed deliberately the pros and cons for emigration as the only means of obtaining a satisfactory livelihood. Fortunately for England they put into practice the old proverb "While there's life there's hope." Instead of throwing up the sponge, they tried again, and the three—Lord Herschell, the late Lord Chief Justice, and Rt. Hon. Mr. Gully, attained more success than the young lawyers probably dreamed about.

HIS DAYS OF TROUBLE.

Although so well equipped mentally and physically for the Bar, the young lawyer, had a long journey through the "hades of devilling" before briefs found their way to his chambers. They came in time, however, and he was able to link happiness to the promise of success by marrying in 1865 the charming Miss Selby, daughter of Thomas Selby.

Twelve years later saw him a Q.C., "in silken attire," and one of the leaders of the Northern Circuit. As Speaker of the Commons, he retained the same delightful characteristics that marked the young lawyer. An added touch of dignity only heightened the personal modesty and charm which made him popular on the circuit. He retains his power as a conversationalist and raconteur, and is equally at home in the family circle, in the study with his beloved books, or with stately courtesy and charm officiating in his public capacity.

His successor, Rt. Hon. James William Lowther, Deputy Speaker, has been prominent in English public life for many years. Born on April 1st, 1855, he is the eldest son of Hon. William Lowther, who was for twenty-five years member for Westmoreland. He was returned for Rutland constituency in 1883, became Under Secretary for Foreign Affairs in 1891, represented Great Britain at the International Conference in Venice, 1892, and has been Deputy Speaker since 1895.

MANY HAVE STOMACH CATARRH AND CALL IT DYSPEPSIA

Mrs. G. W. Davis, 1418 11th street, N.W., Washington, D.C., writes:

"After suffering some time with indigestion and dyspepsia, and having tried so many remedies without relief, I was persuaded by some friends to take Peruna.

"After using several bottles, I found such good results that I can cheerfully thank you and praise your wonderful medicine, Peruna, to my friends in general."

Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Sour Stomach, Flatulence, Palpitation Of the Heart, Are All Symptoms of Stomach Catarrh.

Run Down in Strength, a Result of Stomach Catarrh

Miss L. Wall, 350 N. Dale street, St. Paul, Minn., writes:

"Last spring I had a very severe case of catarrh of the stomach and bowels. I was very much run down in strength and lost my appetite.

"I took three bottles of Peruna and found myself gaining very quickly in every way.

"I also had catarrh in my head, which has been entirely cured. I thank Peruna for the health I am enjoying."

WHAT IS DYSPEPSIA?

Dyspepsia is a term that has long been in use. It is intended to include all disturbances of the digestive organs.

If the stomach is inflamed and digestion ceases, it is called dyspepsia.

If the saliva fails to perform its function, it is called dyspepsia.

If the glands of the stomach dry up, and no longer secrete the peptic juices, it is called dyspepsia.

How Catarrh Affects Digestion.

When catarrh attacks the mucous membranes of the stomach, the glands that secrete the gastric juices are deranged, the gastric juice is rendered inert and perverted in its action.

No one can have a healthy stomach or anything like a healthy digestion so long as they have catarrh of the stomach.

It is useless to try to remedy dyspepsia caused by catarrh of the stomach by taking pepsin powders or other dyspepsia remedies.

A Rational Treatment.

The first thing that must be done is to remove the catarrh, when the dyspeptical symptoms will disappear.

The stomach that is free from catarrhal congestion will do its work properly.

Pe-ru-na the Correct Remedy.

Peruna has become famous as a dyspepsia medicine only because it cures catarrh of the stomach.

So many cases of dyspepsia depend upon catarrh of the stomach, that the two diseases are becoming confused in the minds of many people.

Not a Dyspepsia Remedy.

It cures thousands of cases of dyspepsia by curing catarrh of the stomach, catarrh of the liver and catarrh of all the digestive organs.

Whenever any one is troubled with dyspepsia any length of time, catarrh of the digestive organs may be suspected.

Do Not Waste Valuable Time.

There is no use in wasting time with other remedies. Peruna reaches the spot at once and removes the cause. Its cures are permanent, as it removes the cause.

Not a Cure-All.

However, catarrh makes itself known by such varied symptoms, that its various forms appear to the unprofessional as so many different diseases. Catarrh is catarrh, no matter in which part of the body it locates itself. Peruna cures catarrh wherever located.

MUCH FOOD IS CONFISCATED

Anything Not Up to Standard is Seized—Inspection of Markets and Dairies.

"Yes, that is about a fair average of confiscations for each week," said Dr. J.J.McCarrey, Chief Food Inspector, looking at the following list of last week's confiscations.

Montrealers reading over that list and aware that it is only the spoils of one week's search for ptomanies and bacteria must felicitate themselves upon escaping them. For if these articles of food had not been confiscated they would have eventually come to the tables of some citizens. Tuberculous and bruised beef, decayed fruit, veal that is altogether too young, canned goods that are entirely too old, and sausages that are a mystery in their composition—these are some of the articles confiscated weekly.

The work all this entails keeps the Food Inspection branch of the Hygiene Department busy. The milk inspection is of so thorough a nature that fewer confiscations are made than in other foods. There are two milk inspectors busily engaged daily. In the morning they drive about and stopping milk delivery waggons here and there collect samples. In the afternoon they test these and visit in turn all the dairies on the Island of Montreal. In this way they have a fair idea of each milk supply.

Dairies which send in the milk by train are left to the supervision of the Provncial Board of Health and their inspectors. The Civic Hygiene Committee has not a sufficiently large staff or appropriation to provide inspectors for these outlying dairies.

But in regard to milk as other articles of food, Dr. McCarrey finds an improvement.

"Considering the growth of the city, we have fewer confiscations than formerly," Dr. McCarrey said to the Star. "The food supply of Montreal has improved, although, of course, there is still room for improvement. The greatest danger arises, I believe, from carelessness, rather than from ignorance.

"None of the dealers of the city can plead ignorance in breaking any of these laws. The civic by-laws are pretty well known now, and any dealer who wants to know more of them has only to call to this office where we have copies for free distribution."

"What is the system of inspection in force?"

"Well, besides the two milk inspectors, who are kept quite busy, we have an inspector at each of the big abattoirs. They keep a lookout for all the animals slaughtered. If any are found suspicious, they notify me, and I go up to make an examination. If the suspicions are well founded I confiscate the carcass and the company turns it over to their rendering plant where it is made up into fertilizer.

The beef confiscated is mostly from tuberculous cattle or occasionally when the animal has got bruised in transportation. When many cattle are crowded into one car it happens sometimes that a weaker animal is bruised or trampled on by stronger ones. Then when slaughtered that meat is not fit for food. It does not bleed properly.

"Still the average of confiscations in cattle is not large—from 1 to 5 a week—when we consider that from 800 to 1,000 head of cattle are slaughtered."

"What sort of meat is most frequently confiscated?"

"Veal, though there has been a decided improvement in that this year. The reason is mostly that the farmers kill their calves too soon. At two weeks they can often get as much for them as at three or four weeks, and if they are not conscientious about the quality of the veal, they kill and dress the calves then, saving the trouble of further care of them. If they are from a dairy-farm the milk they would drink in those two weeks is a very important item. Last year we have made as many as 150 confiscations of calves in one day; this year not more than 12 or 15. People have learned a lesson. Many confiscated this year were seized on the markets, where we have two district inspectors."

"Veal from a calf only two weeks old is, of course, not fit for food?"

"No, it is altogether too young. It irritates the digestive organs, particularly in children. It lacks nutriment. It is not fit for food."

"What is done with the fish and vegetables and other food confiscated?"

"It all goes to the incinerator. Fish and fruit that are decaying, poultry that has been kept too long after killing before it is put on the market, and other stuff. We do not find a great deal of bad pork. On the whole we find it freest from disease, whatever the reason may be. Some of it is not of very good quality though, for it would seem as though some farmers, if they can keep their hogs alive at all on swill will do so rather than feed them proper muscle-making food.

"We do not find as much decayed fruit as formerly. The dealers seem to mark them down now when they begin to go off, and so they get clear of them before the natural action of decomposition and fermentation set in. The groceries seized are most old canned goods and vegetables. The canned goods are usually submitted to the city analyst before they are condemned. We find these most in the smaller stores, where stock is apt to be kept longer on the shelves.

"On the whole, our staff is kept very busy and with the extension of the work the department here is growing gradually. We aim to keep up with the growth of the trade and see that Montreal's food supply is as pure as possible."

PLAYS AND PLAYERS.

In Ben Greet's production of "As You Like It."

The Richards & Pringle Minstrel organization is billed at the Academy the coming week. From its lengthy list of features an excellent minstrelsy and vaudeville can be expected. Fifty performers are enrolled in this roster, and includes such well known names as Clarence Powell, Pete Woods, Pat Bartlett, Bill Young, Happy Beauguard and Robert Williams. These six are the most clever of end men.

The olio is made up of big acts, among which are: Cooper and his Wooden-Headed Company, the "Ham-Town" Serenaders Quartette; Clarence Johnson, the famous hoop controller; Boomsky, for eight years a pupil of Herman the Great, with his tricks in magic; Williams and Beauguard, the famous knock about song and dance men; Bailey and Crawford, musical artists; the performance to conclude with Clarence Powell's funny after piece entitled: "Jim Jackson at the World's Fair." This is the last week of the season at the Academy. The season opens again on August 21st, with Pollard Lilliputian Opera Co.

Sohmer Park has started on its sixteenth season with a rush that suggests the breaking of all records in attendance, and the class of entertainment with which it is entertaining its patrons. For the coming week there are a lot of splendid attractions. The eight Cornellas, who have just returned from Europe, will be seen in what is termed a marvellous presentation of daring acts in mid air. They have been looked upon for some time as the best acrobats in their particular line in America. Ellen Richards is to appear in a slack wire act, during which she juggles all kinds of things. Zella, a man who has an acting dog, and is an equilibrist of note, is also on the bill. The Bellclaire Brothers, whose pictures suggest some wonderful feats of strength will make their first appearance in Montreal. An interesting act will be that done by Williams, the ventriloquist, who is assisted by Miss Hawthorne. He has a number of figures that are said to be cleverly worked and perform all kinds of tricks. Lavigne's band will have an entire new programme.

Following is the cast of characters for Shakespeare's "As You Like It," which will be given by Ben Greet's company at the McGill College grounds on Monday afternoon June, 5th:

The Banished Duke ..... Sydney Greenstreet.
Amiens ..... Samuel Goodwyn
Jacques .. Ben Greet (or J. S. Crawley)
A Lord ..... H. Willis.
Oliver, son of Sir Roland de Boys, ... Fritz Leiber
Orlando, son of Sir Roland de Boys ..... Dalis Anderson
Jacques, son of Sir Roland de Boys ..... Percival Aylmer
Adam ..... Redmond Flood
Touchstone ..J. Sayer Crawley (or Ben Greet).
Sir Oliver Mertext.. ..Samuel Goodwyn
Corin ..... Percival Aylmer
Silvius ..... Frank Darch
William.. ..... Hubert Osborne
Rosalind ..... Adelaide Alexander
Celia ..... Agnes Scott
Phebe ..... Sybil Thorndike
Audrey ..... Daisy Robinson

The scenes presented begin at act 2 in the Forest of Arden. The songs are sung under the direction of S. H. Goodwyn. The singing of Glees, marks the intervals of time.

Monday evening the bill will be "Midsummer Night's Dream," Tuesday afternoon, "Two Gentlemen of Verona," Tuesday evening, "The Tempest."

The attraction at Riverside for the week commencing Sunday matinee, June 4th, is sure to please the public in every respect. Among the different numbers we must mention the marvellous contortionist, "Marselles." He has ad the greatest success with Vogel's minstrels last season. The Cornella Brothers will create quite a sensation in their pantomime sketch entitled, "The House that Jack Built." The bioscope will introduce several laughable and sensational living pictures, among which will be the grand wrestling contest between the Russian lion, Hackenschmidt, and the American champion, Jenkins, taken in England.

The orchestra, under the direction of Edward Hardy, the popular bandmaster, will give two concerts every Thursday and Saturday night each week after the regular performance. The construction of the "Toboggan Electric Railway" is making rapid progress, and is expected to be open to the public at an early date.

"L'Assommoir" was one of Zola's novels which drew forth more comment than many of his others, owing to the intensely graphic pictures of life among the degenerate classes of Paris. It was one of a school of realism, which was condemned by some for its very truthfulness. It gilded no vice, nor surrounded drunkenness and crime with charms which would win people to follow in the footsteps of the characters portrayed. With vivid distinctness the readers were told that "the wages of sin is death." From the incident and host of powerfully drawn characters, the dramatists have woven a play which has lived. Strong in its moral tone, thrilling in plot, abounding in passages which make one think, as well as with a spice of comedy without which no French play is complete, it has survived the test of time in France, and an English version, called "Drink," has spoken a temperance lecture to the people of London, with Charles Warner in the leading role, for one of the longest runs on record. It will be played by the Paul Cazeneuve Company at the Francais all next week, beginning with the matinee on Monday, June 5. The capable mechanical corps of the Francais is a guarantee of proper stage setting.

