Louise Mandrell — almost went down the drain

LAS VEGAS (AP) — When Irby and Mary Mandrell were ready to bring their newborn daughter, Louise, home from the hospital in 1955, they faced a problem with her seven-year-old sister, Barbara.

"Barbara liked being an only child," Louise Mandrell said of her big sister recently as she curled on a dressing room couch between shows at the Riviera Hotel. "She didn't want any brothers or sisters. Our coming home from the hospital really upset her."

Their father, however, tried a bit of reverse psychology.

"Dad looked at me and said, 'This baby has dark hair. She can't be ours. I'm going to flush her down the commode,'" Louise said.

"They say Barbara cried: 'I want her! I want her! She can be my baby. I'll take care of her.'

"Since that day, she's watched over me, been my good friend," Louise said. "She's loved me and protected me. Psychologically, some might think what Dad did was cruel. But it was the best thing that could have happened."

Louise Mandrell now travels across the U.S. with her own group, playing on glittering Las Vegas stages and at dusty state fairs. But wherever the show, the bill of fare always includes a song dedicated to a special sibling: She Believes in Me.

"Six years ago, I was going through a divorce and I had very little faith in myself," Louise recalled. "I was working as a backup musician weekends at the Grand Ole Opry. Barbara tried to convince me to put my own show together.

"She had this belief that I could be so much more. Going through a divorce makes you feel so unimportant, unattractive, a failure anyway. It was great to have somebody who really believed in me."

It's a major change from the shy girl who was once content to be a waitress and an engraver in a jewelry store.

"I loved those jobs because I thought I was good at them," she said. "It's just as important to me that I'm proud of myself.

She was happy just to be a member of Barbara's band. But her famous sister wouldn't accept that.

"Barbara kept telling me: 'There's an entertainer inside of you.' They couldn't even get me to talk. Now they can't get me to shut up."

Louise and baby sister Irlene started with Barbara's musical group, the Do-Rites, when Louise was 11. They gained national exposure a dozen years later when the three sisters starred in the highly popular Mandrell television show. Irby Mandrell is still manager for his three performing daughters.

Today Louise is writing a book, The Mandrell Family Album, with author Ace Collins, reflecting on the lives of her entertainment family.

She's philosophical about the adulation heaped on the older sister who was once determined to be an only child.

"I feel I have something Barbara doesn't have," Louise said. "I have Barbara. I had a good teacher.

"If you had won every award you could win, as she has, where would you go from there? To me, the next best thing would be to have a student come along and start doing well. That's what's happening."

Simon and Garfunkel are really back and on tour!

NEW YORK (AP) — Paul Simon and Art Garfunkel will tour North America together for the first time in 13 years this summer, the duo announced Friday.

Twenty stadiums will host the Summer Evening with Simon and Garfunkel, starting July 19 in Akron's 40,000-seat Rubber Bowl. The duo appear in Toronto two days later and in Vancouver on Aug. 22.

"We're skipping decades," Simon said in his manager's office Friday. "That seems to be the plan. Simon and Garfunkel were together in the '60s, took off the '70s. Don't expect anything from us in the '90s.

"There's a big show coming in the year 2000. Let's hope we're all here. If we are, it'll be free."

Simon and Garfunkel, both now 41, met in elementary school and became a harmonizing duo, singing Simon's songs. They made some of the record industry's biggest hits. They played a farewell concert in Forest Hills Tennis Stadium in Queens the summer of 1970. Both went on to make solo albums and appeared in movies.

In September, 1981, they sang in Central Park, their first concert as a duo in 11 years, and drew an audience of more than half a million. They sang the old hits, among them The Sound of Silence, Bridge over Troubled Water, Mrs. Robinson, Homeward Bound, The 59th Street Bridge Song.

Then there was a record album and a tour of Europe, Japan, Australia and New Zealand.

Both say that whether Simon and Garfunkel will stay together after the American tour hasn't been decided. "We don't plan that far ahead. We never did," they both say.

A Simon and Garfunkel album, Think Too Much, with 10 new Simon songs, will come out during the summer.

After Akron, the tour schedule is CNE Stadium, Toronto, July 21; Silverdome, Pontiac, Mich., July 22; Comiskey Park, Chicago, July 24; County Stadium, Milwaukee, July 27; Parade Stadium, Minneapolis, July 28; Three Rivers, Pittsburgh, July 30; Meadowlands, Clifton, N.J., July 31; Sullivan Stadium, Foxboro, Mass., Aug. 3; Shea Stadium, Flushing, N.Y., Aug. 6;

Baltimore, place to be announced, Aug. 13; Georgia Tech, Atlanta, Aug. 14; Astrodome, Houston, Aug. 17; Cotton Bowl, Dallas, Aug. 18; Oakland Stadium, Oakland, Aug. 20; B.C. Place Stadium, Vancouver, Aug. 22; Dodger Stadium, Los Angeles, Aug. 27; Jack Murphy Stadium, San Diego, Aug. 28, and Folsom Stadium, Boulder, Aug. 30.

Lennon's widow Ono hurt by letter theft

NEW YORK (AP) — Yoko Ono, widow of former Beatle John Lennon, has been hurt "enormously" by the theft of love letters, papers and equipment from the apartments the couple shared, a friend said Friday.

A diary that Lennon wrote in his last year and unpublished music by the late rock star were among the material stolen from the apartments in the year after Lennon was gunned down, said Eliot Mintz.

"The entire experience was shattering for her — nightmarish," Mintz said.

Mintz, a former California disc jockey who has known the Lennons for 13 years, said some of the stolen goods have been recovered, including Skywriting by Word of Mouth, an unpublished novel Lennon wrote during the 1970s. Goods not recovered include clothing, he said.

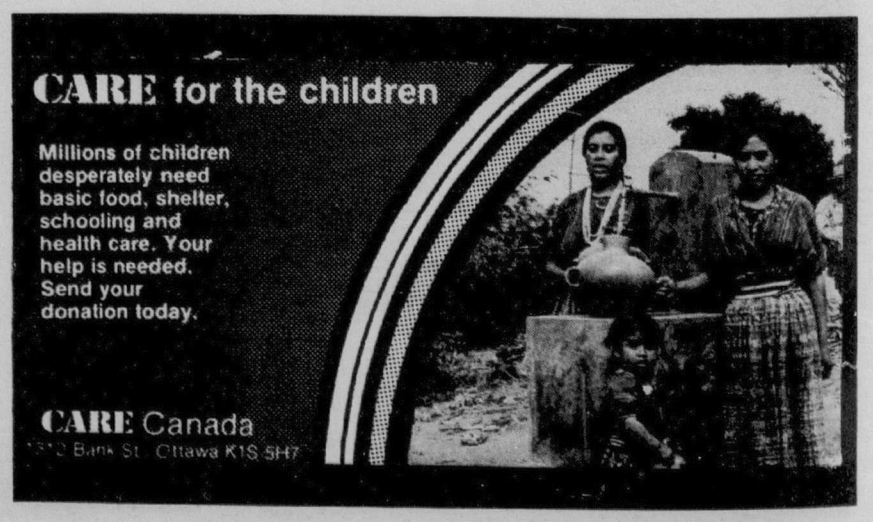

He said it was not known whether the slides of Lennon and Ono making love recently recovered in New Orleans were stolen at the same time.

