The Daily Witness.

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 28, 1886. CANADA PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH. (To the Editor of the Witness.) Sir,—Will you kindly afford me a little space in the Witness for the purpose of correcting some misapprehensions of the Rev. W. B. Clarke, of Quebec, who speaking before the Presbytery of Montreal on the 14th inst., respecting an application through the Presbytery of Simcoe, on behalf of the Rev. John Cooke, of the Wesleyan Church, seeking to be received as a missionary of the C. P. Ch., in the Presbytery of Brockville? He says: "It so happened that a minister had recently run away with some five hundred dollars belonging to his employer. A still later case is that of a youth, a member of the C. P. Ch., in which an excellent man of a very respectable family in this city, who recently ran away with some five hundred dollars belonging to his employer. Now, what is the reason of this state of things, and what is the moral to be drawn from it? Doubtless, amongst its chief causes are the temptations that a great city holds out, and which cannot be indulged in with the means at the lawful disposal of these defectors. But there is another cause which ought by no means to be overlooked; namely, the entrusting of large sums, to youths, comparatively little known, and whose trustworthiness has not been tested and established by the frequent satisfactory handling of smaller amounts. Many an employer thus unconsciously becomes the tempter of his employe, and unwillingly contributes to a fall from which there may be no rising again. But we would not be understood to throw the blame on the employer,—far from it. He has a right to expect perfect honesty and unwavering integrity from those in his service. Moreover, it is not uncharitable to suppose that the discovered delinquency is not the first one, but rather the last of a series, according from small amounts to great. Such is the natural course of evil-doing—small at the first, and cautious, gradually becoming bolder; from pilfering proceedings to larger appropriations of what is another's, until hundreds of dollars are the price for which the risk is run; for him more than one has been the place of his present employment and the Penitentiary! What, then, are the preventive steps proper to be taken? To take these must be, in a measure, the business of the class the compromise of whose respectability by some of its members is here complained of. Amongst these measures may be suggested the cultivation of an esprit de corps, founded on a reasonable pride of the trust reposed in them; and which might tend to make each unconsciously the security for his fellow. More careful inquiry as to previous character before taking into the employer's service might be recommended, and a continued knowledge of the general habits of the employe. The last may be deemed to be the duty of the merchant whose money, perhaps his fortune, is at the mercy of the clerk or porter, has a moral right to it, as a protection and set-off to the great confidence which is obliged to place in them; nor do we think that the well-conducted will strive to evade it. The law is offensive only to the law-breaker, and the well disposed obey it without a thought of its existence. We have so far had an eye chiefly to moral means, but to these might be added the wider use of a system of checks, simply an interference with, or trespassing upon,

A PRAYER. MISS MELLICHAMPE, AUTHOR OF "JUST AS I AM" O Jesus, make Thyself to me O Jesus, bright reality;

A MORNING IN THE NURSERY. I spent this morning with my niece. As it was washing-day, and the child's nurse was busy in the kitchen, my hostess had sole charge of her little daughter Jenny, a bright, sunny young creature, with a cunning smile and naughty originality.

"What's that?" said my niece, "I don't know." "What's that?" said my niece, "I don't know." "What's that?" said my niece, "I don't know."

"What's that?" said my niece, "I don't know." "What's that?" said my niece, "I don't know." "What's that?" said my niece, "I don't know."