M. CHAS. GAUTHIER,
Of the Cazeneuve Stock Company, at the Theatre Francais.

The best class of the French-speaking population of the city have been drawn to the Francais during the past week and they all speak in the highest terms of the company and the manner in which the plays have been mounted. Next week's performance will be under the special patronage of the Consul-General of France, and of the Montreal branch of the Alliance Francaise, of which Hon. Judge Robidoux is president. During the evening a lecture an alcoholism will be given by a medical delegate of the Alliance Francaise.

For the third week of their engagement at the Royal, the Una Clayton Stock Company will present the western drama of Nobody's Claim. The scene of this play is laid in the far West, at the time when that district was still in a half civilized condition, in the days of the mining camp and the early settler, when every man carried a gun and the one who could shoot quickest felt safest. A period full of strong passions and exciting adventures, a period teeming with dramatic incident. Madge, an orphan waif, is the heroine of the play. She is a sort of ward to the dwarf, Jagon, who is in league with a band of robbers who commit all sorts of depredations. Madge, who has always lived amongst this reckless crowd, has looked upon their lawless proceedings as a matter of course. When, however, she meets Ward Devereux, a handsome young officer attached to the military post, she falls in love with him and then begins instinctively to feel the evil courses of those around her, and sets herself to thwart some of their evil plans. Added to this interesting story there is any amount of comedy element supplied by the various sketches of the types found round the mining camp and the military post, including an old maid, a coon, and an Irish major. There are also some fine chances for scenic effect, notably in the big fire scene and the attempted train robbery. Una Clayton will be seen as the Waif Madge, and Francis Morey as Ward Devereux. The popular vaudeville features will be still continued.

The Kilties Band, which have had such tremendous success during the last year, touring in England and Scotland, are coming to Canada this month and are to appear at Windsor Hall, on Monday and Tuesday, the 19th and 20th. This renowned organization received a command to give a special concert before King Edward at Windsor Castle a few months ago and received warm congratulations from the King himself. The organization numbers 50 bandsmen, 7 soloists, 20 vocal choir, 6 Highland dancers, 2 bagpipers, 4 military buglers, and the giant Drum Major. The band arrives in Montreal direct from the old country and the concerts to be given here will be the first in Canada. Popular prices will prevail and reserved seats will be on sale one week in advance, at Shaw's Music Store.

As Montreal Looks to Visitors.

An attractively illustrated article in The Four Track News for June, is that entitled "The Commercial Metropolis of Canada," which naturally refers to Montreal. "Montreal is a surprise to most tourists," says the author, M. E. Curtin. "A city so rich in historical interest suggests narrow, winding streets, cramped buildings and a somnolent air reminiscent of the past; but the traveller finds Montreal spacious and modern, with wide streets, fine buildings and many park-like public squares." An interesting article entitled "The Pride of Minnesota," gives a description, accompanied by several pictures, of the new $5,000,000 marble capital at St. Paul, recently dedicated. The dome, built in marble, is the largest in the United States. Other articles of description and travel are not less engrossing. (Geo. H. Daniels, 7 East 42nd street, New York.)

SHORTHAND IN 30 DAYS

TESTIMONIAL

Gentlemen,—I take pleasure in handing you herewith our testimonial, regarding the satisfaction given by our stenographer, Miss Lefebvre, who is a graduate from your College. I wish to say that it was with much pleasure and surprise that I found her able to take any dictation at a high rate of speed, with perfect ease, and transcribe her notes with absolute accuracy. I do not think her degree of accuracy and speed could be attained by any other System of Shorthand, in the surprisingly short space of time in which she was a student in your College. I remain, with best wishes, yours truly, (Signed) JOHN LEONARD, Mayor of Sherbrooke.

MISS LEFEBVRE WAS ONLY 24 DAYS AT OUR COLLEGE WHEN SHE GRADUATED AND SECURED THIS SPLENDID POSITION.

LATE WM. MACDOUGALL WAS TYPE OF DOMINION'S EARLY STATESMEN

The death of the Hon. Wm. Macdougall removes another of the few remaining links that connect the present with the early days of the Canadian Confederation.

Thirty-eight years have passed since the Canadian people celebrated their first Dominion Day. Of the electors who voted for members of the first federal Parliament how few remain; of the members there is only a scattering remnant, and there is one less now since Mr. Macdougall has joined the great majority.

On that first Dominion Day Mr. Macdougall was sworn in a member of the Privy Council of Canada, and became Minister of Public Works in the Cabinet of Sir John Macdonald. From that time until defeat overtook him, at the hands of the electors of Algoma in 1882 he was a conspicious figure in the political arena of this country. In most of the battles of those times he took a prominent part, sometimes on the side of the victorious, sometimes among the defeated, but always among those who won attention and commanded respect.

LAWYER AND JOURNALIST.

By profession Mr. Macdougall was a lawyer, but it was not as a lawyer that he was best known to his own generation, nor will he be remembered as such. The field in which he first made his way and established his reputation was that of journalism. As an editorial writer perhaps he has never been surpassed in this country. "His straight-forward and unadorned but incisive language being the outcome of deliberate preference, not of happy accident."

As a speaker he was equally happy and equally effective—ready, clear, logical and persuasive. During a considerable part of his parliamentary career the debates of the House of Commons were not reported verbatim, so that the exact language of many of his speeches has not been preserved, but those of later years are to be found in full, on the pages of Hansard, and they show Mr. Macdougall to have been a master of parliamentary style.

ONE OF HIS ADDRESSES

One short selection is here reproduced, not because of any oratorical merit but because of its association with the name of another Canadian, who like Mr. Macdougall assisted in laying the foundation of this Dominion.

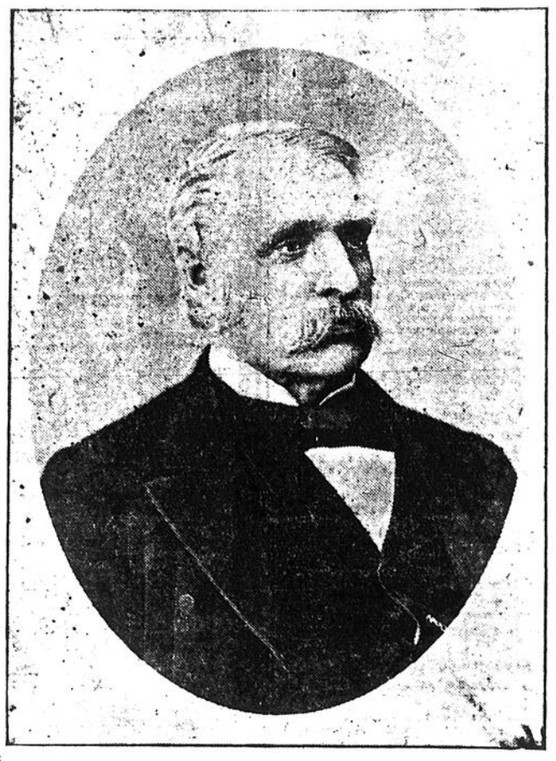
The first monument erected in the grounds surrounding the Houses of Parliament was that to the memory of Sir George E. Cartier. It stands among a little cluster of trees just west of the building, consisting of a bronze figure of the departed statesman raised about ten feet above the ground by a massive granite pedestal. For many years this statue stood alone, but now on either side and not far distant, are statues of the Queen and of Alexander Mackenzie.

It was on March 18, 1881, that Parliament voted the sum of $10,000 for the Cartier monument, and when this item of the supplies was under consideration in Committee of Supply that day, Mr. Macdougall spoke as follows in defence of the expenditure:—"I agree with the suggestion made by the Minister of Public Works (Sir Hector, then Mr. Langevin), that a certain time having elapsed when the feelings engendered by political conflicts may be supposed to have in a measure subsided, it is fitting and proper that this Parliament should recognize the very great services which that deceased gentleman rendered not only to his own Province but to the Dominion and to the Empire. I had the honor of being for some years his colleague. I believe I had the melancholy privilege of being the last Canadian to see Sir George E. Cartier before his melancholy death in London. Although in the political conflicts of that period, I often found it necessary in this discharge of my duties to differ from him in his views of public matters, yet when I recall the service he rendered to this country in the carrying to completion that great measure of Confederation, the benefit of which we are now enjoying, when I consider the singular, the unique position he occupied in this country as representing a great section of people whose apprehensions of evil consequences, I know, prevailed to a large extent irrespective of political parties; and when I recall the energy and ability which were brought to bear by that gentleman in bringing to maturity and passing into law that great measure, —I think the people of the Province of Ontario will not object to this recognition of the services of Sir George E. Cartier."

ADVOCATED MANY REFORMS.

During his active political career Mr. Macdougall advocated many important political reforms, and it was his good fortune to see most of them adopted. He advocated an elective upper chamber of Parliament, the abolition of property qualifications for members, a householder franchise, vote by ballot, representation by population, commercial autonomy, the consolidation of law and equity courts, the application of the clergy reserves to educational purposes, the abolition of special privileges to religious denominations, the lowering of the rate of legal interest, the abolition of primogeniture in relation to real property, the adoption of a decimal currency, the free navigation of the St Lawrence and biennial Parliaments.

All but the first and last of these planks have been embodied in Canadian legislation, and that the people are to-day enjoying the fruits of these reforms is due in no small measure to the advocacy of the late William Macdougall.



THE LATE HON. WILLIAM MACDOUGALL.

Land Forces Celebrate Victory.

Special to The Montreal Star.

From Nogi's Headquarters in Manchuria, via Fusan, Corea, June 2.—Gen. Nogi, his officers and the whole of the army celebrated the victory of Togo's fleet last night. Toasting the victorious fleet, Nogi reminded his hearers that they must not be too proud of their victories, for Japan had been aided by good fortune in addition to the bravery and loyalty of the fleet and the armies. The Emperor, he added, though desirous of peace, was prepared, if necessary to press the war to the utmost against the Russians, a brave and stubborn people.

Nogi's outposts continue to maintain touch with the Russian army. The immediate military situation of the third army is unchanged.

Toronto, Ont., June 3. — The Hon. Nelson Monteith Minister of Agriculture, has just made the following appointments on the staff of the Macdonald Institute and Agricultural College, Guelph. Miss Isabella M. Speller, of Toronto, has been appointed instructor in domestic art, in place of Miss Roberts, who has resigned, to continue her studies abroad. Miss Grace Greenwood has been appointed instructor in domestic science, in place of Miss Pierce, resigned. Mr. Ernest W. Walker, manager of the Canadian Bank of Commerce, and who took rough on rats in Mr. Walker's house, when exposed, was sufficiently recovered to answer a charge of attempted suicide yesterday. The Frick Recommendations.

New York, June 3.—A director of the Equitable Life Assurance Society was quoted yesterday to the effect that the Frick report recommended that the directors appoint a committee of five to select a new president, first vice-president and second vice-president to succeed Messrs. Alexander, Hyde and Tarbell. Four members of this committee, it was said, had been agreed upon.

IN the Imperial Oxford we have not only given to the women of Canada the most perfect baking and roasting range but we have also produced the most economical?

The oven of the ordinary range is raised to a baking temperature by the direct heat of the fire on the side of the oven. To keep that oven at a sufficiently high temperature to bake or roast by, you must be continually poking the fire and adding fuel to it.

As the oven of the Imperial Oxford Range is heated by our patented Diffusive Flue, the temperature of the oven remains steady until the baking is done, without the necessity of touching or adding fuel to the fire.

Imperial Oxford Range

This fact is easily demonstrated. If, when an Imperial Oxford is going, you were to stop the inlet of this flue in the bottom of the range you would find by the thermometer that the oven was getting colder, and that to keep it at a baking temperature you would have to keep poking the fire and adding more coal just as with an ordinary range.

If your dealer doesn't handle the Imperial Oxford, write to us for catalogue and information as to where you can see it. 20

TOOK A SEVERE COLD.

It Settled In The Kidneys.

Pain In The Back The Result.

Catching cold and having it settle in the back is often the cause of Backache—the primary cause of kidney trouble. When the back aches it is a warning that the kidneys are liable to become affected.

If you don't, serious complications are very apt to arise. Mrs. E. Williams, Hamilton, Ont., caught cold, and it settled in her kidneys. She used and is thankful for the immediate relief they gave her. She writes us as follows:

"It is with pleasure that I add my testimony in favor of Doan's Kidney Pills. Some time ago I took a severe cold, which settled in my kidneys. The soreness and pain in the small of my back bothered me greatly. After suffering for some months, and finding numerous remedies fail, I procured a box of Doan's Kidney Pills, and received immediate relief from my sufferings.

INDIGESTION

The First Step Towards the Grave.

Indigestion, the first step towards a brokendown body, worn out nerves, and an early death can be prevented and cured.

Indigestion, that is improper digestion of your food, attacks the very citadel of your health. It tells of a weakened, debilitated system—frequently it is the first cause of these things. Its presence is known by numerous symptoms—acidity, wind, pains in the stomach or intestines, coated tongue, constipation and many more unnatural feelings. It is frequently the forerunner of more serious complaints such as appendicitis, typhoid, consumption, etc.

If your food is not properly digested you cannot obtain the nourishment sufficient to build up the waste tissues, to keep the blood healthy and good. Owing to the decay of this undigested food, poisons accumulate and are absorbed into your system. All this affects your nervous system, which begins to break up, you feel listless and disinclined for anything. BUT there is a cure for all these things, a marvellous restorative, one composite remedy which cures all these different ailments, because it cures their cause.