"Thousands and thousands of dollars of stereo and video equipment also were stolen," he said. "Yoko believes that everything that was taken will find its way back to her."

A former employee of Lennon, Fred Seaman, 30, has pleaded guilty to grand larceny in the theft of four Lennon diaries which were recovered last September from Seaman's Brooklyn apartment and from a Manhattan warehouse.

He faces five years' probation when he is sentenced in state Supreme Court on July 14, said Mary DeBourbon, spokesman for the Manhattan district attorney.

Kaleidoscope

By RICHARD LONEY

Accidental Crimes by John Hutton is a perfect example of one of the fundamental differences between British crime fiction and the American variety. As with other successors to the Agatha Christie school of creating drawing-room mysteries, such as P.D. James, Hutton concerns himself with the psychology of his characters, drawing them with sure strokes and an eye to realism.

Conrad Nield is a sharply realized creation, who might have been turned out by Kingsley Amis or Graham Greene, who is a British "type" to perfection. Conrad is a minor functionary in the British system of teachers colleges, who is fastidious, attentive to tedious details, and an almost overbearing perfectionist when it comes to the student teachers he must aid in interviews and counselling. His itinerant lifestyle leads him to such outlying provincial towns as Abenbury, Forton Cross and other moor-side hamlets as he makes his inspection tours for Alderman Robertson College of Education.

Unfortunately Conrad chances to be in the vicinity when the body of a young lady is found jammed into a rocky crevice after having been brutally beaten and sexually molested. In most crime fiction the outcome would be laborsome and obvious. Conrad would be found to be the ruthless killer, and his proper lifestyle only a cover for his evil plottings and sordid passions. But writer Hutton fails to fulfill the reader's expectations along these lines. As his novel unfolds the reader is continually wondering about Conrad Nield — did he or didn't he? It is the British "did the butler do it?" tradition given new life by John Hutton.

When Nield gradually begins to reveal an adventurous and seemy side to his personality by attending his first porno flick and subsequently picking up a young hippie hitch-hiker and making a brusquely thwarted pass at the girl, it appears that Hutton has been toying with the reader all along. And then when this young lady is found garotted with her own stockings and sexually assaulted the next day, all evidence points to Conrad as the guilty party. But did he indeed perform both of these crimes? To say that Hutton keeps the reader in suspense until the book's final few pages is a credit to his ability to develop this subtle, in-depth psychological portrait of a mind that is perhaps criminal or drawn into the sordid facts of this case of Accidental Crimes.

Little River Band THE NET

The change in personnel for Australia's Little River Band was forecast when a pair of tracks on their hits package revealed that John Farnham had leaped into the sestet to replace Glenn Shorrock, off on a solo career jaunt. Those two songs were, unfortunately, about the only two bona fide hits that the latest session from these Aussies produced.

Singer Farnham has similar upper register vocal pipes to those of Shorrock that led LRB through a parade of hits. THE NET is by no means a write-off, but the expected quality just is not here. Usually a LRB album has perhaps one filler title on board, but here there about five "iffy" tracks. When the new lineup — including Stephen Housden replacing David Briggs on guitars — is on, they are fine — We Two is a mellow cut, and No More Tears is a pretty song from Beeb Birtles. But the first track, You're Driving Me Out of My Mind, by the combined talents of Beeb Birtles and Graham Goble, is a failed attempt at the type of reworking of R&B sounds that have strangely enough propelled Genesis' nondescript drummer, Phil Collins, into pop stardom. Let's hope THE NET is a transitional album for the talented Little River Band and that Birtles and Globe will write fresh material that can spin some new gold for one of rock's premier songweaving outfits.

Barr — Frank Burns of Fall Guy

LOS ANGELES (AP) — Doug Barr, tall and handsome and a former male model, was not what the producers of ABC's The Fall Guy had in mind for Howie Munson.

Howie was created as the comic relief for Lee Majors in this comedy-adventure about a movie stuntman who moonlights as a bounty hunter.

Barr went into The Fall Guy almost straight from the ill-fated series, When the Whistle Blows, in which he played a former rodeo rider who becomes a construction worker.

"Howie was supposed to be a comedic character, but in typical television fashion, they changed the character but not his dialogue," Barr says. "Howie was a combination of screwup and bright guy. His lines were supposed to show him as naive, but they just showed him as stupid."

In the two years the show has been on the air, the dialogue has not improved.

"I find it a challenge to make it work," he says. "We're not doing Starsky and Hutch. My character is more like Frank Burns in MASH. I'm the guy who gets into trouble so Lee Majors can get us out of trouble."

Barr considers that for a moment, then takes a new tack.

"It's not so much that Howie gets into trouble," he says. "But Howie screws up on some episodes and on others, he's a hero.

"I think Howie is destined to remain forever an apprentice," Barr says. "That's because the show runs out of sequence in syndication. You can't show Howie as smart one day and a klutz the next.

"I'm just anxious to keep working. I'm not champing at the bit to reach great heights immediately. I've done two series and two features, besides a lot of spisodic guest work."

Damage is slight despite serious flooding in Germany

Wine Bits

BY TIM BELFORD

Several people I know have expressed concern over the extensive flooding that took place in Germany this spring. Most wanted to know how much damage they could expect to the 1983 crop and whether or not they should avoid this year's German wines. In answer to these questions, I have taken the liberty of using this column to publish the report of the German Wine Institute as published by the German Wine Information Service.

Spring flooding caused little damage to vines in the Rhine and Mosel valleys in West Germany this year, according to the German Wine Institute in Mainz. Floating branches bent some support stakes but this was quickly repaired.

Winegrowers in low lying areas faced massive clean-ups after the waters receded from their cellars but there was no damage to the wooden casks in storage from previous harvests. In fact, the lower temperature brought about by the cold flood waters actually had a beneficial effect; the wooden casks contracted, making them more water tight than usual. Earlier fears of labels being washed off stored wines subsided with the flood waters as the labels generally settled back onto the bottles.

Recent May floods could pose a more serious threat to the vines. At this early stage in their development, if the vines are under water for a prolonged period of time, they are more susceptible to disease.

As of the beginning of June, the vines are approximately two weeks behind in growth but this is not expected to affect the potential quantity or quality of the 1983 harvest.

The critical factor is the flowering, which normally occurs in mid to late June. The earlier the flowering, the longer the grapes will have to ripen which, in turn, improves the potential for a quality harvest. Wine growers are confident that the recent bad weather will not have an adverse effect on this year's crop.

More than 1,500 trade visitors from all over the world attended the two-day German Wine Trade Fair in Stuttgart on May 8-9, 1983. This was the first time that German wine growers from all eleven German wine growing regions came together to exhibit what has been described by visitors as an "extremely comprehensive and quality-oriented array of German wine."

Buyers were afforded a unique opportunity to sample nearly 900 different quality and Pradikat wines of every category and style, as well as the chance to personally meet some 140 wine growers, ranging from small to medium-sized family operations to larger local and regional cooperatives.