The Trappist's Phosphated Wine of Cinchona Bark, one of the most remarkable remedies ever discovered, which contains Phosphorus and Cinchona and other valuable substances in very active combination, rebuilds your failing health and strength, gives new life and vigor to the digestive and assimilative systems, and because of its unique action on the nerve centres several of the weakened organs feel its beneficial effects almost immediately.

It is very important in getting this remedy that you obtain The Trapist's Wine of Cinchona Bark. If you experience any difficulty, please order from

The hail was so thick that boats on the river were delayed as in a fog. The Algoma Central steamer King Edward was blown from her moorings at the company's docks and ashore, from which position she was afterwards relieved by tugs.

OUR LONDON LETTER

Mr. Chamberlain's Great Speech to Trades Union Delegates.

ONE OF BEST HE HAS MADE

Lord Salisbury's Correspondence with Col. Denison Over Fiscal Reform.

London, May 20, 1905.—I was present on Wednesday at the gathering of Trade Unionists and workingmen delegates from all parts of the Kingdom, which was addressed by Mr. Chamberlain in what his friends regard as the best speech he has made in the whole course of the fiscal movement. The meeting was certainly something of an eye-opener in its revelation of the extent to which the working classes of this country are beginning to ask themselves whether, after all, their interests are best served by Free Trade, or rather what Mr. Chamberlain himself prefers to call Cobdenism and Free Imports. There is no question by which English workingmen of all grades are more moved at the present moment than the question of alien immigration. They strenuously and almost unanimously object to the free introduction into this country of the denizens of European slums. How then can they rest content with the introduction of the goods which are made in these same European slums under conditions which the English law would emphatically forbid? In a word, it is useless to protect labor, as the English factory laws do, and endeavor to raise the standard of living among the English working classes, if, at the same time, you do not protect the product of labor. That is a Chamberlain argument which wins much working class cheering.

AMERICAN CAPITAL FOR ENGLAND.

Another significant point arising in the controversy is the effect which the altered system would have in attracting American and Continental capital to English industrialism. One of the big estates now under development in the Manchester district is the Trafford Park estate, and the manager of that estate recently told a friend that he had received something like six requests from American and European manufacturers desiring land options for the erection of factories to come into force in the event of an alteration in the free import system of this country. There is a formidable list of British manufacturers who have already been induced to take capital and labor to foreign countries, such as the late Mr. Mundella, Free Trader, lace factory removed to Germany; Mr. Jacoby, M. P., Free Trader, lace factory removed to Germany; Marshall and Co., Leeds, flax spinning mills, removed to America, 1886 (they used to employ 4000 hands); Finlayson and Bousefield, Johnstone, thread factories, set up in America; Messrs. Coats, Paisley, thread factories in America; Messrs. Clark, Paisley, thread factories in America; Lever Brothers, Port Sunlight, works in the United States and Germany; Thomas Firth and Sons, Sheffield, steel works opened in Russia; Johnson Bros., Ltd., Staffordshire, pottery works in Germany; Joseph Benn and Sons, Bradford, mohair spinning mill and factory, opening branch in America; J. Briggs and Co., Bradford, works in Warsaw, Russia; Bradford Dyers' Association, large works in Germany. In the case of this Trafford Park estate, we get an illustration of the probable reverse effect of an alteration in the British system.

THE LATE LORD SALISBURY AND CANADA.

Some little time ago the late Lord Salisbury's eldest son, himself a Cabinet Minister of the Balfourian type, made quite a stir in political circles here by declaring that his father, for whose memory and attainments as regards political opinions all Englishmen cherish the highest regard, was opposed to any such change of British policy as is contemplated by the Chamberlain movement. But "he smiles best who smiles last," and this week Colonel Denisoff, of Toronto, publishes in the Times a series of communications from the late Lord Salisbury, proving conclusively that he saw most clearly the ruinous effects which foreign tariffs must have upon British industry unless something is done to check them. Writing in 1892, for instance, Lord Salisbury said: "I wish there were more prospect of some fiscal arrangement which would meet the respective exigencies of England and Canada, but that appears still to be in the far distance." "I should be very glad," he wrote, "if I saw any immediate hope of our being able to assist you (in Canada) by a modification of our tariff arrangements." And in another letter written nine years late, in 1901, shortly before Lord Salisbury's final reshortly before Lord Salisbury's final reway in which the effects of free imports were accurately enough predicted 50 years ago when that policy was adopted, but predicted only to provoke the contempt and scorn of Cobdenites. The extracts as a whole are most instructive as proving in the words of Colonel Denison that personally Lord Salisbury "would have favored preferential tariffs in order to save and preserve a great Empire."

A WASHINGTON TURN-ABOUT.

Another most suggestive point has arisen this week. A Chicago correspondent informs the Times that for the first time in the history of the United States, United States Ministers are found recognizing that after all Great Britain and her colonies are the best customers of the United States, and that it is not the part of wisdom on behalf of Washington politicians to make enemies of them. In the old days, of course, as no one knows better than the Canadians, it was quite enough to say that a policy would hurt England to gain for it the enthusiastic support of large numbers of responsible American public men. Now we find a member of the United States Cabinet declaring "we have nothing to gain by a policy which would offend our best customer," and so on. The Chicago correspondent of the Times asks: What is responsible for this development of opinion? "Nothing but England's changed attitude towards a protective tariff. Unfairness to England here would mean a protective tariff victory there with grievous loss to American trade. Henceforth we must walk softly and forbear tail-twisting lest we offend our best customer. England has this as net profit from Mr. Chamberlain's propaganda, whether the actual adoption of his fiscal proposals would be good or bad."

LAKE VESSEL WENT ASHORE.

The H. M. Pellatt Got Out of Her Course in Lake Ontario.

Special to the Montreal Star.

Toronto, June 3.—It was reported here yesterday that the Canadian Lake and Ocean Navigation Company's steamer, the H. M. Pellatt, a twin screw vessel 250 feet long, valued at $80,000, which left here Wednesday night at one o'clock to call at Hamilton for freight on her way to Fort William, went twenty miles out of her course, and was finally beached at Grimsby. She was taken off at 11.30 o'clock, and arrived at Hamilton at one o'clock. Capt. Abrian, who is 50 years of age, and is one of the steadiest men on the lakes, was in charge. The cause for the vessel going out of her course cannot be heard from the company's office here. The vessel is reported undamaged.

BEVERLY MYSTERY CLEARED.

Boston, June 3. — The woman supposed to be Mrs. Waddell, wife of the slayer of John Fred Hayes, at Beverley last Friday, confesses she was not the wife of Waddell, and claims to be Mrs. Hayes, wife of the slain man. The record shows they were married on March 4th. For ten years the woman bore the name of Waddell, discarding it after finding Waddell had previously married a German woman in Manitoba, and that she had been duped into a fake marriage at Minneapolis. Her maiden name was Lindeberg, and she first met Waddell in Winnipeg. While believing she was legally Mrs. Waddell she went with Waddell to Toronto and Ottawa, remaining in the latter city two years. Waddell worked as an insurance agent there.

Rat Killed a Fine Trotter.

Lexington, Ky., June 3.—As the result of swallowing a live rat while eating oats out of his trough the noted trotting horse Corinthe, son of Oratorio, 2.13, died in great agony at his stable this city. While the horse was partaking of his feed, his groom noticed that he was acting queerly, but before medical aid could be summoned he began having convulsons and evidently suffered a horrible death.

After an examination had been made by the veterinarians it was found that the windpipe of the horse had been lacerated by the rat in its efforts to gnaw its way out of the throat. Veterinarians who attended the animal say it is the first case on record, so far as they know, where a horse experienced such a peculiar death.

I have to thank Psychine for my good health," writes the young lady whose face is pictured above. "I could hardly drag myself across the floor. I could not sweep the carpet. If I went for a drive I had to lie down when I came back. If I went for a mile or two on my wheel I returned too weak to lift it through the gateway. The last time I came in from having a spin I dropped utterly helpless from fatigue. My father would give me no peace until I tried the Dr. Slocum Remedies. After taking two bottles of Psychine I must say the results were wonderful. People were constantly remarking my improvement. I also took Coltsfoote Expectorant, and—mark the change. Instead of a little, pale, listless, hollow-cheeked girl, I am to-day full of life. I am ready for any active amusements with my friends, and a few months ago I could not struggle to the church that was only forty rods from our home."

The Manufacturers of Crude and Weak Dyes Offer Premiums to Druggists and Dealers to Sell Them to Unsuspecting Women.

Diamond Dyes have a most enviable past and present history for successes in home dyeing. Their fast, rich and fashionable colors have made them the most noted home dyes in the world.

The imitation and crude dyes made and sold for the immense profits they bring the makers of such trash, only result in dire destruction to useful and expensive goods requiring re-coloring. These adulterated dyes may be tolerated by some sections of our Indian population, but wise, prudent and cultured women select Diamond Dyes when they need pure, full and brilliant colors for home dyeing.

The proprietors of Diamond Dyes are not obliged to offer premiums to druggists and dealers who sell their dyes. Our progressive retailers, whose chief aim is to sell their customers the best dyes, do not ask for special inducements to sell Diamond Dyes; they are satisfied with the profits they make on their vast and daily increasing sales of Diamond Dyes.

It is the manufacturer of the common and crude dyes who is obliged to offer a few paltry cents per dozen to storekeepers to get them to introduce and push their deceptive dyes. It is not the retailer of the common dyes that should be paid by the manufacturers, it is the unfortunate women, who, after using such dyestuffs, find their dresses, skirts, jackets, capes, blouses, ribbons and other materials ruined forever.

Diamond Dyes give the ladies a choice of 48 colors, 32 for wool and silk and 16 for cotton and all mixed goods, each dye guaranteed to do its special work.

Makers of the adulterated dyes deceive people when they tell them that any one of their dyes will color any kind of fabric. Such a statement is stupidly false.

It is asserted by the ablest color chemists that the Diamond Dyes are the only correct and reliable colors for home use, and these experts hold that the theory of special colors for wool, silk, cotton and mixed goods is the true and correct one.

Seeing that imitation and crude dyes are sold by some dealers, ladies who ask for the Diamond Dyes should see that the name "DIAMOND" appears on each package. Remember, "It's easy to dye with Diamond Dyes."

Fear Duplication of Land Frauds.

San Francisco, June 3. — The Examiner says: The story of land frauds in Oregon will be duplicated in California by the discovery of an elaborate system of robbery under color of law, by which means, with the help of forgery, great bodies of the public domain in Modoc and other northern counties have been brought under private ownership. In many instances this process has been worked out by means of dummy locaters, but in some cases, of which the Examiner has proofs, the land thieves, grown bold by long immunity, have forged names of applicants on the files of the Surveyor-General's Office.

British Military Stores Scandal.

London, June 3. — According to the Daily Mirror, the report of a war office committee on the improper disposal of military stores at the conclusion of the South African war, reveals a huge scandal. The report, the paper says, censures a number of officers whose names are given and who are alleged to have worked in collusion with contractors. The latter bought stores at absurdly low prices and afterwards resold them to the military authorities at enormous profits, entailing a loss to the government of $5,000,000.

A Moment's Thought

About 'That Old Reliable'

The Montreal Business College

(Established 1864)

Cor. of St. Catherine and University Streets.

Do you think that, with the time of our foundation dating back forty years, we would be in existence to-day; unless our methods had always given universal satisfaction?

Do you think we would have installed complete and entirely new equipment in every department, unless we were working along our usual lines to keep 'Just Five Years Ahead' of all other commercial institutions?

Do you think that, in addition to our incomparable bookkeeping courses, we would have introduced the most complete and exhaustive sets of 'Loose-leaf' and 'Card' systems obtainable, unless we were were bound to maintain the title given us by those who know?

Do you think our typewriting department would have been remodelled and enlarged by the addition of the greatest number of machines of standard makes ever used in a school, unless we were determined to be the most up-to-date "College of Commerce" in the Dominion?

Do you think that our large patronage of other years would have increased fifty per cent. in the last ten months without good reasons?

Do you think what a thorough and practical knowledge of stenography or bookkeeping means to its possessor?

Do you think that the "Short Summer Course" of this college, embodying the subjects and teaching it does, is to be compared with the inferior and inefficient "Summer Courses" annually held at "health resorts" and at some of the so-called "Business Colleges,"—Institutions of Business in name only?

Do you think we would invite the strictest investigation of our methods of teaching; unless we knew our courses, staff and equipment could not be improved in any way.

Do you think we would guarantee satisfaction with this institution, unless we were positive you would be satisfied?

BRITISH LIBERAL CABINET.

Politicians Making Slates on Possibility of a Liberal Victory.

Strong in faith and hope, the Liberal party are beginning to count their chickens, says the London Daily Mail. The winter and early spring have passed in Cabinet-making; the later spring has been spent in realising the difficulties of the situation and reconstructing the Cabinets. The following list is given to us as representing the latest official arrangements. It is based on the supposition—once possible, but now growing daily less probable—that there will be an election in the autumn, and that the Liberal party will obtain a majority of about thirty-five over the Unionist and Irish parties.

The new Government, we are further assured, is not expected to last long in this form. Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman will probably retire to the House of Lords as Lord President of the Council at an early stage of its life and leave the leadership of the House of Commons to Mr. Asquith.

Prime Minister	Earl Spencer
First Lord of Treasury and Leader of House of Commons	Sir H. C.-Bannerman
Lord Chancellor	Mr. Haldane
Chancellor of Exchequer	Mr. Asquith
Secretaries of State:
Foreign Affairs	Earl of Rosebery
Home Affairs	Sir Robert Reid
War	Lord Tweedmouth
Colonies	Sir Edward Grey
India	Lord Burghclere
Chief Secretary to the Lord-Lieut. of Ireland	Mr. H. Gladstone
Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster	Mr. Lloyd-George
President of the Local Government Board	Mr. Sydney Buxton
Secretary for Scotland	Earl of Aberdeen
Viceroy of Ireland	Earl Carrington
Viceroy of India	Earl of Crewe

The list is obviously incomplete. Posts such as the President of the Council, Lord Privy Seal, First Lord of the Admiralty, Postmaster General, Lord Chancellor of Ireland, and Presidents of the Board of Education and Board of Agriculture, not to mention all the Court appointments, are unfilled; and essential names such as those of John Morley, Lord Ripon, Mr. Robson, Mr. Bryce, Mr. Acland, Mr. Birrell, Sir Henry Fowler, Lord Elgin, Mr. Perks, Mr. Emmott, and numerous others are missing.

These posts and names can, of course, be combined according to fancy. Mr. Bryce is talked of to fill the new post of Minister of Commerce; Mr. Birrell is sure of a legal post; and Sir Henry Fowler, with his great knowledge of finance, and Lord Elgin, with his tact and oratorical powers and famous name, are sure of office. Mr. John Morley's Home Rule views are regarded with unspeakable dread; but he will of course, be in the Cabinet. Mr. Freeman Thomas may be a Whip.

It is highly improbable, we understand, that Mr. Winston Churchill will be offered any position in the Government at first.

HERCA

This leaves a surface which will permit of adulteration—but it also takes the life out of the silk.

Upon this surface the arts of the silk-cheapener are practiced. The quantity is doubled by the addition of loading mixtures. Half the product is poor-wearing, lifeless silk, and the balance is not silk at all.

"Herca" taffeta is pure silk, nothing but the delicate strands of the cocoon of the silk-worm are used. These are woven, dyed and finished by a secret process that preserves the pureness of the silk and the permanence of the color.

Silk insurance!

That is exactly what "Herca" means when you find it perforated in the selvage of a taffeta.

It is an absolute guarantee that that particular piece of silk will wear for at least eighteen months without showing it.

Tested by actual wear—as severe wear as silk ever gets—it wears for years without splitting, cutting, tearing or wearing into holes.

Don't you think such a silk as "Herca" is worth asking for—and being sure you get? For dresses, waists or linings it is unequalled.

We would particularly like you to look at "Herca" taffeta—your dealer can show it to you.

For your protection, the selvage of every fold is perforated with the name "Herca"—look for it.

BYE-ELECTIONS IN ONTARIO

Great Excitement Over Election Contest in North Oxford.

MAY BE THIRD CANDIDATE

The Both Parties are Nerving Themselves for Next Week's Effort.

Special to The Montreal Star.

Woodstock, Ont., June 3.—The north riding of Oxford is to-day experiencing an election contest never before equalled in interest in the political history of this historic constituency.

The educational clause of the Autonomy bill is the sole issue.

Although North Oxford for over a quarter of a century has been a Liberal stronghold, giving the Liberal nominee as great a majority as 1,500 on one occasion, yet the supporters of the party are deserting in such numbers in this contest as to render the chances of the Conservative nominee for election extremely encouraging. There is widespread dissension in the Liberal ranks. The "no coercion" section is gaining in strength daily. They are seriously considering the question of bringing out a candidate to support their views, and oppose the nominee of the party, Mr. George Smith.

Should they do so, it will mean the defeat of the latter, and the return of Mr. J. G. Wallace, the Conservative nominee. If they do not nominate a candidate of their own, the majority of them will undoubtedly support Mr. Wallace, while the others will not go to the polls at all.

The trouble arises over Mr. Smith's declaration to-day that he is in full accord with the Government on the Autonomy Bill. This admission was forced from him by the Liberal party managers. Personally he was opposed to the educational clauses, but the Government threatened to withdraw all their support if he did not come out definitely in support of their policy. He yielded to the hold-up after three days' silence.

Previous to the Liberal convention he canvassed for votes as an opponent of the autonomy measure, thereby gained supporters, particularly from the Baptist and Presbyterian bodies. Now he has gone back on these.

The speaking forces of both parties are assembled here. Last evening R. B. Bennett, of Calgary, addressed 2,000 in the Woodstock Opera House. Hon. Mr. Fisher filled equally successfully another hall. The same measure of success follows the Conservative nominee in his campaign throughout the rural section of the riding.

Hon. Mr. Oliver, B. Turiff, Mr. Talbot and W. S. Calvert are here supporting Mr. Smith. This evening Mr. Bennett meets Mr. Oliver in the Opera House.

On Monday evening Mr. R. L. Borden and Mr. Haultain will speak in this city, and on Tuesday evening Hon. Clifford Sifton, Sir Wm. Mulock and Hon. Wm. Patterson appear for the Liberals. Both parties are perfecting their organization, and one of the hardest fought contests ever held in Canada will be fought out here within the next ten days.

THE FIGHT IN LONDON.

Both parties are working as never before, and present indications are that the result will be close. The school issue has caused a loss to the Conservative party of the few Roman Catholics remaining in their ranks. It is said that a mandate has been issued by the bishop declaring that the present is the time when the faithful must prove true to the church.

Meanwhile a strong movement has appeared amongst Baptists, who are largely Liberal, against the Government's school policy, which the Conservatives claim will offset the Catholic defection.

At the same time the cry of a Cabinet Minister for London is having a considerable weight with all. Neither side can be said to be confident.

It's a campaign of oratory. Cabinet Ministers and M.P.'s taking part. The Conservatives have had Hon. Geo. E. Foster and Mr. Bennett, of N. W. Council, already this week, and to-night Mr. R. L. Borden will be here.

Last night Mr. McDonald of Pictou spoke for Hyman, and there are more to follow.

MURDER CASE RECALLED.

Special to the Montreal Star.

St. Louis, Mo., June 3.—An old purse containing a G. T. R. ticket from Toronto to Montreal, made out to C. A. Preller, who was murdered in 1885 at the Southern Hotel, St. Louis, by his associate, a man named Maxwell, was found yesterday in a heap of rubbish by a janitor. Accompanying the purse were several notebooks containing the business notes taken by Preller and Maxwell on their Canadian trip. How the purse and notebooks reached the rubbish heap is a mystery. The purse, it is understood, is one that was found at the time of the murder, and it helped to establish the identity of the dead man, whose body had been placed in a trunk. Maxwell was arrested in Auckland, New Zealand, by a Toronto man, serving in the St. Louis detective force, and was brought back to St. Louis and hanged.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Loring, of Montreal, sailed for Liverpool this morning from New York, on the Campania.

ROMANCE OF THE LAW COURTS

ANCESTOR OWNED IT IN 1732

They Want Forty Acres of the Property or $50,000 in Money Instead.

A claim for a portion of Fletcher's Field or $50,000 in cash as the value thereof was entered in court yesterday by J. Napthalie Poirier and other heirs of Jean Baptiste Poirier, who died on March 8, 1863. Mr. Stanley Clark Bagg, who sold Fletcher's Field to the city in 1875, is called into the case to help the city defend the action.

Documents filed in the case show that in 1732, before Maitre Raimbault, a royal notary, Jean Baptiste Perry Lehay, of Montreal, ceded to Jean Poirier, of Cote St. Pierre, forty acres of land near the mountain.

Sieur Jean Poirier died in 1772, and his wife, Dame Marguerite Jarry, had died ten years previously. They left five sons, and three grandchildren, issue of their son Joseph Marie, who died in 1755. The three grandchildren were Joseph Marie, Veronique and Jean Baptiste. The genealogy is traced through several generations, making a will being one of the things which the successive Poiriers never seem to have done. The descent seems to be traced accurately, however, to the present claimants, who have never renounced their succession to the portion of forty acres which came to them from their ancestors.

As the city bought the land thirty years ago, it was necessary that the claim be filed this year, otherwise the claim would have been proscribed by lapse of time.

HARBOR BOARD LITTLE BILL.

They Have to Pay Over $16,000 for Advice.

A bill for $16,407 was the fruitful topic of discussion at the meeting of the Montreal Harbor Board yesterday afternoon. The account question came from the J. S. Metcalfe Company, Chicago, who had been called in for expert advice concerning grain conveyers, galleries, etc., in connection with the harbor improvements.

An order from the Board had given Mr. John Kennedy, chief engineer, authority to engage advice, and now the company in question had sent in a bill for $16,000, which is 3 1-2 per cent. commission on an estimated outlay of $533,000.

Some of the commissioners expressed the opinion that no one had authorized Mr. Kennedy to engage anyone to do work of this character to the extent of $16,000. A resolution had been passed that such assistance as might be required could be obtained. There was, however, no resolution which covered the expenditure, and in the opinion of some of the commissioners, Mr. Kennedy should have brought the matter before the board previous to contracting for any such expenditure.

The Chief Engineer contended that he did not make a contract, but that under the resolution he had been authorized to obtain expert assistance, and that he had done so.

Mr. Doran finally moved that the president and the secretary be authorized to enter into an agreement with Mr. Metcalfe for designing and superintending the conveyers and the complete equipment, thereof, at 3 1-2 per cent. on the cost, and 1 1-2 per cent. on the actual cost of the structural work.

This was seconded by Mr. McFee, and was adopted.

A communication was read from the Business Men's League, stating that it intended to issue a tasteful publication of Montreal and its surroundings, and soliciting a subscription.

The president suggested $100, and on motion of Mr. Geoffrion, seconded by Mayor Laporte, this was agreed to, Mr. Racine dissenting, on the ground that the Board had not yet the power to make any such grant.

M'GILL MAN DIED SUDDENLY.

He Was 28 Years of Age and in Third Year Medicine.

A McGill medical student, C. A. Kinlock, died suddenly in a St. Dominique street house last night. The circumstances were reported to the coroner and the body was taken to the morgue. Deceased had boarded at 13 Durocher street. He was 28 years of age, and in his third year in medicine. It is suspected that the sudden taking-off was due to heart failure.

Bush Fires at Murray Bay.

For three days an extensive bush fire has been raging west of Murray Bay. The Laferriere Lumber Company's timber limits are reported to have suffered enormous damages, twenty-two of their camps having already been burned.

One hundred drivers have reached Murray Bay quite exhausted, having had nothing to eat for hours. Sixteen men are yet in the bush and are in peril of losing their lives.

The Disraeli Conservative Club.

There will be a special meeting of the Disraeli Conservative Club, on Monday evening, in the Empire Hall, corner St. Catherine and St. Lawrence streets. Mrs. Fayette Brown and Miss Dorothy Brown have returned from Knowlton, where they spent a week.

IS THE STOCK TAX ILLEGAL?

A. W. Atwater Expresses Opinion That It Is Ultra Vires.

CLAIMS IT IS INDIRECT TAX

Decisions of Privy Council Cited in Support of Contention Tax Cannot Be Collected.

Mr. A. W. Atwater, K.C., a former Provincial Treasurer, has just given an opinion in reply to a request of Mr. R. Wilson-Smith, declaring the proposed tax on Stock Exchange transfers to be ultra vires of the Quebec Legislature, and, therefore, illegal. Mr. Atwater's opinion reads as follows:

"The principal question is as to whether the tax thus sought to be imposed by the Quebec Legislature is one which, under the terms of the British North America Act, the Legislature of the province can impose.

"By section 92 of the act, sub-sec. 2, the provinces are given the right to impose direct taxation within the province, for the raising of the revenue for provincial purposes.

"The powers of the province are limited by the Confederation Act, as far as taxation is concerned, to impose direct taxation within the province. The question is, therefore, whether this is a direct or an indirect tax. The question of what is direct taxation has been treated by a number of lexicographers, as well as political economists, and these definitions have, in their turn, been the subject of judicial consideration, and have also been considered in cases where they have come before the courts and before the Privy Council, where their meaning in connection with this same section of the British North America Act has been considered.

"In the case of Angers, es qual, vs. the Queen Insurance Company, the right of the Provincial Legislature to impose a tax upon insurance companies, in the shape of a license to be paid by stamps, which were to be fixed to the policies or premiums receipts issued, the meaning of the words 'direct taxation' was discussed. In this case, the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council confirmed the judgment of the Court of Queen's Bench for the province of Quebec, and of the Superior Court, and declared the act unconstitutional.

"In the case of Lambe vs. the Bank of Toronto, the meaning of the words "direct taxation" was also considered by the Privy Council, and the definition of these words, as given by John Stuart Mill, was accepted as being one which is sufficiently acurate to define the difference between these two classes of taxes, and as one which was likely to have been present in the minds of those who passed the Confederation Act. This definition is quoted as follows:

"'A direct tax is one which is demanded from the very person who it is intended or desired should pay it. Indirect taxes are those which are demanded from one person in the expectation and intention that he shall indemnify himself at the expense of another. Such are the excise or customs. The producer or importer of a commodity is called upon to pay a tax on it, not with the intention to levy a contribution upon him, but to tax through him the consumers of the commodity, from whom it is supposed he will recover the amount by means of an advance in price.'