The majority of buyers were importers, agents, distributors and retailers; one-third were members of the hotel, restaurant and club trade. Ten per cent of the visitors came from other European countries and overseas, including North and South America, Japan and Australia.

More than half of the exhibitors reported on-site sales. The purpose of such a trade fair, however, is to provide a forum for suppliers and buyers. In this respect, the German Wine Trade Fair was an outstanding success with, some 98 per cent of the exhibitors already having stated their interest in participating in future fairs. It is conceivable that this model could be used in other countries as well, or in the context of other international wine trade fairs.

The first German Wine Trade Fair took place in conjunction with the wine technology exhibition INTERVITIS. Based on this year's positive results, German Wine Institute, will consider sponsoring a second wine trade fair of this scope in 1986, when INTERVITIS is scheduled to take place again.

Brian Bedford's Richard upsets Shakespeare's poetry

STRATFORD, Ont. (CP) — Brian Bedford creates a bored, distracted King Richard II in a strangely mixed production directed by Richard Cottrell as the last of four shows to open the 1983 Stratford Festival this week.

Bedford brings his halting, thinking style of delivery to a play which has been known best in classical theatre for the beauty of its language, smoothly spoken.

As Richard, he smiles sardonically, even in prison and dethroned. At court, his mind wanders from issues of state to the beautiful boys around him, the likes of Busby, Green and Bagot. Only rarely does he display passion.

But one has to sympathize with this Richard, brought to the throne of England as a child and raised by indulgent uncles until he asserts his readiness to rule and then proves inadequate, resigning the crown without a fight to Henry Bolingbroke, who becomes Henry IV.

In history, it happened in the 1390s. Shakespeare wrote it in 1595. But Cottrell's production, designed by Michael Annals and John Pennoyer, is ill-defined.

Some of Richard's courtiers are dressed like noblemen from the court of Lewis Carroll's Queen of Hearts. Others wear brass-buttoned greatcoats out of Dickens, and the one who finally stabs Richard wears a Sam Brown belt over his air force blue uniform, with a bare knife tucked into it on his back.

The production has other inconsistencies. Bedford's lines are all crystal clear but are frequently delivered with pauses awkwardly upsetting the poetry — and this is a play which has tested the mettle of great actors such as Alex Guiness, Michael Redgrave and Ian Richardson.

Other veteran actors, notably Douglas Campbell as the Duke of York, Richard's last remaining uncle and his regent, spoke often with such bluster that the words blurred. And he delivered many of his important lines to the back of the stage.

It's difficult enough staging a play for an audience sitting around three sides of the stage. But the back is one place from which nobody is straining to hear.

The festival did grace the production with some of its best acting abilities: Lewis Gordon as old John of Gaunt, Pat Galloway in the brief role of the Duchess of York, Max Helpmann as the Bishop of Carlisle, and Graeme Campbell as Bolingbroke's Earl Marshal.

Cedric Smith, folk-singer and satirist who recently toured in Billy Bishop Goes to War, returned to the festival and a fine classical performance as Bolingbroke.

Gordon's delivery of Gaunt's lament on what was happening under Richard to "This royal throne of kings, this scept'red isle" grew with mounting indignation as the old man neared his death. And Bedford's delivery of The Hollow Crown speech was as though Richard was thinking it out as he went through it.

Though many stood to applaud Bedford's solo bow at the end of the curtain calls, the applause for this production was more restrained than it was for either John Hirsch's As You Like It or Des McAnuff's Macbeth earlier in the week.

The three Shakespeare plays now run in repertory in the Festival Theatre until Moliere's Tartuffe is added in August. Brian Macdonald's new production of Gilbert and Sullivan's The Gondoliers plays alone at the Avon Theatre until The Mikado is revived June 30.

NEW YORK (AP) — There's something about the tall and regal Diahann Carroll that glows. And she can light up the stage. She's doing it now in the play, Agnes of God.

After a 20-year absence, Carroll has returned to Broadway, taking Elizabeth Ashley's role as Dr. Martha Livingston, the psychiatrist who must confront her own emotional demons as well as tackle those of a young nun who has conceived and killed a baby.

She first played the part for two weeks in September, when Ashley went on vacation.

"Opening night came and I didn't even know I was on stage," she recalls. "I was in a state of shock. But it was the opportunity to play with a part. It was a change and a challenge."

Her last twirl on the stage was in 1962 when she starred with Richard Kiley in No Strings, a musical especially created for her by the late Richard Rodgers.

Since then there have been movies, including Hurry Sundown and Claudine, her own TV series, Julia, and a made-for-TV drama, Sister, Sister.

That's not a lot of work for the actress Look magazine once called "the kind of show stopper Broadway has been aching for all season. There is little doubt that the world is already hers, gift-wrapped."

The world may have been hers, but it certainly wasn't tied in pretty paper.

"It would be wonderful if the industry offered films to black actresses," she says, "but it doesn't and that is my reality. I don't grapple with problems I can't solve. The motion picture industry is a closed industry."

She found that out when No Strings was to be made into a movie. The plot deals with an interracial romance. An Oriental actress was selected to play the role Carroll has on Broadway.

"I thought that was disgraceful," Carroll now says, eyes blazing. "It implied that the producer couldn't find a black actress in the entire world who could play the part."

At the time, Carroll expressed her anger in interviews.

"Making waves of that sort at that time was not wise," she says now. "But I don't regret it."

Carroll grew up in Yonkers, N.Y., attending Music and Arts High School and then New York University, where she studied psychology. She modeled part-time while in school. That led to acting and she left college with an "incomplete."

She plans to get a degree one day but first, she says, she'll finish the autobiography she's writing and try to produce a play based on the life of Sally Hemmings, the slave who historians say was Thomas Jefferson's mistress.

"I want to feel fulfilled," she says. "I don't want anyone to take that away from me."

'Suitcase farmer' travels the world with miniatures

The 72-year-old has travelled the world with suitcases full of vintage farm machinery, all miniature pieces designed and built by himself — right down to the smallest screw.

His newest steam-powered tractor was designed from memory and magazine photos. It features brass fittings, a boiler pressure guage the size of a dime, working brakes and a firebox that runs on metholated spriits to heat water in the boiler and create steam.

The project took him 767 working hours to complete.

He started travelling and kept at it for 13 years, circling the world twice. He says initially he never stayed in one place more than a week. After a few years, he would linger in exotic locales for a few months at a time.

Then he began to get bored.

That's when memories of his experiences working on a farm in the Niverville, Man., area during the Depression fired up his imagination, and he set to work creating miniatures.

While on the road, he built a small lathe and started turning out parts of his first steam engine, which he completed in 1974 while wandering through Australia and New Zealand.

His light, aluminum lathe travels with him, and with it he can create miniature crankshafts, pistons, rings, valves, nuts, bolts, levers and guages.

And of course, he cranks out equally miniature socket wrenches and other tools with which to assemble his creations.

When Martin started making wagons, he opted for aluminum frames, rather than wood because wood breaks too easily and is hard to work with.

The hay racks also are aluminum and set securely on wagon undercarriages with high front and rear panels that, unlike the real ones of yesteryear, fold down for easy storage.