"The stamp acts, under the authorities which I have cited, may be regarded as acts providing for the raising of money by indirect taxation.

"The entire section provides that the stamps shall be supplied and fixed by the vendor, transferrer, or assignor, or by a broker, who is entitled to recover the costs from the vendor, transferrer, etc. I cannot think that this provision alone changes the character of the act so as to make it a direct tax.

"It is not a tax upon companies whose stock or bonds are being transferred. It is not a tax or a license fee payable by brokers or those who deal in stocks or bonds, but it is a tax nominally imposed upon the vendor upon each contract of sale of security, and which is based upon the par value of the securities sold, and which is to be paid by means of stamps affixed to the contract or other written evidence of the transaction.

"By the act which imposes this tax, the provisions of the general law relating to the issue and sale of stamps are made applicable to it, and the very fact that the law requires that this tax shall be paid in stamps, which may be purchased by any one, and affixed by the purchaser of the securities, as well as by the vendor, demonstrates its indirect character.

"It seems to me that it was a matter of indifference to the legislature who paid for the stamps which are affixed to these transactions, and that it must have been contemplated that the vendor of a security would take the fact of the payment of this tax into consideration in fixing the price at which he would sell, and that, therefore, it would enter into the price and become payable, not by the vendor, but by the purchaser. It must, I think, have been the expectation and intention that the vendor would indemnify himself at the expense of the purchaser, and that, therefore, it would be an indirect tax, quite as much as customs or excise duty, which, though paid by the original importer or manufacturer, would be taken into consideration by him in fixing the price at which the imported or manufactured article would be sold.

"If a tax were imposed by the provincial legislature upon the sale of any article of commerce — say, boots and shoes—payable in the shape of a stamp to be affixed to the article, I think it would be considered that in practice this would be a tax which would be added immediately to the price of the article sold, and would come within the definition of an indirect tax, and I cannot see any distinction between such a tax as applied to commercial securities and as applied to vendable articles of commerce.

"On consideration of the whole act, I am of opinion that the tax provided for would be held to be an indirect and not a direct one, and in consequence would be ultra vires of the provincial legislature."

Hon. Lomer Gouin, Premier and Attorney-General, when seen by a Star reporter, with regard to the stock transfer tax, said: "The bill imposing the tax was submitted to the law officers of the Crown, and carefully studied. We are certainly of the opinion that the tax is both constitutional and intra vires. If any parties think otherwise they are free to attack the tax in the courts and make a test case."

MISS CLOUSTON'S SUDDEN DEATH

The Daughter of Bank of Montreal Manager Falls Dead.

JUST BACK FROM EUROPE

Miss Clouston to Have Been Bridesmaid Next Week and Came Home for That Purpose.

The deepest sympathy has been aroused by the death of Miss Osla Seaborne Clouston, elder daughter of Mr. E. S. Clouston, general manager of the Bank of Monteral, which occurred suddenly at the residence of her father, No. 362 Peel street, early last evening.

Mrs. Clouston, accompanied by Miss Clouston and Miss Marjory Clouston, only returned yesterday morning from Europe, having arrived in New York the day before on the Oceanic. Last evening the young ladies were preparing to attend the dinner Lady Allan was giving for Miss Evelyn Mackenzie and the attendants at her marriage, when Miss Clouston became suddenly ill, and expired almost immediately.

Miss Clouston and her sister were to have acted as bridesmaids next week at the marriage of Miss Mackenzie to Mr. Lissant Beardmore, of Toronto, and had returned home from Europe especially to attend the wedding.

Mr. E. S. Clouston, who was in England with his family, is still abroad, it being originally planned that he would sail for home on the 9th inst.

WON C. O.'S CUP OF THE ROYAL SCOTS.

CAPT. PEERS DAVIDSON.

The C.O.'s Cup for the company of the Royal Scots passing the best drill inspection has been won this year by No. 8 company, under Captain Peers Davidson. The announcement of the award has confirmed the opinion—long held by many in the regiment—that the younger companies were fast qualifying to more than hold their own with those who had long monopolized possession of the cups and prizes. Number Eight is the youngest company in the regiment and yet scored 48 out of a possible 50 points. It also received top marks in the field officers' competition for general efficiency.

PRESIDENT ADVISES THEM TO MAKE PEACE

Held a Conference With The Russian Ambassador.

Washington, June 3. — President Roosevelt, in a conference at the White House yesterday, with Count Cassini, the Russian Ambassador, expressed the earnest hope that Russia would forthwith conclude peace with Japan. Prolongation of the war, he believes, will not result in a victory for the Russian arms, and can only serve to increase Japan's demands, and render more difficult the drafting of a treaty of peace, which the Czar as well as the Mikado can sign. The President spoke, he said, as the friend of Russia, no less than of Japan, and on behalf not only of the Washington Government, but in the interest of humanity. Until his words have reached Tsarskoe-Selo and have been communicated to Emperor Nicholas in the friendly spirit in which they were uttered, their effect can not be estimated.

Intercolonial Railway Service.

RECEPTION SESSION OF THE CONFERENCE

Two Young Ministers Received Into Full Connection.

THE ANNUAL STATEMENTS

Rev. Mr. Griffin Reports on the Condition of the Superannuation Fund.

Special to the Montreal Star.

Ottawa, June 3.—The session of the Montreal Conference last evening was the annual reception service and was the most impressive and interesting of all the conference sessions. T. Anson Halpenny, B.A., and James R. R. Cooper, B.A., B.D., were received into full connection. James E. Blanchard was also presented to the conference and, with Mr. Cooper and Perry S. Dobson, B.A., will be ordained to-morrow morning. The president of the conference, Rev. W. H. Sparling, called on Messrs. Halpenny and Cooper to state what they regarded as their call to the Christian ministry. Both young men made a most favorable impression by their manly, outspoken manner and the evident ability shown by their brief remarks. Both attributed their Christian life to early home influences and said they could not tell when they were converted. Rev. C. A. Sykes and Rev. James Elliott moved that the young men be received into full connection, and in doing so delivered able and helpful discourses. The resolution was formally carried, after which Rev. Mr. Sparling extended the right hand of fellowship and welcomed them into the brotherhood of the ministry.

A feature of the afternoon session was the cordial greetings extended by Rev. Dr. Armstrong and Rev. J. W. H. Milne, representatives of the Ottawa Presbyterian Ministerial Association. Both delegates also came out very strongly in favor of an organic union of the two denominations. Both spoke of the friendly relations between the two denominations, the great in doctrine and church management, and paid a tribute to Methodism as having taught the Presbyterians to have more ginger and go and to develop the spirit of good fellowship. They said an organic union was not only desirable and practicable, but was very probable at no distant day.

Rev. Dr. Wm. Jackson and Rev. Dr. Ryckman moved a resolution, which was unanimously carried, expressing reciprocation of the friendly greetings. The good-fellowship between the two denominations was further shown by the adoption of a motion by Rev. E. Thomas to send a deputation representing the Montreal Conference to convey greetings to the Presbyterian General Assembly, which will meet next month in Kingston.

Rev. Dr. Griffin, Toronto, general treasurer of the Superannuation Fund, presented his annual report and also dealt with the General Conference fund and the Church and Parsonage fund. During the year $9,723 was received for the Church and Parsonage fund, and $7,585 was loaned for new churches and parsonages. There is a balance in this fund of $1,545. The capital fund is $23,000.

The General Conference fund, which went $12,000 in the hole over the expense of the General Conference in Winnipeg, is gradually getting right again. Among the expenses paid out of this fund was $1,400, the Methodist Church share of the Church Union Committee expense.

The Superannuation fund receipts for the year were $132,700, made up as follows: Circuits and missions, $67,900; departments and institutions, $4,500; ministers and probationers, $16,300; interest on investment, $32,900; Book Room, $12,000. The expenditure was $124,500, of which 278 ministers received $78,400; 226 widows, $27,000, and 60 children, $1,200. The capital stock is $282,726, which is invested in book rooms, debentures, bonds and stocks.

As to the status of the fund, Rev. Dr. Griffin said one member of the commission appointed by the General Conference to investigate it claims that to be safe the capital should be at least a million and a quarter dollars. Others on the commission from expert evidence and enquiries made figures that the fund is right. It is pointed out that the annual receipts from the book rooms, circuits and ministers' assessments, which will continue all right as long as the church lasts, would represent a capital of over three million dollars.

In defence of the fund and in reply to some who ask why don't ministers provide for themselves, Rev. Dr. Griffin said if ministers were expected to provide for their future they would have to be given a free hand, to get the best circuit they could and not be forced to go where sent, take what is paid and quit when told. Some ministers who tried to provide for the future by going into secular enterprises, lost the spirit of the Master and devotion to the work and often suffered temporal as well as spiritual loss. The church, he said, has therefore told the ministers to keep out of saw mills, stores, stocks or horse trades and to keep only one business, that of preaching Christ and Him crucified, and that the church would take care of them.

The Lay Association of the conference organized with the following officers: President, Charles Morton, Montreal; vice-president, W. C. Perkins, Ottawa; secretary-treasurer, J. H. Carson, Montreal; assistant, J. L. Spence, Ottawa; committee, W. H. Lambly, Inverness; T. F. Harrison, Kingston; S. A. Wright, Kemptville; A. B. Vancamp, Cardinal and J. R. Lavalle, Smith's Falls.

PROPOSED COTTON MERGER.

The general meeting of the Montreal Cotton Company stockholders, called for noon on Monday, is likely to develop some interesting phases respecting the attempt to merge that corporation into the Dominion Textile Company.

It is understood that Mr. E. R. Wood, of Toronto, has, on behalf of Senator Cox, made a cash offer of $140 for the three millions of stock of the Montreal Cotton Company.

Mr. David Yulie, who has been active in the attempt to get the Montreal Cotton shareholders into line, is now, it is said, offering large holders $100 in cash, $25 in preferred and common stock in proportion of one share in four, for each share of Montreal Cotton held.

TERMINAL ASK CONSIDERATION

WANT $25,000 DEPOSIT BACK

Consented to Onerous Terms at Outset But Want Same Treatment as Montreal Street Railway.

When the Road Committee met yesterday afternon, Mr. J. P. Mullarkey, president and general manager of the Terminal Committee, appeared before that body and asked that the conditions governing his road be drastically altered.

He said that the line which the Terminal operated within the city limits was burdened with so many onerous conditions that it could not make a living. He could see no justice whatever in allowing the Montreal Street Railway Company to operate under the most favorable terms, and to make the terms for the Terminal so burdensome that not a dollar of profit could be made.

The Terminal Company was bound to remove all the snow, pay for heavy expropriations, and give a dozen other concessions to the city and to citizens that the Montreal Street Railway Company had not to be borne down with.

It was true that the Terminal Company had consented to the burdensome terms; at the same time it had now been found that the Terminal Company had been too generous.

The main modifications suggested by Mr. Mullarkey were that the company be relieved of the construction and maintenance of streets through which its lines run, that it be not obliged to purchase land to open up streets on its route, and that the deposit of $25,000, made by the company on its organization be now refunded. In regard to the refund, the general manager stated that he was merely asking for what had been done for the Montreal Street Railway some years go. The deposit had been demanded as a guarantee of good faith, and the company had since fulfilled its obligations.

It was decided that the chairman and the City Surveyor should be appointed to examine the by-law concerning the company. Later a meeting will be held to thoroughly discuss the request of Mr. Mullarkey.

Ald. Bastien and other members took the occasion to say that they were opposed to the Montreal Street Railway Company being put on such a footing that another company was not able to make a living. Montreal needed two local companies; such being the case they should both receive the same treatment.

The subject then dropped.

Two petitions were read asking the committee to build a sewer along Cedar Avenue to Pine Avenue. The first was from Dr. Mackenzie Forbes, representing the Children's Memorial Hospital, and the second from landowners on Cedar Ave. Dr. Forbes explained to the committee that the directors of the hospital scheme had secured an option on a site for the building on Cedar Ave., but it would be useless to purchase the land and proceed with the work of building until a sewer had been installed. As soon as this was done the site would be purchased and the hospital built. The total cost of the sewer would be about $9,400; the city's share of the sum would be about $3,000.

The chairman said the work ought to be done at once; but unfortunately there was no cash on hand.

Dr. Forbes—"A case of such urgency ought to get special attention. Surely the city can find enough of money for the work."

Ald. Sadler, Turner and others pleaded that something be done to find the money somewhere.

It was finally decided to refer the request to the Health and Finance Committees. It is likely money will now be found for the work.

Battling Nelson in a Draw.

Baltimore, Md., June 3.—The six-round fight tonight between Battling Nelson, of Chicago, and "Kid" Sullivan, of Washington, was the hottest contest seen here for many a day. To the spectators, apparently without exception, Sullivan seemed to have much the best of it, landing on Nelson's head and neck repeatedly, and usually getting in a stiff punch in breaking from the frequent clinches. In the fourth round he knocked Nelson through the ropes. Nelson's blows were nearly all landed at close quarters, and he showed an inclination to hold more than the spectators thought proper. Referee William Roeap, of Philadelphia, called it a draw.

BONAPARTE A TRUST BREAKER

Will Be Made Attorney-General When Moody Retires.

Special to The Montreal Star.

Washington, June 3.—Charles J. Bonaparte, whom President Roosevelt has selected to succeed Paul Morton as Secretary of the Navy after July 1, will probably become Attorney-General when Mr. Moody retires from that office one year hence.

Bonaparte is regarded as an able lawyer and an ardent reformer—just the kind of a man the President believes he needs to hunt the bad trusts, rebate givers and dishonest public officials.

The Department of Justice is a better field for that kind of work than the Navy Department, and Mr. Moody has decided to return to the practice of law in about a year.

The real object of taking Bonaparte into the cabinet at this time is to familiarize him with Roosevelt's policy relative to the trusts. It is expected that Bonaparte will take the championship as a "Trust Buster."

The St. John River Trouble.

Special to The Montreal Star.

Ottawa, June 3.—Hon. John Costigan states that the difficulty on the St. John River is not between Canadian and American lumbermen as such, but between the rival interests of Canadian and American lumbermen on one side of the river and those on the other. "To collect all their logs," said Mr. Costigan, "the Vanburen Lumber Company built wing booms into the mid-stream of the St. John River. Mr. Pond, of the New Brunswick Company, claims the passage of his booms was obstructed. Hence the trouble. The whole trouble has arisen out of the difficulty of collecting logs. This it was proposed to obviate by building a dam at Winding Ledge, a few miles above where the trouble has occurred, where a boom company would collect logs for the owners and run them through separately, but the application for a charter was refused. Some such arrangement, I think, is the only solution of the difficulty. I am strongly of the opinion that a reasonable interpretation of article 111 of the Ashburton treaty, which makes provision for navigating the St. John River, will afford a satisfactory solution of the trouble, for, while it forbids obstruction of the stream, it makes provision for the free passage of commerce upon its waters."

Lived Life of a Hermit.

Special to the Montreal Star.

Amherst, N.S., June 3. — Benjamin P. Bent, aged 70, was last night found dead in his home, about two miles from Amherst, by his son, who went to ascertain why he had not visited town during the past few days. Appearances would indicate that he had been dead several days.

His nose was eaten off by rats, and one foot and hand were also badly gnawed. Deceased had for some time lived the life of a hermit in an old shack in the outskirts of the town, refusing to live with his wife and family, who resided in Amherst. He, however, paid almost daily visits to some members of the family, his last visit being on Saturday last, when he appeared in his usual health. He was last seen alive by neighbors on Sunday.

The Ottawa eleven was the same as yesterday.

OTTAWA ELEVEN WON AGAIN.

On Account of Rain Match Did Not Start Till Afternoon.

The last of the three games to be played by the Ottawa men on their present trip will be on the McGill campus to-day, wickets to be pitched at 11 o'clock. McGill has a strong student representation on the eleven this year, Richards in particular, having distinguished himself already this season by good all-round work. Against Ottawa on the league team he ran up an excellent 28, and in addition to his batting ability, he has shown considerable skill both as a bowler and a wicket keeper. Hill and Baber will likely figure on the college eleven, and all around McGill ought to make a better stand than the other two teams have done.

Ottawa won yesterday by 72 runs with five wickets to spare.

Owing to the heavy rain of the morning, play did not commence until 2.30 o'clock in the afternoon. Montreal won the toss, and went in to bat first, Ferrabee and Moberly facing the bowling of McGiverin and Johnson. Moberly was called out on leg before wicket before he had secured a tally. Moberly made a stand for 15, but with the exception of the Montreal captain and McCallum the others succumbed without reaching double figures. McGiverin's slow and medium ball on the sticky wicket proved deadly, and his nine wickets were taken for only 33 runs.

Ottawa went in under even worse conditions than had faced the Montreal batters, but the first three men up alone made a sufficient score to win the game. Johnson and McGiverin sixth and seventh wickets made a strong stand, and when stumps were drawn at 6 o'clock, the former had run up 48, not out, and the latter 11, also not out.

Yesterday's scores were:

Leroy Pitched Good Ball But Hits Were Bunched

Special to The Montreal Star.

Providence, R. I., June 3.—Providence vanquished Montreal with comparative ease at Melrose Park yesterday, by the score of 7 to 2, superior work with the willow telling the tale of the visitor's defeat. Leroy, who was in the points for the Montreal team, pitched excellent ball, striking out nine of the hard-hitting grays. But twelve rugged hits, accompanied with three errors at critical times, proved to be too much of a handicap to be overcome. Nops did brilliant work and was excellently supported. Catches of two hard line drives by McFarland in the left garden being the star order.

Providence started in scoring in the initial inning, the ball getting on the circuit with a single and coming on a triple by McFarland. The latter in turn completed the diamond on Brodie's put out. Another tally was added in the fifth. Dillard scoring on a hit by Nops, after he had gained first on a passed third strike and had reached second on Rock's hit. Dunn and Brodie, after singling, advanced on Conn's sacrifice and scored on a single by Jacklitsch.

Montreal scored their first in the first half of the sixth, when Joyce made a pretty double and scored on a 3-bagger by Bannon. M. n. B n on came home on Meaney's fly to deep centre. A scratch hit by Joyce resulted in another tally in the eighth inning, a pretty single by Dyer being the means of sending him across the plate.

Providence's last brace of runs was made in the sixth, when Nops singled and Ball doubled. McFarland struck out, but Dun sent Nops home with a single, and Ball followed across the rubber, when Gibson dropped Lachance's throw after Brodie had been retired at first.

HANLON WON IN TWENTIETH.

Young Corbett and He Went the Limit Last Night.

San Francisco, June 3.—Eddie Hanlon boxed "Young Corbett" to a standstill here last night during the last few rounds of a 20-round contest and got a hard-earned decision from Referee Homan at the end of the twentieth round. The match was an exciting one from start to finish. During the first part of the contest Hanlon had a slight advantage, but no harm was done to either man until the eleventh round. Then Hanlon rushed Corbett to the ropes, but the Denver man stalled Hanlon off and blocked a number of stomach punches. Corbett got to the centre of the ring and in a mix-up put left and right swings on Hanlon's jaw. Hanlon went to his knees and took the count of nine. He came up fighting and in spite of Corbett's strenuous efforts to put him out he finished the round strong. For the next four rounds Corbett went at his man, and in the thirteenth had Hanlon very tired. Hanlon braced up in the fourteenth, and seemed to have a slight margin over Corbett. The fifteenth round was about even. Hanlon landed a left and right to the jaw, but did no harm. The sixteenth round was Corbett's. The seventeenth was Hanlon's round. The eighteenth was about even, although Corbett had a shade the better of it at the end.

The 19th and 20th were all Hanlon's. All during the 19th he stood up close to Corbett, pounding away at the Denver boy's stomach. Corbett was tired and could not hit back. In the 20th, Hanlon came up strong and went right at his man. They stood breast to breast, each with his head at the other's shoulder and "slugged" for all that was in them. Hanlon was the stronger and forced Corbett around the ring, playing a lively tattoo on his stomach. He fought Corbett against the ropes and had him at his mercy. Corbett came very near going off the platform, but staggered back to the centre of the ring. The round closed with both men on their feet with Corbett all but out.

The decision was a popular one with the crowd, as Hanlon, in the last few rounds outfought Corbett.

FOOTBALL

Special to the Montreal Star.

Valleyfield, Que., June 3.—Valleyfield vs. Galt. Arrangements have been completed for a match with the Galt Football Club Olympic Champions, Thursday evening, June 8th. Great interest is being taken in the match, followers of the game being anxious to know what showing the Valleyfield team will make against the champions. Although Valleyfield is not represented in the Montreal and District League this season, it is confidently believed that they can put a team on the field that will give the champions some trouble to beat. At any rate an exciting game is expected and Valleyfield will do their best to sustain their reputation as football players of the front ranks in Canada.

The greatest interest ever shown in this city over an Association football game is being taken in the coming game to be played at the M. A. A. A. grounds on Saturday, June 10th. The tickets are selling well, and a good crowd is assured. Westmount will have their men in good shape when they step on the field to meet the men from Galt, and are determined to make the Olympic champions put up such a game as they have never played before, and although the Westmount boys are doing no loud talking, yet wait a wee bit, as a certain Scot was heard to remark. Will Westmount win? Well, I guess. Every member of the first team is earnestly requested to bear in mind the importance of this game and act accordingly. Gymnasium next Tuesday and Thursday.

Association Games for To-day.

The following team has been selected to represent Wstmount in their M. and D. League game to-day vs. Mountain Birds, at Westmount Park, kick-off at 4 p.m. sharp: W. R. Clapp, H. G. Woodburn, W. Martin, J. Martin, W. Neville, R. Crabbe, F. Whiteside, J. Macfarlane (captain), J. M. Miller, W. Deans and J. Nairn. Spares—C. Harding and A. Graham.

Referee—Mr. A. Whiteside.

Linesmen—Messrs. Toomey and A. N. Other.

Westmount's second eleven met and defeated the Outremont second eleven, on the ground of the latter, by a score of one goal to nil. Westmount's second eleven are going very well, having won all four matches already played, scoring 25 goals against 2.

WHY MEN ARE WEAK

And what method of restoring lack or waste of vitality in them is productive of best results, is a question which at present is being seriously considered by the medical profession the world over. Almost every doctor is introducing electricity into his practice in one form or another, which is the direct outcome of the recent announcements of the world's great scientists, and is a practical admission on the part of physicians of the superiority of electricity over drugs as a curative agent. You cannot possibly estimate the true import of the statements made by some of our greatest scientists at their convention recently held, where they claim that after five years of studious research they have discovered that electricity is the basis of human vitality, that without this fluid of life we cannot exist. I have been preaching on these same lines for the past twenty years. I did not discover—it was only my belief. My theory was founded upon the fact that the food that we eat is treated as fuel by the stomach, just the same as coal in a furnace. The chemical action which is produced upon the food by the acids and juices of the stomach burns the food and causes a carbonic heat. The heat is electricity, and it is forced into the nerves and vital organs and is their life. The electrical heat generated by the consumption of our food should keep healthy every vital organ of the body. Debility of the vital organs arises when the waste is greater than the repair, when the stomach is not able to generate sufficient electrical heat to supply the demands of nature. This is the source of decay in men. Now, what I claim is that my theory passes beyond what these great men claim to have discovered. I have invented a device by which this life (ELECTRICITY) may be restored to the human body. It is the marvel of electricians.

DR. McLAUGHLIN'S ELECTRIC BELT

It is life itself to any man who will wear it. I have been endeavoring to pound these facts into the public all this time, and will keep on doing so until they are generally accepted. My immense business is due to my knowledge of the effect of electricity upon the ailments treated and the best way to obtain that effect. I take every case that comes to me as an individual and direct the application of my Belt to suit the demands of each particular case. When you consider the fact that electricity, which I supply, is life to the organs into which I send it, you can see how I get my results. My success comes from my cures. If I did not cure my business would be worn out long ago, as has the business of every other make of Electric Belts. A great many schemers and frauds have gone into the electric belt business because they found it was an easy way to make money, and have resorted to very questionable methods at times in order to dispose of their so-called appliance. I HAVE AN ELECTRIC BELT THAT DOES CURE, and I am offering it to you in such a way that you take no chances whatever. Give me your name and address with a statement of your case, and I will at once arrange a Belt suitable for your case, and you can

PAY WHEN CURED

All I ask is that you give me reasonable security for my Belt while you are wearing it.

PREMIER BALFOUR DISCUSSES POLICY

CATTLE EMBARGO AGAIN

Advises Ministry to Conciliate the Canadian Farmer by Modifying Clause.

Canadian Associated Press.

London, June 3.—Premier Balfour had a great reception in speaking at Albert Hall, when he was presented with an address by delegates from every Conservative association in England and Wales.

He described the Colonial side of the fiscal reform question as a most difficult and most important one, which should stir a responsive fibre in the heart of every citizen in the Empire. But neither in the conflict of free traders or protectionists could he describe it as a reasonable demand that the inhabitants of Great Britain and the Colonies should suspend judgment till after a free conference. In the event of his party not being returned to power at the next general election, he thought the scheme of a double election over the conference, which he considered necessary, would lead to a prolongation of the most pressing question of the Empire. He feared opposition by the cry of the little loaf, and protection had committed themselves to a position in which they could not carry out their duty to the country and the Empire. They deliberately said this country could not occupy a place in the commercial system of the Empire, which the Colonies desire she should occupy. Could they blame them if under such circumstances the Colonies proceeded to give to another the place the Mother Country deliberately left vacant?

MINISTER'S STATEMENT.

On Monday, Sir John Long will ask the Secretary for the Colonies whether he observed that Mr. Fisher declared that a continuance of the embargo on Canadian cattle could only be described in his opinion as an unfriendly act; also that there is much irritation on the part of Canadian agriculturists respecting the matter, and whether, in view of the protest recently communicated by the High Commissioner, he will, in the interests of the Empire, advise the Imperial Government to make such concessions as will allay the existing irritation and conduce to a better understanding with the Canadian Government on this question.

NOW DIRECTING THE AMEER.

Decisive Statement Made by Foreign Secretary in Response to a Query.

London, June 3.—In the House of Lords yesterday, Lord Newton (Conservative) asked for further information concerning the recent mission to Afghanistan, headed by Louis Lane, secretary for foreign affairs of the Indian Government, and criticized the treaty, which, he said, placed Great Britain in a difficult position, because the Ameer at any time might bring on a crisis.