"I'm a suitcase farmer," he says, explaining how all his creations have to be light and portable.

Martin works at his hobby off and on, with the off periods sometimes running as long as a month or so.

He is currently machining parts for a tiny two-piston engine for a tractor he plans to make. But he's in no rush. He doesn't intend to complete the job this year.

Elliott Gould's fresh start ends abruptly

NEW YORK (AP) — Elliott Gould, clad in rumpled coveralls, ambles into his cramped dressing room and sits down. He starts munching a full-bodied sandwich that resembles a border war between mayonnaise, tuna and lettuce and warily eyes a visitor.

Unfortunately, his "fresh start" on Broadway in The Guys in the Truck hasn't worked out. Less than a week before the play's scheduled premiere, he bowed out, because of what a spokesman called "artistic differences" with the director, David Brown.

In Truck, Gould had been playing — at least for 15 preview performances — a brash, irreverent veteran TV director who holds the big Sunday sportscast together despite a troubled marriage, a stripper he knows too intimately, huge gambling debts, malfunctioning gear and even a nasty young producer.

Most actors, when queried about their newest venture, usually rhapsodize about it, gush about it, hail it as the greatest happening since the first man to go over Niagara Falls in a beer firkin.

Not Gould, born 44 years ago in Brooklyn, in show business since childhood, and once wed to his colleague in Broadway's I Can Get It For You Wholesale, Barbra Streisand.

When interviewed shortly before Truck's scheduled opening he seemed to regard talking about his life, his times, even his show, as kind of uncomfortable.

No, he says, he didn't see the off-Broadway version of Truck, nor did he read the reviews. That he signed up for it, he says, shrugging, is because "I wanted to come back here, that's all. Very simple, nothing at all complicated."

Gould hadn't been on Broadway since 1967 and Jules Feiffer's black-humored Little Murders, which died quickly despite good notices for Gould. He promptly decamped to Hollywood where he's been ever since.

SWAPS HIS MATE

Some misfired there, but some pretty good starring roles, too — usually as a brash, exuberant leading man. His first movie hit was Bob and Carol and Ted and Alice, a California mate-swap caper that earned him an Oscar nomination.

For many, his most memorable film performance was as a free-spirit U.S. Army surgeon — with fellow surgeon Donald Sutherland — in the 1970 film version of MASH, the Korean war tragicomedy that spawned the long-running CBS series.

Gould, who has two new films — Eye for an Eye and Over the Brooklyn Bridge — due out later this year, began on Broadway where he broke in as a minor player in 1957 in a short-lived musical called Rumple.

He had no agent so, he says, he picked up the phone, called a producer and posed as an agent saying many nice things about this new kid from Brooklyn, Elliott Gould.

When out of work and needing money, he began appearing off-Broadway, in leading department stores, to be exact, dressed as Confucius and demonstrating a toy called Confucius Says.

After that, he worked as an elevator operator, sold barometers and such as Macy's, and, for one day, worked as a waiter at a Howard Johnson's: "I got fired for urging everyong not to eat the French fries."

Drunken Maritimers, dumb Newfies a myth

HALIFAX (CP) — Nova Scotians are wild when they drink, Newfoundlanders are not overly smart and Quebecers are excitable people who drive like maniacs.

These are some of the myths that Canadians in different regions of the country have about other regions.

Peter Clark, a Dalhousie University sociology professor, says they may also be the building blocks of nationhood and the earmark of a social conscience.

Clark believes regional myths are a form of "social glue" or common knowledge that bind one region to another.

"Canada and other newer nations like Australia and the United States probably have fewer myths than older places like Europe or the Middle East," he said.

"Older nations have a whole set standard of myths; in fact, we have surprisingly few."

"There is usually some grain of truth in all myths, they are seldom completely true and this is so with myths Canadians of one region have about Canadians from another region," Clark said in an interview.

Clark said the myths start with one foot in reality. Over a period of time they become distorted beyond recognition, and by the time they become circulated, they no longer have any relation to fact.

"It may be that Quebecers do drive a little faster, but to say they drive like maniacs is a gross exaggeration — a common trait of myths."

Clark said myths are passed from generation to generation and are perpetuated because there is no counter information to disprove them.

If a person who seldom reads has been brought up to believe Newfoundlanders are stupid, he will probably never know that there have been no studies done to determine the average IQ in Newfoundland, he said.

Clark said people who seldom read are most susceptible to myths because they are less likely to stumble across the real facts.

"If you've never read or heard anything different and you don't read, a myth will probably stay with you the rest of your life."

The Tory convention . . . or R.B. Bennett revisited

Who's who

By TADEUSZ LETARTE

Well, wouldn't you know it? Before I went off to the Tory boosting session in Greytown last week the last thing I did was write my column and explain to that bunch of jerks who allegedly look after it that I would be gone but my column absolutely muuuust appear in its usual time and place. Otherwise, people might get worried about me — you know? So what do those jerks do but lose the whole damned thing faster than Peter Puck changed sides Saturday! Then they had to run a picture of some queen (ugh!) in my place. Imagine! You can dress them up but you can't leave them home.

Well, did I ever give them heck! After I threatened to blow the lid off what really goes on out there behind the hockey stick factory (down by the swamp at the Record offices), they said they would make up for it by giving me more space to blow your little minds with this week. So heeeere goes!

The Mila look.

It seems the farmer who owns the field upon which the Battle of the Boyne was fought has put the place up for sale. You know the battle, it was the one in which good King Billy (and that ain't Carter) managed to sign a 600-year lease on the peace-loving drunkards of Ireland. Record staffer Mike McDevitt, who insists on flaunting his Irish heritage (much to the chagrin of that unfortunate people) is having a fit of apoplexy, of course, and looks much like he does when confronted with a girls high-school marching band (he wishes he was their baton, if you get my drift). McD thinks the place should be marked off as a shrine or something to commemorate the 'martyrs' who fell at the place, but Des McKeon, who was there, says the battle was much over-rated. Des says it didn't even wake him up, much less spill his drink.

Speaking of Des McKeon, the wonderful picture taken of the old coot by Rhonda is back on display at the Lion after having been found hanging in the girls' washroom at one of the New Residences on Winder Street. The blushing young snuggy who returned it to him didn't say what it had been doing there, but Des has been walking with a new spring in his step lately.

It seems the reconciliation weekend taken in the peaceful wilderness by Anglin' Bob Barnett and a heartbroken Tim Belford didn't manage to help their shaky relationship. Belford had to run away to soothe his soul in Ottawa. There reality was quickly forgotten. But when last seen, Barnett was sniffling over a beer at the Golden Lion mumbling something about going home to bed. Very sad.

My usually reliable (when sober) sources tell me that quite a circus took place at the Lennoxville Town Hall two Monday nights ago when feisty mayor Cecil Dougherty showed his Irish temper. Accused of being rude to an equally feisty Emma Bean, His Worship drew upon all his reserves to remain a gentleman in reminding the lady that he has been polite in response to her complaints for over 20 years. Well-known heavy-metal dealer Léo-Paul Valcourt, who knows a good scrap when he sees one (and good scrap when he sees it) joined right in and extended the discussion to include Alderman Henri Ruel and the state of the Town Hall's floors. Ruel, alone among the participants, retained his dignity.

"By the time this reaches print," (I said last week in my Lost Column), "philosopher-golfer Bill Shearson and his charming wife Danielle should be the proud parents of a bouncing baby boy." Shearson took the pre-arrival jitters in true stoic fashion by calmly drinking himself into a stupor and babbling incessantly. Seriously, congratulations Bill and Danielle, and I love a good cigar.

Well that was what I had in store for you last week. Then, as I mentioned, I rushed off to Ottawa, Ontariario, to watch the Progressive Conservatives sacrifice each other. What a scene! Everyone was there from George Hees to Priscilla Punk.

Hubie Bach look-alike.

Bishop's University old boys were there in alarming force, led by The Montreal Gazoo's Ottawa head gonzo — if you get my drift — Hubie Bauch. Bauch, who hasn't changed a bit since his pre-historic campus days (check the pic this page), was seen more often than he should have been lurking off to the parking lot with Charles 'Comma Killer' Bury for a breath of... something fresh, and that ain't air!

Another former Bishop's grad who made the convention was former Record publisher John Bassett. Bassett was the anchorman for CTV's analysis crew — probably because he owns CTV. Bassett, as usual, proved his political acumen by backing Joe Clark. Bernard St. Laurent, class of '73,'74,'75, was reputedly the only journalist there pushing for a draft Roch Lasalle movement. Lasalle, acutely aware of the honor accepted the draft and two bottles of Dow.

Henri Crochetiere was not there.

Of course Record staffer Tim Belford was there. Belford, the scion of a well-known Ontario Conservative family — one relative reputedly worked on John Bracken's campaign — made several predictions concerning the outcome of the convention. Unfortunately, Leonard Jones is a forgotten force within the party ranks. Belford was last seen attempting to obtain an interview with the bartender at the Chateau Laurier.

Maclean's magazine was thoroughly — if not well — represented by my fellow columnists Alan Botheringham and Barbarous Amiel. They are nominally in charge of the front and back doors of the mag, but the way they were behaving (see pic this page), no one could guess which was which!

You Saw It Here First Department: Canada's newest folk hero was crowned Queen For a Decade sometime Saturday night when Mila Mulroney's husband What's-his-name took the leadership. Within an hour the lovely Mila (pronounced Meela, like ya peela potato) was being mobbed by crowds of joyous Tory wives pushing and shoving just to get a glimpse or a touch as she was led to a limousine behind the big beer tent. Now, I know why a lot of people (my friends the perverts) would want to touch her, but these were ordinary folks! It was real Milamania.

Mark my hallowed words: before the year is out you will see the Mila Look: simple straight hair with a visible part, cut above the shoulder; girlish dresses; light on the make-up; heavy on the slim femininity; carefree but not careless; and oh, so sexy! After the Mila Look will come the Mila Book: do-it-yourself prime-minister making. Then will come the Milaburger, the Milahoop, the Return of the Mila... the possibilities — and likelihood — are endless. I just hope they don't drive her around the same bend Pierre's ex got lost on!

The pundits in the nation's capital were wondering aloud Saturday if John Crosbie (who is said to jig his own squid) would have won the leadership if he hadn't spent so much time and energy guzzling endless beers with Newfie Premier Brian Peckford. Well, you heard it here: Crosbie would have lost no matter what. But it would have hurt more if he'd stayed sober.

Bye for now!

WHAT'S ON

Music

BY MICHAEL MCDEVITT

Eyes Only are back at The Hideaway again this weekend until Saturday following what I understand was a refreshing weekend in the Laurentians. While yours truly was off slaving away in Fantasy Island (Ottawa) searching after truth, justice, and a high-paying government job during the Do-in for Joe Clark, and the rest of you were out sweltering in the terrible heat, these guys are off in the mountains getting paid. Hardly seems fair does it? Next week the Hideaway will have The Blues Busters again from Thursday until Saturday. Cal Picken tells me he's gonna keep up with those Sunday afternoon baseball parties featuring Ted Hall and the boys. He also informs me he's got something up his sleeve for Canada Day, so stay tuned.

Speaking of the Blues Busters, Bob Coley — another seeker of truth and a fast buck — tells me Brian Monty and the boys will be hooping it up at Ziggy's, the newest addition to Night Club Alley on Wellington South, this coming Monday and Tuesday night. I'm not exactly sure what line-up he'll have with him, though. The thought of Des McKeon actually working five nights in a row after completing his daily computer sabotaging is mind boggling to say the least. We'll have to see.

Bigfoot is at the Bar Ouest this weekend (Friday and Saturday) and will be for at least the next four weeks according to owner Claude Laliberté. Bigfoot are an excellent country band and are a fine addition to Bar Ouest's line-up. The Bar has had to cut down its music to two nights a week for the summer but it's nice to know there won't be any cutback in quality.

At The Manoir Waterville, Texas- Québec are back again this weekend. Now a few people have told me they find this band a little too perfect, if you know what I mean, and say this makes them less interesting than some others. I understand that point of view, but still can't help but recommend them. I found them to be highly polished and professional and can't see that as a drawback. Fortunately freedom of opinion still flourishes in this great land and if someone has the unmitigated gall to disagree with me then I'm perfectly willing to allow it. I will get even later, when I become rich, famous and powerful. Some people forget the little guys they trod upon on the way to the top, but not me. They're all in a book, in alphabetical order and everyone will be remembered and gotten even with.

At Le Stress in Sherbrooke The John Elson Trio will be playing this weekend. Obviously, Le Stress is taking a break from the punk-and-glitter scene during the hot weather.

In South Stukely, at Station 88 Barry White and Cedar Creek are back agin tomorrow. They're a good country band with a good country feeling in a good country bar. Good mix.

In Racine at the Eglise Racine a group called La Farandole will be putting on a show entitled Choeur à Choeur. This outfit consists of 43 singers, seven musicians and four dance groups, and the show is a virtual Grand Spectac'. The show is tomorrow evening at 8.

Hovey Manorand The Ripplecove are continuing their light music during dining hours. Every Wednesday and Friday evening at Hovey, and every Saturday at the Ripplecove, Lucie Dubé and Jacques Proulx perform various classical pieces and ballads to ease digestion. Proulx is a fine viola player, while Dubé is equally accomplished on piano. Both have played with the Québec Youth Orchestra and their presence is a nice addition to the already lovely atmosphere of these two fine inns.

At the Salle Veilleux in Sawyerville, the Sherbrooke Ploughman's Association is holding a dance featuring the music of The Countrymen from 9 p.m. until 1 in the morning tomorrow. Tickets are $2 advance sale and $2.50 at the door.

At The Hut as well tomorrow, there's a dance featurin' the Ramblin' Country Cats.

In Sutton tomorrow night at 8.15, Arts-Sutton is sponsoring a piano concert by William Stevens in St. André's Church on Main Street north. Also featured accompanying Stevens will be Marguerite Roy, and a special appearance by prodigy Chandrika Santhanam, a 13 year old wonder. Tickets are $6 for this event, and are available at the Book-Nook and the Arts Sutton Gallery. They are also available at the door.