Foreign Secretary Lansdowne said that the mission has achieved the main object for which it had been dispatched. Great Britain had assumed the well-defined liability to go to the Ameer's assistance in the event of an unprovoked attack upon Afghanistan and the foreign relations of Afghanistan were under British guidance and control.

Plumbers Strike in Vancouver.

Vancouver, B.C., June 3—The journeymen plumbers some weeks ago went on strike for an increase in wages, which was refused by the masters, who have been employing non-union men. The journeymen's union claim the masters have violated the Alien Labor Act by importing men from the United States, and so claim the arrest of a man named Sheridan, said to have been brought from Seattle to work.

The sheet metal workers in the city have struck for an advance from 37 1-2 to 45 cents per hour. The bosses say they will refuse to grant increases.

New Collier for Montreal.

One of the latest style cargo boats has just been turned out of the Sir Raylton Dixon & Co.'s Cleveland yards at Middlesborough, England, for the Canadian coal and ore trade. She is the third of the type, inasmuch as, though she is 51 feet beam, she has no hold or lower deck beams, pillars or web frames, making absolutely free and clear holds for cargo. The construction and design are carried out on a patent system of cantilever transverse frames. A number of experts who have visited the vessel pronounce her to be the strongest and best type of cargo boat yet put on the market as regards deadweight capacity and tonnage measurement. She will be running for a number of years for the Dominion Coal Company of Canada to trade between Sydney and Montreal. She has been built under the supervision of Capt. Nilsen, who commands the ship, and is classed highest class with Norske Veritas. The vessel will be fitted with triple expansion engines of the latest type. On leaving the ways she was gracefully christened Chr. Knudsen by Mrs. Nilsen, wife of Captain Nilsen, the owner's superintendent.

FIRST PROFESSOR OF RAILROADING

Appointed to McGill's Chair of Railroad and Transportation.

CLARENCE MORGAN SELECTED

Was Formerly Secretary-Treasurer of the Rutland Railroad—Nova Scotian Assistant.

Mr. Clarence Morgan, until recently treasurer of the Rutland Railroad Company, was appointed yesterday by the Board of Governors, head of the newly inaugurated railroad transportation department at McGill. It was also announced that Mr. H. M. Mackay had been appointed assistant professor of civil engineering.

Mr. Clarence Morgan is a graduate of Harvard and entered the service of the New York Central and Hudson River Railroad Company about ten years ago, in the accounting department. He had had experience in the general management and workings of the construction, equipment and transportation departments. After serving some time also in the general offices in New York he took charge of a realty corporation in Depew. Upon completion of his work there he was elected treasurer of the Norfolk and Southern Railroad Company, which office he held until he was elected treasurer of the Rutland Railroad Company, with headquarters at Burlington. This position he retained until the Rutland Railroad was leased to the New York Central in January of this year. Mr. Morgan has through these connections gained a wide knowledge in both the theory and practice of modern railroading. He is described by an experienced railway man as a very acceptable colleague in whom the university may place complete confidence.

Mr. H. M. Mackay, appointed assistant professor of civil engineering, is a Nova Scotian by birth and training, having been born at Pictou. He is a brother of Dr. Mackay, of Dalhousie, and a graduate in the honor mathematics course of that university in 1894. He graduated as medalist in the civil engineering course of McGill. For three years after graduating he was a member of the Tidal Survey staff, and for two sessions he occupied the position of mathematical lecturer in Pictou Academy. He then entered the service of Messrs. Waddell and Hendrick, consulting engineers, Kansas City, Mo., with whom he remained six years, obtaining a thorough training in all details of structural engineering. More recently he has been resident engineer on several important bridges in the vicinity of Kansas City and of the City of Vera Cruz, Mexico. He has been in the service of the university as lecturer since Christmas, undertaking a portion of the work that was done by Dr. Coker on the latter's departure for England to the important post he now holds.

DEATH FROM AN OVERFLOW.

RAILWAY OFFICIALS ARRESTED.

They Belong to the Pere Marquette and are to Be Deported.

St. Thomas, Ont., June 3.—The Canadian Government has taken action in the Pere Marquette trouble. Last evening Colonel Sherwood, chief of the Dominion Police, arrived in the city with warrants for two of the railway officials to be deported. Mr. E. E. Cain and Mr. James G. Gilhula, trainmaster and chief despatcher respectively, were placed under arrest. The solicitor for the railway will to-morrow apply in Toronto courts for a writ of habeas corpus restraining the police from deporting them. Both of the arrested officials are United States citizens, and came to St. Thomas about six months ago. If the application for the writ is not successful, the men will be deported to-morrow night. The railway people in the city are much agitated. Messrs. Robinson and Green are acting as counsel for the men, and assert that they intend fighting the matter to the end in the courts.

Street Railway Association.

Toronto, June 3.—Representatives from Toronto, Montreal, Ottawa, Hamilton, Quebec and other leading Canadian cities were present yesterday at the meeting in the King Edward of the Canadian Street Railway Association. W. G. Ross, managing director of the Montreal company, and president of the association, presided. A general discussion on the value and efficiency of the various forms of fenders, wheel guards, trolley guards, brakes, and forms of appliances tending to reduce the severity of injuries received, was entered into. An effort will be made to fix freight rates on the different carrying lines throughout the country, and the question of mail carriage will also be taken up.

Blinkbonnie Entertainment.

A large audience witnesses the presentation of the comedy "Just a Trifle too Clear," by the junior pupils of Blinkbonnie Academy last night. The comedy was well rendered by the boys, who displayed dramatic ability and careful training. Recitations between the acts were given by W. C. Wall, J. H. Asselin and C. F. Smith. Mr. Justice Curran presided, and some others present were Rev. Fathers O'Reilly, Ouelette, Casey, and McShane, Rev. Brother Prudent and Mr. Justice Doherty. In a brief address at the close of the evening, Mr. Justice Curran congratulated Mr. Hales Saunders, principal of the Academy, upon the notable progress made by his school, which will be re-opened in September as a Catholic High School. In the new building on corner of Milton and Durocher streets. Regret was expressed upon the death of Mr. James Cochrane, one of the earliest friends of the school. Before concluding, Judge Curran expressed the hope of the governors that all the parents attend the commencement exercises of the Academy, at Karn Hall, on the 22nd inst.

AMERICAN PRESBYTERIAN.—The Rev. W. A. Hunter, D.D., of Denver, Colorado, who is at present visiting in the city, will preach to-morrow morning in the American Presbyterian Church. Dr. Johnston will occupy his own pulpit in the evening.

FRICK COMMITTEE REPORT REJECTED

Causing Resignations From Equitable Life Assurance Society.

MR. HYDE MAKES DEFENCE

But He is Requested to Divest Himself of the Control of the Society's Stock.

New York, June 3.—Disputed claims of victory by the conflicting factions in the Equitable Life Assurance Society, and an apparent readjustment of interests, marked the meetings of the directors of the Equitable held yesterday, to pass on the report of the committee of seven, of which H. C. Frick is the chairman.

The only positive results of the meeting, of which official announcement was made, were the rejection of the report of the Frick committee, by a large majority, the resignation of Mr. Frick, Mr. Bliss and Mr. Harriman, from the board of directors, and the passage of the resolutions embodied in the following statement, given out by the directors after the final adjournment:

"The board, after full discussion and after replies on their own behalf, to the committee by President Alexander, Vice-President Hyde and Vice-President Tarbell, on motion of Mr. Schiff, adopted the following resolutions:

"1. That a chairman of the board be created, with plenary powers over all departments and affairs of the society.

"2. That a nominating committee, consisting of D. O. Mills, John A. Stewart, A. J. Cassatt, T. Jefferson Coolidge, August Belmont, J. B. Forgan, and Robert T. Lincoln, be requested to report at a meeting of the board to be called on Wednesday next, a candidate for chairman.

"3. That at that meeting the board the executive committee be re-organized and that appropriate amendments to the by-laws should be prepared for submission to that meeting for the purpose of carrying out these resolutions.

"4. That Mr. James Hazen Hyde be requested, within three months, to divest himself of the control of the stock of the society, on such terms and conditions as shall be satisfactory."

The directors remained in session for several hours, the time being taken up with statements by President Alexander and Vice-President Hyde, both of whom opposed the adoption of the Frick committee's report.

Mr. Hyde opened his defence before the directors by saying that he recognized this to be the crisis of his life. From the beginning of this unfortunate controversy, he had endeavored to bear his troubles patiently and with a dignity befitting the high office which he held, but even patience had its limits, and the welfare of the society, which was nearer his heart than any other interest involved in the controversy, required him now to speak out in no uncertain tone for its good name, which had been assailed and dragged in the dust by its enemies, whose policy had been one of rule or ruin.

Mr. Hyde referred to "this great monument of prosperity" that had been erected by his father, and said that he would be false to his duty, to the memory of his father, and to himself, and his family, if he failed to defend his good name against the innumerable plots and counter-plots that had been concocted to capture the great trust fund that was being held for the policyholders.

He said the charges of the report were four in number, and stated that if any honest man could find anything contained in the evidence before the committee, a single word or fact that could be construed into wrongdoing, he would surrender his stock and retire to the oblivion which he would justly deserve. He would admit that he was young and had been still younger when he assumed office in the company, but that was a crime which time would cure; he admitted having been trustful of those who had professed to be his friends, but he had already been sufficiently punished for having put too much trust in them.

As to his participation in syndicates, Mr. Hyde said that he had been in many syndicates, always with Mr. Alexander, in which the Equitable had no connection whatever, and in many of them he had lost money.

Mr. Hyde defended his course in this regard, adding that the idea that he had gone into one syndicate of the character in question with the thought that the Equitable would buy any of the bonds, must appear to men acquainted with affairs of that kind as ridiculous. The eight syndicates amounted to about $140,000,000, of which his average interest was about one-fifty-seventh. He added that those syndicates were largely successful and heavily over-subscribed. The Equitable bought, in all, about $10,000,000 of the $140,000,000. He referred to the fact that the society had made large profits on the $10,000,000 of bonds which they had bought from the bankers, as compared with which he said his trifling commission on the underwriting amounted to nothing.

Mr. Hyde went on to say that he proposed to insist on his rights to these commissions. After a full analysis of the various transactions he referred to the great prosperity of the society, saying that the enormous increase in its surplus was due to the wisdom and conservatism of its management, and to its many successful subsidiary companies, and the way in which they had been managed.

He concluded by demanding the utter rejection and repudiation of any report that criticized his administration, and said he would force an opportunity to let the public know what was behind these attacks.

HAMILTON'S
Clearing June Sale

Important Announcement to Ladies!

You might well reason that you see no necessity for placing such exceptional values on sale at a time of year when you are ready and willing to pay a good price for the good things you need right now. But there are reasons—and important ones—that compel us to make price sacrifices in higher class merchandise—and at once. Why? Because, between now and the Twentieth of June the annual exodus of West End Residents to lake, mountain or seaside takes place, from fifty to seventy-five per cent. are preparing now to leave the city.

These are the people we particularly appeal to so as they can reap the benefit of these reductions before their departure.

For our July Sale for which we are now preparing we adopt other methods—but, that's anticipating. From now until the end of the month we will offer daily a series of values in better class goods that will cause a sensation.

Whilst some people prefer Discount Sales—we invariably quote Net Prices—and for this reason, net prices means lowest prices—means that you don't have to pay more for your goods here than your neighbour would—all are treated alike:—Suppose a high priced Credit Store sells an article at $1.25 and offer you a discount of 50 per cent. off; that article would cost you 62½c.

Now such an article would more than likely be marked to sell here at A Dollar, and as we would be only too willing to accept half price for it now, rather than carry it over another season, our net price would be 50c. See the drift of our reasoning? Think it over.

High Class or Exclusive Novelties as you are well aware are not confined to any one store—you'll find some where there are capable buyers possessing good taste—that's here.

We should be pleased to have you call and pass judgment on the selection of High Grade Goods that we intend clearing at Phenomenally Low Prices during this June Sale of ours.

See our Window Displays, and when you come pay particular attention to the Special Tables, on which you'll find displayed such goods as:

$1.50 French Grenadines, 25c a yd.

THE FRESH AIR FUND

The First of Those Who Vote for a Summer Outing.

FOR THE WOMEN AND CHILDREN OF THE POOR.

With the coming of the first real heat comes, too, the glad message from a number of the friends of the mothers and babies, who are feeling it most in crowded homes and narrow streets that they may look forward to a couple of weeks this summer where the cooler breezes blow and the thick foliage of forest trees throw deep shadows on the green turf.

What this means to those threatened with imprisonment through all the heated term in the killing aridity of the city, their benefactors can only faintly imagine. It is one thing to stay in the city in a large cool house on a shady street, with all the aids of civilization, to make the hot days pass; and it is quite another to be hived up in super-heated tenements on dusty, noisy streets, where hundreds of children fill the air with clamor and are imperilled by a thunderous passage of hundreds of carts. The one may not be the highest pleasure, but it is quite enjoyable, the other is a taste of Tophet by day and a hideous nightmare by night.