The Montreal Symphony Orchestra and the Du Maurier Council for the Performing Arts are presenting the first of two free concerts next Friday under the direction of harles Dutoit. The concert features popular symphonic music including Le Corsaire Overture by Berlioz, a waltz from Swan Lake by Tchaikowsky as well as another from Eugene Onegin. Ravel's classic Bolero will be performed as well as some Strauss and the 1812 Overture also by Tchaikowsky. the concerts will take place at 8.30 p.m. at the Chalet on Mount Royal.

Final Note: This isn't music but it's worth talking about anyway, and this is the only space left, so be informed that the National Acrobatic Circus of Peking is performing at the Sports Palace on Tuesday, June 21. This group of talented Chinese will literally amaze you with what they can do with their bodies. Having seen this group once I can tell you that you just won't believe it. These people can twist, turn, bend, balance and get into more impossible predicaments than Bryce Mackasey and like him, still come up smiling on both feet. It is an amazing show, your kids will love it.

Exhibitions

Festival Lac Massawippi will be holding an artisan and handicraft exhibition and sale beginning on Wednesday June 22 and continuing until July 4. The show will be presented at the Town Hall in Hatley and will be open between 10 a.m and 4 in the afternoon. The Festival is still accepting registration by artists wishing to be included in the event, and will do so until Sunday at 4 p.m. Anyone wishing to participate can register at the St. James Church Hall.

At the Piggery in North Hatley, artist Kay Kinsman will be exhibiting a collection of watercolors and drawings this Sunday June 18. Kinsman is a well-known local artists and her work has been appreciated by many an art fan. The Piggery itself is getting ready to begin its new season, and will be holding its annual fund-raising dinner dance also this Sunday at the theatre beginning at 6.30. The Piggery is the only surviving English-language theatre in the area, and over the past years has provided first-class dramatic entertainment. The fundraiser will be an elegant and enjoyable affair with a buffet dinner served up by many of the local eating places. Music will be provided by the popular Robinson Fowler Band, and tickets for the event are $15 each or $25 a couple and are on sale at the box office or by calling (819) 843-2191. It will be worth it.

Mary S. Martin, an artist well known in the Eastern townships, will be presenting an exhibition of 40 new oil paintings beginning next Sunday (June 25) at the Brome County Historical Society Museum in Knowlton. Martin will also be presenting a collection of watercolor and ink sketches. The show will continue to July 3.

Arts Sutton will be featuring a special showing this weekend of oils by Bev Hamilton another artist from the region who has exhibited frequently in the Townships area. Hamilton will be exhibiting, along with others, this Saturday and Sunday.

Beginning on Monday, The Beaulne Museum will be featuring an exhibit of the painting of well-known Sherbrooke artist Yvan Dagenais until September 6. Dagenais works in pastels and has studied the use of this medium with many great painters including Jack Callahan and Albert Handler.

There are a couple of things going on at the Laurier Museum in Arthabaska. Beginning Monday and continuing into September an exhibition entitled Bookbinding: an Art, a Tradition will examine the past and present of this noble art. The traditions of bookbinding go back a long time and have developed to a fine art. Works by four of Québec's finest exemplars of this craft will be on hand to illustrate the beauty of a job well done. Marthe Forcier Laroche, Louise Blain Séguin, Odette Drapeau Milot, and Jean-Paul Bodain will be on hand at the vernissage on Monday to answer any questions about their work. The vernissage begins at 4.30 p.m.

Beginning on Wednesday, the Laurier Museum is also presenting a historical display entitled Dreams of Empire: Canada before 1700, which compiles documents from England, France, Canada, the U.S.,The Vatican and other countries, and is designed to offer insights into the motivations that drove our ancestors, from wherever, to leave their home shores and travel to a strange and often unfriendly land. The show will remain until the end of July.

The Sherbrooke Amateur Astronomers Association is inviting the public to visit their display booth at the Carrefour de l'Estrie tomorrow and find out about the wonderful world of star gazing. More and more amateurs are taking up this activity and as a science it remains one of the generally fascinating and accessible fields. The Association is also holding an Observation Night in the parking lot of Le Triolet Polyvalent School the same evening at 9 p.m. and everyone is invited. In case of bad weather the observation evening will be held on Wednesday.

Congratulations are due to the Town of Lennoxville for having been chosen as the site for next year's Cultural Village festival. The festival allows for the people of an town, city, or village, to celebrate its cultural heritage with a wide variety of cultural activities. This year's event is taking place in Bromptonville from the 7th to the 10th of July.

Mary Martin is showing in Brome.

WHAT'S ON

Movies

It would appear that we will have the opportunity at last to get a glimpse of the new Monty Python movie as The Meaning of Life finally makes its appearance in Sherbrooke. Playing at the Capitol, this latest piece of nonsense from the incredible English comedy outfit has been praised by many critics, and panned by an equal number — as are most Monty Python movies. The key to this dispute, however is chiefly this; either you like Monty Python's style of comedy or you don't. Personally I find these guys hilarious, but I have many friends who find them childish and a waste of time. They're right too, of course. It is that very basic absurdity that I find so amusing. Not everything works, but you get nowhere if you don't try ...right? Anyway, The Meaning of Life is on a double bill with The Thing, John Carpenter's version of a story about a group of Antarctic scientists being terrified by an unseen evil released inadvertantly from millions of years of frozen imprisonment. Kurt Russell of all-the-Disney-movies-ever-made fame stars.

The Cinema 2 is sticking with Flashdance for one more week, while Octopussy remains at Cinema 3. Both these movies are good enough entertainment and I recommend them to you on the clear understanding that they are not great movies, merely good entertainment. You really can't ask for more.

In Cowansville, Jennifer Bealsand Flashdance are playing as well at the Cinema Princesse along with another pretty good movie American Gigolo. The latter, starring Richard Gere and Lauren Hutton was a real surprise to me when I first saw it. I expected to see a cheap sexist clunker designed to get everybody off on Gere's good looks, but in reality it is a surprisingly good movie about a gigolo who has the whole world in his pocket until everything starts to go frighteningly, inexorably wrong. Gere is very good as the increasingly confused fleshpedlar and Lauren Hutton is quite acceptable as the beautiful lady who loves him. Try it. You'll be surprised.

At the Derby-Port Drive-in this weekend Airplane II The Sequel is playing tonight and tomorrow. Starring Robert Hays and Julie Hagerty as well as the other assorted loonies in the original, the movie takes the crew into outer space on the first cruise shuttle to the moon. Not as good as the original but not bad.

On Sunday Tim Conway and Don Knotts head the cast in The Private Eyes, a film I have not, and am not likely to see. However, these two men are masters of a certain kind of comedy that appeals to lots of people. It is no more silly and childish than Monty Python, for example. Given good writing — unlikely I know — these comedians could make a formidable team.

On Moday and Tuesday Best Friends starring Burt Reynoldsand Goldie Hawn hits the screen. This movie is a shame because Reynolds and Hawn are a great team and their talents alone almost make the movie worth seeing. The premise and the writing, however, are boring and make it a tiring sitting. Too bad.

On Wednesday and Thursday, this year's Oscar champ Gandhi appears on the big outdoor screen and although it received, in my opinion, far too much hype, it is an excellent movie and one worthy of seeing.

At the Norton Drive-in, tonight and tomorrow, Richard Pryor and Jackie Gleason star in The Toy, a farce about a very rich man with a very spoiled kid. The former buys the latter a very dark 'toy'. Guess who plays what.

On Sunday, Airplane II again.

Tuesday and Wednesday are smut nights at the Norton, and this week we are blessed with The Seven Seductions of Madame Lau starring Annette Haven. Knowing this kind of film, seven seductions probably take approximately 20 minutes or, as frequently happens, if they're all going on at the same time at different parts of the body — five minutes.

Television

Tomorrow afternoon at 1, Channel 12 offers a fine piece of entertainment in Butch Cassidy and the Sundance Kid, the movie that first brought together the talents of Paul Newman and Robert Redford. The hearthrob duo star as the legendary outlaws from the latter days of the American old west whose exploits made them anti-heroes before their rather unpleasant death in South America. Katherine Ross — whose image is ingraved in Entertainment Editor Tim Belford's mind permanently — also stars as the comely school marm who joins up with them. This is an excellent western comedy adventure.

Tomorrow evening at 7 on Vermont ETV, American filmaker Skip Sweeney examines the often painful father/son relationship in My Father Sold Studebakers. Using home movies and extensive interviews, Sweeney takes a very personal, close-up look at his own relationship with his father, a car dealer in Southern California. this is a sensitive, if highly personal, approach to a common problem — the difficulty some people have in forming close relationships with difficult parents.

At midnight, Channel 12 offers Neil Simon's pastiche of modern life California Suite, four separate stories centred around the Beverly Hills Hotel. Alan Alda, Michael Caine and Jane Fonda star in this well-done, but jerky film.

On Sunday at 9 p.m. on CBC,I Married the Klondike presents its second episode in which Laura meets the broke but optimistic young prospector Frank Berton, played by R.H. Thomson.

At 10, on Vermont ETV, The Unquiet Death of Julius and Ethel Rosenberg documents the events and circumstances surrounding the controversial treason trial and execution of two American socialists, which was, and remains, one of the most disputed cases in American legal history. The paranoid background of the Cold War was always there in the early fifties and colored the debate over whether this young couple had in reality sold the secret of the Hydrogen Bomb to the Soviet Union. Fascinating, and disturbing social history.

Also at 10 on CBC, celebrated guitarist Norbert Kraft joins the Toronto Symphony Orchestra in presenting Sevilla and Concierto de Aranjuez. Kraft, who has been the wunderkind of the classical guitar in recent years demonstrates the reason for this popularity with a concert designed to reach as broad an audience as possible. This event kicks off CBC's summer concert series.

At midnight Channel 6 presents the 1941 production of Major Barbara by George Bernard Shaw. Wendy Hillerand Rex Harrison star in this classic about a wealthy young woman who joins the Salvation Army. An excellent production of a wry and witty play.

On Monday evening at 9 on Vermont ETV, Solti Conducts Rossini features the Chicago Symphony Orchestra under the direction of George Solti performng various Rossini overtures including The Barber of Seville and The Italian Women of Algiers.

On Tuesday, The Chinese, the highly acclaimed CBC series with Patrick Watson offers a look at Chinese peasant life in Little Brother's Wedding. The show presents a light look at Chinese peasant life, rich in color and humour as a family prepares for the wedding of a younger son.

At 8 p.m on Tuesday, Channel 12 presents a look at black American music in Motown 25, a Silver Anniversary Celebration of the Detroit Sound featuring the likes of Smokey Robinson, Diana Ross, Stevie Wonder, Michael Jackson and The Temptations. The Motown sound stormed out of Detroit in the late fifties and rhythm and blues has never been the same since. The harmonies and strong beat of Motown music made for it a unique place in American music and saw the creation of a black musical establishment that still dominates the black American music scene.

On Wednesday, Vermont ETV offers two good programs. At 8, My Brilliant Career, the superb Australian movie about the growing pains of a young girl is featured followed by Generations of Resistance, a unique look at the history of black opposition to apartheid rule in South Africa. The first, a movie that was praised by theatre goers and critics alike, something that doesn't happen all that often, launched the recent trend of first-rate Australian films that have captured the imagination of American film fans. The second is an in depth study of a revolution in waiting.

On Thursday at 3 p.m. on CBC Canadian Reflections takes a look at Canadian oceanographer Peter Beamish, whose studies of the great whale have led to his activism in ecological and conservationist issues. The film follows Beamish in his ocean research and interviews with the concerned scientist explain his views on some controversial issues. Many area residents will remember hearing Beamish earlier this year when he spoke to the members of the St. Francis Valley Naturalists' Club.

Finally at 8, also on CBC,Summer Movie Festival presents the beautiful Jennifer Dale in Suzanne. Based on a novel by North Hatley's Ronald Sutherland this film, about a young girl and the two men she loves in working-class Montreal in the 50s, was panned by Canadian critics but was raved over by their colleagues in the United States. It's an uneven film, but the cinematography, acting and storyline blend marvelously to make a strong movie, with a unique Canadian cinematic realism. It is definitely worth a look.

Radio

Tonight on CBC Radio's Nightfall the second part of the dramatization of John Wyndham's The Chrysalids is being presented. The Crysalids is a powerful story of a young boy in the post nuclear age who discovers to his horror that he is beginning to develop telepathic powers. While not such a terrible thing in itself, the discovery of this ability terrifies him as the society in which he lives abhors mutations and does everything in its power to destroy those displaying any 'unnatural' traits. The show concludes next week.

On Ideas at 8.05 on CBC Stereo Styles of Truth: Decoding the Documentary examines the history and development of the film genre and looks at ways that documentary film can be used as convincing and often unintentional propaganda. The show features interviews with award-winning Canadian filmaker Donald Brittain, one of the most successful documentarists around.

On Saturday at 7.05 on CBC Radio The Ocean Limited presents Nancy White an enjoyable satiric songwriter whose jibes at society and its leaders have made her a much sought-after entertainer. White is also an actress and comedienne, and her unique view of important social issues, such as feminism, have earned her awards and critical acclaim.

Also at 7.05 on CBC Stereo an historical drama about the life of a persecuted Canadian socialist and pacifist is recreated. Between Two Fires: The Story of Ginger Goodwin tells just that; the experiences of an early British Columbia Labor Organizer, Socialist candidate and draft evader who was hunted down and shot 65 years ago. The story begins on the night in 1978 when a group of old-timers assemble to commemorate the 60th anniversary of Goodwin's murder.

On Sunday afternoon at 3, CBC Stereo presents a rebroadcast of the concert by Soviet pianist Emil Gilels on Live From Roy Thomson Hall. The concert was the first North American appearance by Gilels since 1979, and was greeted by an enthusiastic audience. Gilels plays selections by Brahms and Schumann, and the intermission features an interview with Ivan Daviswho discusses the Russian piano tradition.