The first rescue party is here recorded; and the news will be welcomed in quarters where it is always most eagerly waited for. But this is only a beginning. There are yet a pathetic number of tired mothers with puny babies, who are awaiting the good tidings. It is for YOU to say whether some particular mother and babe will go or stay at home.

A HALF MILLION BUILDING.

Magnificent New Edifice for the Credit Foncier.

A princely pile will be erected on the south-east corner of St. James street and St. Lambert Hill, at a cost of nearly $500,000. The handsome and massive structure will be the quarters of the Credit Foncier Franco-Canadien, whose directors have selected for their new home a gray canyon sandstone, similar to that used in the construction of the Liverpool, London and Globe building on Place d'Armes, and obtained from quarries near Cleveland, Okio.

The plans are about completed, and the contracts will be given out shortly. The measurements are: 98 feet on St. James street, 82 feet on St. Lambert hill, and 97 feet on Fortification lane. The architects assert that there will not be a dark office amongst the whole 126 which the projected edifice will contain. This number does not embrace the Credit Foncier's own quarters, which are to extend over the entire ground floor.

There will be ten stories, the first being 17 feet high, and the whole measuring 132 feet from the St. James street sidewalk to the heavy cut stone cornice above. Both the St. James street and the St. Lambert hill elevations show the same treatment of architecture, and the close following of the Louis XVI. style, will make the structure the most imposing in that part of the city. The entrance will be in the centre of the building, on St. James street, a fine loggia or recessed entrance giving a rich appearance to the structure. Below the street level, a system of safety deposit vaults are to be located, the entrance being from St. Lambert hill. The architects state that the foundations are of the most permanent character, no piling or anything of the kind being required. The offices are to be ventilated by a fan system, the tempered air thus secured being regulated automatically.

St. Ann's Young Ladies' Euchre.

The progressive euchre given by the young ladies of St. Ann's was in every way a marked success. About five hundred persons were present, and at an early hour of the evening the hall was so thronged that it became necessary to hastily improvise accommodation for players in the several anterooms in connection with the Hall. Owing to the excellent tact, expedition and courtesy of the gentlemen assisting the young ladies, this was speedily done, and the games progressed happily. The prizes were won as follows:

Ladies: Misses Dalton, Stafford, McGilvery, Routhier, O'Brien, Mrs. Coughlin.

Gentlemen: Messrs. Golden, Donohue, Meehan, Donovan, Sheridan, Miss Bracken.

Door prizes were drawn by: Mrs. Gahan, and the Misses Stafford, McEvoy, Sullivan and four others. The Lyric quartet, composed of Messrs. W. Murphy, A. Hamilton, J. Norris, and F. McCrory, rendered a pleasing harmony without accompaniment. The Misses Kenehan and McKeown were in good voice and contributed two fine solos to the evening's entertainment. Miss Alice McDermott sang sweetly, "Sing me to Sleep." A picturesque Dairy Maids' Drill was executed by a number of Misses whose performance was greatly enjoyed.

The young ladies wish to thank most cordially all who by their services contributed to make the evening a success.

The Court of King's Bench.

The following true bills were found by the Grand Jury of the Court of King's Bench yesterday afternoon: Louis Proulx, shopbreaking, Francois Bois, three charges, unlawfully carrying a dagger, aggravated assault and theft from person, John Seedons, theft; Ernest David, Ernest Dalgnaut, Louis Picotte, Emile Daoust, conspiracy to defraud and false pretences, two charges; Simeon Lesperance, assault; Bernard Gardner and Nathan Harrowitch, fraudulent disposal of property.

Hopes for Non-Partisan Rule.

Calgary, June 3. — Concluding his address at a banquet, Premier Haultain said he had no announcement to make, but he hoped all would unite with him in making Alberta the best province in the Dominion. This is taken to mean that he will remain in Alberta. He hoped, he said, that non-partisan government of the Territories would continue in the new provinces.

A FORCEFUL AND INDEPENDENT MAN

One Who Worked as Mayor, Politician and Harbor Commissioner.

THE LATE JAMES COCHRANE

He Was a Determined and Energetic Official With Ideas of His Own.

The death of the ex-Mayor, Mr. James Cochrane, has made the members of the City Council recall many remembrances of a man of indominatable spirit and, in many ways, of very kindly disposition.

It was only after a most stubborn fight that he was elected Mayor of the city.

As a few years before, he had been beaten in a contest to represent a ward and become a simple member of the City Council, it was not thought he was in earnest when he announced that he intended to fight to become the city's chief magistrate.

That the future Mayor was very much in earnest about the matter was shown by the way he at once set to work organizing committee rooms and personally speaking at many meetings. At the time he was in poor health, but this did not kill the determination to succeed.

He knew his knowledge of French was slight, yet he did not fear to speak to citizens in the east end of the city in their own tongue—urging them to give a "man of the people," as earnest support as they would a millionaire or one born in the purple.

His campaign won the hearts of his hearers with the consequence that when the result of the elections was announced, Mr. James Cochrane was declared to have been elected the city's chief magistrate by many hundreds majority.

It says much for the natural goodwill of the man to know that no sooner did he take up his high office than he dropped very many personal animosities. Those who followed his career as Mayor know that Mr. Cochrane truly strove to act honestly and honorably by the corporation. In many ways his method of so doing was annoying to various city fathers. The deceased had a habit of dropping in at committee meetings and commenting on what was being transacted in a way that sorely aroused aldermanic ire.

When coal got to be so very dear a few years ago, the late chief magistrate called a committee of aldermen together and formed a committee, whereby poor people could purchase coal and wood cheaper from the city than from wood and coal dealers. Certain persons were engaged to look after the shipping of cars, selling of wood., etc. Owing, largely to mismanagement the project did not work very well, the fact being demonstrated that citizens paid almost as much for corporation wood and coal as they did to dealers. This incident was always an annoying one to the Mayor. He contended ever afterwards that neither the aldermen on the special committee, nor the parties who were engaged to sell the coal, etc., did the proper thing; hence the failure of the scheme.

During the two years Mr. Cochrane was the city's Chief Magistrate, there were many exciting scenes at the meetings of the City Council. It was during such scenes that the courage and determined character of the man came out. It was no uncommon thing to see the deceased face the council of thirty-six members and coolly refuse to act as they desired him to do. No amount of storming on the part of the members would make him budge in the least. In time ,the city fathers learned to know this, and then the business of the council got along much better.

The late Chief Magistrate never wearied of listening to the tales of poverty and distress that were daily poured into his ears by the throngs that came to the City Hall to seek help or ask influence to get situations.

The city officials who were connected with His Worship in this work bear tertimonyto the fact that the deceased did very many acts of kindness and charity that the world will never know anything about.

It is said that during the time he was in office that he actually wrote thousands of letters to great corporations, etc., in order to get employment for those who were in sore need of it.

His worship was a champion of a reduction in the price of water. Unfortunately a majority of the aldermen do not look kindly on this project, hence the Mayor passed away without being able to affect any reform in the matter. During the deceased's regime he frowned down the wholesale method of depriving householders of water who through misfortune were unable to pay the heavy water taxes. To-day the custom has almost fallen into desuetude. Water is not turned off unless under the most trying provocation.

AS A POLITICIAN.

In politics Mr. Cochrane was quite a force. Even before he contemplated entering the struggle on his own behalf, he had distinguished himself by doing yeoman service on behalf of the Liberal party. Thus in the great struggle marking Hon. Raymond Prefontaine's first election for Chambly to the Dominion Parliament, Mr. Cochrane undertook the task of rallying the English-speaking vote to the support of the present minister. His work on that occasion was certainly the element that brought success to the liberal banner in that struggle.

In 1891, when the Liberal party had no hope whatever of defeating Sir Donald Smith, now Lord Strathcona, very few men would accept the hazardous task of being nominated. Mr. Cochrane, however, earned the gratitude of his party by throwing himself into the breach, and taking the overwhelming defeat which he knew as well as any one was a foregone conclusion.

Before the general elections of 1896, he organized at the immense skating rink which was called "Cochrane's Auditorium" one of the largest gathering ever seen in Canada. The big rink was filled to overflowing, and overflow meetings on Fletcher's Field near by were addressed by Sir Wilfrid Laurier and some of his leading lieutenants.

In 1900 he entered the contest and won out the seat for the Quebec Legislature in St. Lawrence division. He counted a host of close personal friends among the old line Conservatives, and many of these rallied to his support in the struggle.

Then came his Mayoralty election, when he made a meteorlike campaign addressing ten or twelve meetings a day, going from Point St. Charles to Hochelaga in one evening, and speaking at every aldermanic committee room along the way. He never posed as an orator, but he spoke straight to the point, and said what he meant in vigorous English, and more or less elegant French.

As a member of the Quebec Legislature he looked closely to the city's interest, and Montreal could always count him in the safe and sane column when jobs affecting the interests of the city were attempted. In the crisis which took place at the opening of the session, he kept out of the fray as much as possible, but declared openly that until some good reason were shown why Hon. S. N. Parent's supporters at the time of the election should withdraw their confidence on account of something that happened in the meantime, he would support the regularly recognized leader of the party. He was no man's man however, and looked at things from his own standpoint, standing by what he thought right, regardless of party interests. Sir Wilfrid Laurier held him in the highest esteem and fully recognized the good service which the deceased had rendered the party in its darker days, and appreciated the independent spirit which prompted him to differ with some of the party leaders in later and more prosperous times.

ON THE HARBOR BOARD.

For a period of two years, or during his occupancy of the Mayor's chair, James Cochrane was a member of the Harbor Commission of Montreal. In accord with the honor which is always granted Montreal's chief executive, Mayor Cochrane occupied the chair to the right of the President of the Board, Hon. Robert Mackay. Seldom was Mr. Cochrane absent from the weekly sessions during these two years, 1902 to 1904.

Generally speaking, Mr. Cochrane might have been classed among the silent members of the Board, for he said little except where the interests of the city were concerned. Neatly dressed, with the ever present red flower in his buttonhole, the Mayor was ready and willing to launch into a strenuous campaign if he considered that the interests of the city of Montreal were in any manner endangered.

On the general plan of harbor improvements, Mr. Cochrane was more than likely to be with the majority of the Board, but when it came to questions, such for instance as the taking over of the broadened portion of Commissioners street for harbor uses he was ever ready to meet the conflict more than half way.

"He was a manly fighter," commented Senator Mackay, in speaking of Mr. Cochrane, "and there was a great deal to admire in the man, more than most people were inclined to admit."

Mr. Cochrane's diction was not always above criticism, nor was his language always Parliamentary. He had an ugly way of calling a spade a spade without any oratorical trimmings, but at the same time those who sat on the Harbor Commission with him were in the long run, ordinarily obliged to admit that the "strenuous" Mayor was more than half right in his contentions.

His was an earnestness of purpose, and it was mainly through this Mayor's never-ceasing antagonism that the Commissioners eventually resolved to go on with the construction of the double deck wharf sheds without providing for the entrances to the second story of the same,—it having been originally designed that the widened portion of Commissioners street be utilized for that purpose, a thing which Mayor Cochrane would never agree to.

GERMANY'S HAND AGAIN SEEN

Paris, June 3.—Although official confirmation is withheld, it is now generally accepted here that the report from Tangier to the effect that the Sultan of Morocco had declined the French propositions for the reform of Morocco, unless approved by an international conference, was correct.

This is widely commented upon as amounting to a check to, if not a failure of the French mission sent to Fez, as well as a check to the entire French policy in Morocco. Only the absorbing attention given to King Alfonso prevents a renewal of the storm of protest against Germany, as an international conference would be considered to be the result of the influence of Count Von Tattenbach-Ashold (head of the German mission to Fez), with the Sultan. The French statesmen continue to rely upon Great Britain, Italy and Spain refusing to join the proposed conference, which, with the refusal of France and Russia, and possibly the indifference of the United States, would leave the conference without any membership except Germany. It is, however, recognized that even without an international conference the Sultan's refusal to agree to the reforms proposed by France continues the status quo which France sought to terminate.

DEATH AND DEVASTATION.

Wrought in Albania by the Latest Earthquake.

Cetinje, Montenegro, June 3.—Later details of the earthquake from Scutari, Albania, show that 500 persons were killed and 250 injured, and that the town was completely devastated. There were two shocks. The inhabitants are now living in the open, while the foreign consuls have been provided with tents. The authorities have organized parties to search for the bodies of victims. It is feared that the list of casualties will be considerably increased.

The Wentworth Election Case.

Ottawa, June 3. — In the Supreme Court yesterday in the Wentworth election case, Mr. A. B. Aylesworth, K.C., who appeared for the appellant, Mr. Sealey, went on to contend that if the court laid down the principle that a deputy returning officer, by placing marks or numbers on a ballot, could spoil them, the way was opened up for all kinds of fraud. In the case in point, however, there was no suspicion that the numbering of the ballots was anything more than a mistake. There was no statute declaring such votes to be bad votes. Mr. Aylesworth made extensive citations in support of his contentions, and quoted many analogous cases.

Parliament, in its enactments, Mr. Aylesworth said, had never intended that a mark placed upon a ballot by a deputy returning officer should void it, particularly when it was placed there as the result of a mistake. It would be a very easy matter, if this principle were sustained, for a deputy by placing a piece of lead or soap under his nail to spoil the ballot. He reiterated strongly that he voter himself, not the deputy, must make the particular mark that would identify his ballot.