At 4.05 on CBC Radio Sunday Matinée presents Farmed Out by Vancouver writer Phil Saavath. It is the story of a woman who convinces her daughter and her new husband that they should move from the city to the quiet life in the country, but soon discovers, as do they all, that the change in lifestyles is more difficult than anticipated, and produces also a change in attitudes toward life and each other. The show stars Timothy Webber, Ali Giron and ex-stripper and anti-porn crusader Linda Lee Tracey.

At 7.05, on Sunday Stereo Theatre the BBC production of The Lord of the Rings sees Frodo and his band of travelers inside the beautiful land of Lothlorien, where Queen Galadriel greets them lavishly and offers a wider view of the history of the Ring and of her own people, the Elves. Soon after departure from the enchanted place, the Fellowship breaks up in argument and death.

On Wednesday evening Ideas continues its examination of Marx and the Marxists by looking at Communism Nationalized. After Stalin's political defeat of Trotsky in the late 1920s, the idea of Socialism in One Country stripped socialism of its reliance on internationalism and allowed nationalist fervour to develop within the socialist thinking of the 30s. After the war, when Communists ruled in many countries, the existance of nationalism in the communist movement prevented the monolithic development of Communism so feared in the west.

How TV sports lures big-money sponsors

Brooks Robinson

JOCK HYPE — No doubt about it. TV sports is a multi-billion dollar bonanza for U.S. advertisers. And top jocks reap big bucks for hawking all kinds of products — from underwear to watches to automobiles.

"We couldn't be more delighted," explains Bruce Cleverly, marketing manager of Gillette's Safety Razor Division, about his firm's links to TV sports. It claims to be the first major corporation to identify with sports.

Cleverly says Gillette currently spends 60 percent of its TV ad money on sports — with four-fifths of that going to baseball. The All-Star Game and the World Series are the company's biggest TV sports events.

"The networks are still delivering the big audiences," says Cleverly on how America's big sports advertisers — being tempted for the first time by the impact of cable TV — decide to spend their broadcast money.

Gillette has been doing some TV advertising on cable, mostly on sports programs. Says Cleverly: "We're learning about cable like everybody else."

Among the history of Gillette's TV firsts:

1944 — first TV boxing broadcast (Pep vs. Wright); 1947 — first telecast of the World Series; 1949 — first telecast of the All-Star Game, Preakness and Belmont Stakes; 1951 — first coast-to-coast World Series telecast; and 1953 — first baseball player TV commercial — Vic Raschi.

This season Hall of Famers Brooks Robinson and Joe Cronin have been promoting the Gillette-sponsored fan balloting for the 50th All-Star Game, which is to be played on July 6 at Comiskey Park in Chicago.

"The All-Star Game and the World Series are our one-two punch," says Cleverly. He says the World Series delivers more than 100 million TV viewers.

Network television is what big corporations turn to most for mass marketing. The costs are high, but so are the sales. Everything is geared to more than make up for what a company spends on million-dollar TV campaigns.

Gillette, for example, aims its TV ads at 30 million men and 10 million women who use the company's razors and other products.

My daddy has huntington's disease and so does my aunt. He lives in a nursing home where they take care of him and I hope you find a cure for everyone who is suffering from this disease.

-from Mary

P.S. It means a lot.

Movie Nostalgia

By Marie Iandiorio

One of the most emotional contests in the history of the Academy Awards began to take shape nearly two years before the 1964 Oscar presentation night.

Julie Andrews, the highly acclaimed star of the Broadway and London productions of "My Fair Lady," was passed over for the motion picture lead. This coveted role went instead to a star of proven stature and super box-office appeal, Audrey Hepburn. Producer Jack Warner reasoned that Miss Andrews, untried in films, was too big a risk for his $17 million production.

But another producer, Walt Disney, was willing to take a chance with Miss Andrews. He cast her in the title role of his next film. In 1964, she won the Best Actress Oscar for her performance in the Disney classic, "Mary Poppins." Strangely enough, Miss Hepburn wasn't even nominated for her performance in "My Fair Lady."

Question: Can you name the Best Actress nominees for 1964?

Answers: Anne Bancroft, Sophia Loren, Julie Andrews, Debbie Reynolds and Kim Stanley.

Soap Beat

By Connie Passalacqua

When NBC canceled the beautifully acted "Texas" at the end of last year, daytime TV lost some of its finest performers. Fortunately, during the past few months, several have gone on to other soap roles.

"Search for Tomorrow" has shown good sense in hiring 13-year-old Damion Scheller to play Josh Moreno. The character, says Damion, is "a genius who likes to cook."

Damion Scheller

As Gregory Marshall on "Texas," Damion showed himself to be not only the best child actor in the medium, but one of the best actors of any age on the afternoon airwaves. Damion made Gregory both heart-tugging and unfailingly believable throughout the many crises of the character's life. He shaped a total character, as opposed to many daytime child actors who get by with minimal acting skills.

Amazingly, Damion has never had an acting lesson since he began his career at age 5.

"My acting started with my total addiction to television. I picked it up from every show I watched. I had an instinct to pick up and memorize lines and songs and then I'd act them out on my own," he says. "I'd imitate actors and their characters."

Damion says he was inspired by characters from "Sesame Street" and "The Odd Couple." He's also partial to such "Star Wars" characters as Darth Vader.

No one in Damion's family is an actor. He says he got into the business on his own. However, his mother escorted him while he did scores of commercials prior to "Texas" and when he appeared in a string of films, such as "Rich and Famous" and "Manhattan," in which he played Woody Allen's son.

Damion lives with his mother, younger sister and stepfather in Manhattan and is a seventh-grade student in a New York private school.

"My father owns a restaurant, which is great for my new role. But I think I'm more like Gregory than Josh. I love mechanical things like cars."

But Damion has demonstrated that he picks up on things quickly. In no time he'll probably know the ins and outs of cooking, which is Josh's passion.

Exciting year for Jr. Miss

By Andy Noble

Susan Hammett of Hattiesburg, Miss. has just experienced the most exciting year of her life. Last June she won the title of America's Junior Miss — and was awarded $34,000 in college scholarship money.

On Tuesday, June 21, she'll turn over her title to the new America's Junior Miss for 1983. The winner will be selected from 52 finalists during the CBS telecast of the finals from Mobile, Ala.

"I really didn't know what to expect when I won the title last year. I didn't expect to win. I was just so happy to be selected Mississippi's Junior Miss and go to Mobile for the finals," says Miss Hammett.

During her one-year reign, Miss Hammett and her chaperon, Mrs. Mildred Hodson, covered more than 40,000 miles all across America.

Only two days after being selected America's Junior Miss, Miss Hammett flew to New York to appear on "The Today Show."

"I thought I would be nervous appearing on national TV," Miss Hammett says, "but Jane Pauley and the program's staff put me at ease. It was a very exciting moment."

Miss Hammett was honored during the year at the Academy of Achievement, was the Queen of the Senior Bowl football game, and attended the Chicagofest celebration.

She has just completed her first year at Louisiana State University. She's planning a career in speech pathology and audiology, and hopes to join her father, Dr. Lawrence Hammett, in his clinic in Hattiesburg after graduation.
