WHO'S WHO

In my dream I saw John Christian in Electrical City

By Tadeusz Letarte

"And the devil did grin, for his darling sin Is pride that apes humility."

Coleridge

And so it came to pass once more that I chanced upon the same park bench with another unwanted paper lying thereon. And being much wearied and sore oppressed with carping editorials, I sat me down in the sun, took up the paper and read therein:

"Never as the founding people of this country," bugled Louis Plamondon, M.P. for Richelieu, "will we forget the many humiliations that were inflicted on us within this great country that we thought was ours. The humiliation of the Conquest; the humiliation of the Patriotes; the humiliation of the Act of Union; the humiliation of Louis Riel; the humiliation of Conscription; the humiliation of the 1982 patriation of the British North America Act; the humiliation of the Meech Lake Accord."

"It's come to the point," said Jean Chrétien, "that we're talking about humiliation on every street corner."

And Lucien, methought, betrayed Himself in his hour of need for "making an alliance with those who want Quebec to continue to be humiliated." And as methought these thoughts of the political exploitation of shame and fear, so did I sleep and dreamed a dream.

I dreamed I saw a tall man with a crooked grin and a voice like broken whisky bottles limping out of the Valley of Humiliation and arriving at the Electrical City where two streams meet. And upon his back were two great burdens like unto those of a Bactrian camel, and the name of one was Repatriation and the other was called Meech.

And there were with him his four handmaidens — Guile, Wit, Subterfuge and Promises — somewhat jaded and long past their prime. And Christian did limp with a self-inflicted wound, having stabbed himself in the foot with a blunt remark.

Yet in my dream I saw John Christian met at the gates of the Electrical City by his fellow pilgrims — Warren and Sheila, Shirley and André and Paul, son of Paul. And verily did they rejoice at seeing one another and Christian forgot his burdens and was light-some and glad as he was led by his apostles through the streets of the city. On all sides, vanities were offered for sale and there was a great hubbub of people — some cheering as he passed, others jeering at the burdens on his back and his halting gait, most hurrying about their business without look or word.

Once Christian thought he caught sight of an ancient ghost of a man with a flower in his lapel and a starlet half his age upon his arm but he did look away from this venerable shade and limped on to a secret place where he might discourse together with his fellows.

But first they had to drive away a swarm of Record reporters and then they had to destroy every fly for fear a Special Agent was employing the latest CSIS listening devices. And just as they were feeling secure, they discovered a small dark photographer with a great big lens hiding in a corner. He was easily lured away by a pleasing child and they could at last discourse together.

"What is it thou disirest most, John Christian?" asked one.

And he answered saying, "Only that my people love me once again as they did long ago." And he asked each one in turn what they desired most and they answered him and he summoned a servant and sent him for a bucket of chicken, pepperoni pizza and two boxes of beer.

They did they eat and drink together right merrily and tell stories both clean and unclean one unto another.

Then in my dream did they bestir themselves and spake in low voices of the coming Judgement Day. One said it would come late next year, another favored the following spring, but all agreed that come it must and they should prepare themselves. They did tell Christian that he was leading in the pilgrimage with Dame Audrey close behind and Himself so far at a distance the trumpets would sound a second Judgement Day before he came in sight again.

But Paul, son of Paul, did gravely warn two things must occur betimes — either Himself will make an arrangement or he will not. In the first instance, he will be a hero; in the second no one will want his job.

But John Christian answered that things were never simple in the land of the loon, that there were many muddy and entangled ways and never this or that. Then did they all agree that the key to 24 Sussex lay under a mat somewhere in the land of the Lily Flowers and that it was guarded — not by Himself — but by Giant Black Brows and his Humiliation Chorus. Black Brows had boasted his followers will take sixty seats on Judgement Day and while one sneered at this Paul, son of Paul, reminded them they had but nine places themselves and that was just one more than Black Brows' followers.

Then spoke they of Christian's sermon to inspire the faithful, to stir the dispirited for the battle that must come. Easy enough, they said, to smite Himself on the heavy hand of the tax collector and the idleness and poverty throughout the land — far harder, they said, to battle Black Brows and replace the politics of humiliation with pride and tolerance.

Then did Christian say that all the world was in a turmoil and none could say what would occur before Judgement Day was called. His theme, when the trumpets sounded, would be as it always was — throw the villains out! For all the rest, he said, he must meet each challenge as it arose with the help of his four jades — Guile, Wit, Subterfuge and Promises.

Then did Paul, son of Paul, suggest he needed the summer off — preferably in some foreign land — lest he injure his other foot with a blunt remark.

And arguing thus, they did venture out to meet the faithful.

"I dreamed I saw a tall man with a crooked grin and a voice like broken whisky bottles limping out of the Valley of Humiliation..."

Michael Landon isn't afraid to die

MALIBU, Calif. (AP) — Diagnosed as having inoperable liver cancer, Michael Landon plans to "fight like hell" to stay alive but isn't afraid to die, the actor said in a magazine interview to be published Monday.

The 54-year-old star of Bonanza, Little House On The Prairie and Highway To Heaven was diagnosed in April with cancer of the pancreas and liver.

Since then, Landon has been spending his time on the Malibu ranch where he lives with his third wife, Cindy, 34. The father of nine has been undergoing an experimental therapy that pits drug-dispersing bubbles of fat against the tumor in his pancreas.

Only three per cent of pancreatic cancer patients and five per cent of liver cancer patients survive more than five years after diagnosis, according to the American Cancer Society's Cancer Facts & Figures -1991.

The actor talked about cancer, his troubled childhood and his hopes for the future in the June edition of Life magazine. Here are some excerpts:

On being diagnosed with inoperable cancer:

"I'm not the kind of person who gives up without a fight. If I'm gonna die, death's gonna have to do a lot of fighting to get me.

"I want to see my kids grow up. I want to play baseball with Sean (his four-year-old son). I want to know if Jennifer (his seven-year-old daughter) turns out to be as good an actress as I think she will be. I want to watch Chris, my 16-year-old, become a man. I love my wife, Cindy, very much and I don't want to leave her."

MOTHER 'CRAZY'

On his childhood in New Jersey and his mother:

"She did crazy things all the time. Like, she kept making dramatic attempts to commit suicide. I'm this little boy and I'd walk into the kitchen and find her with her head in the oven and the gas turned on.

"Life outside the family wasn't much better. We were one of two Jewish families in a working-class town that had its share of anti-Semites...people in passing cars used to shout 'Jew bastard! Jew bastard!'"

On his hopes for the future:

"I believe in God, I believe in family, I believe in truth between people, I believe in the power of love. I believe that we really are created in God's image, that there is God in all of us. So I deal with the God I really know, and that's you. When I need to ask forgiveness, I don't ask a God in the sky. That's too easy. I ask you.

"So I don't see why I should fear death — and I don't. I don't want to die, and I'm going to fight like hell not to, but I'm not afraid to die."

Plymouth-Trinity Church: a historical monument

SHERBROOKE — Quebec's Ministry of Cultural Affairs has recently classified the Plymouth-Trinity church as an historic building because it is the oldest church in Sherbrooke.

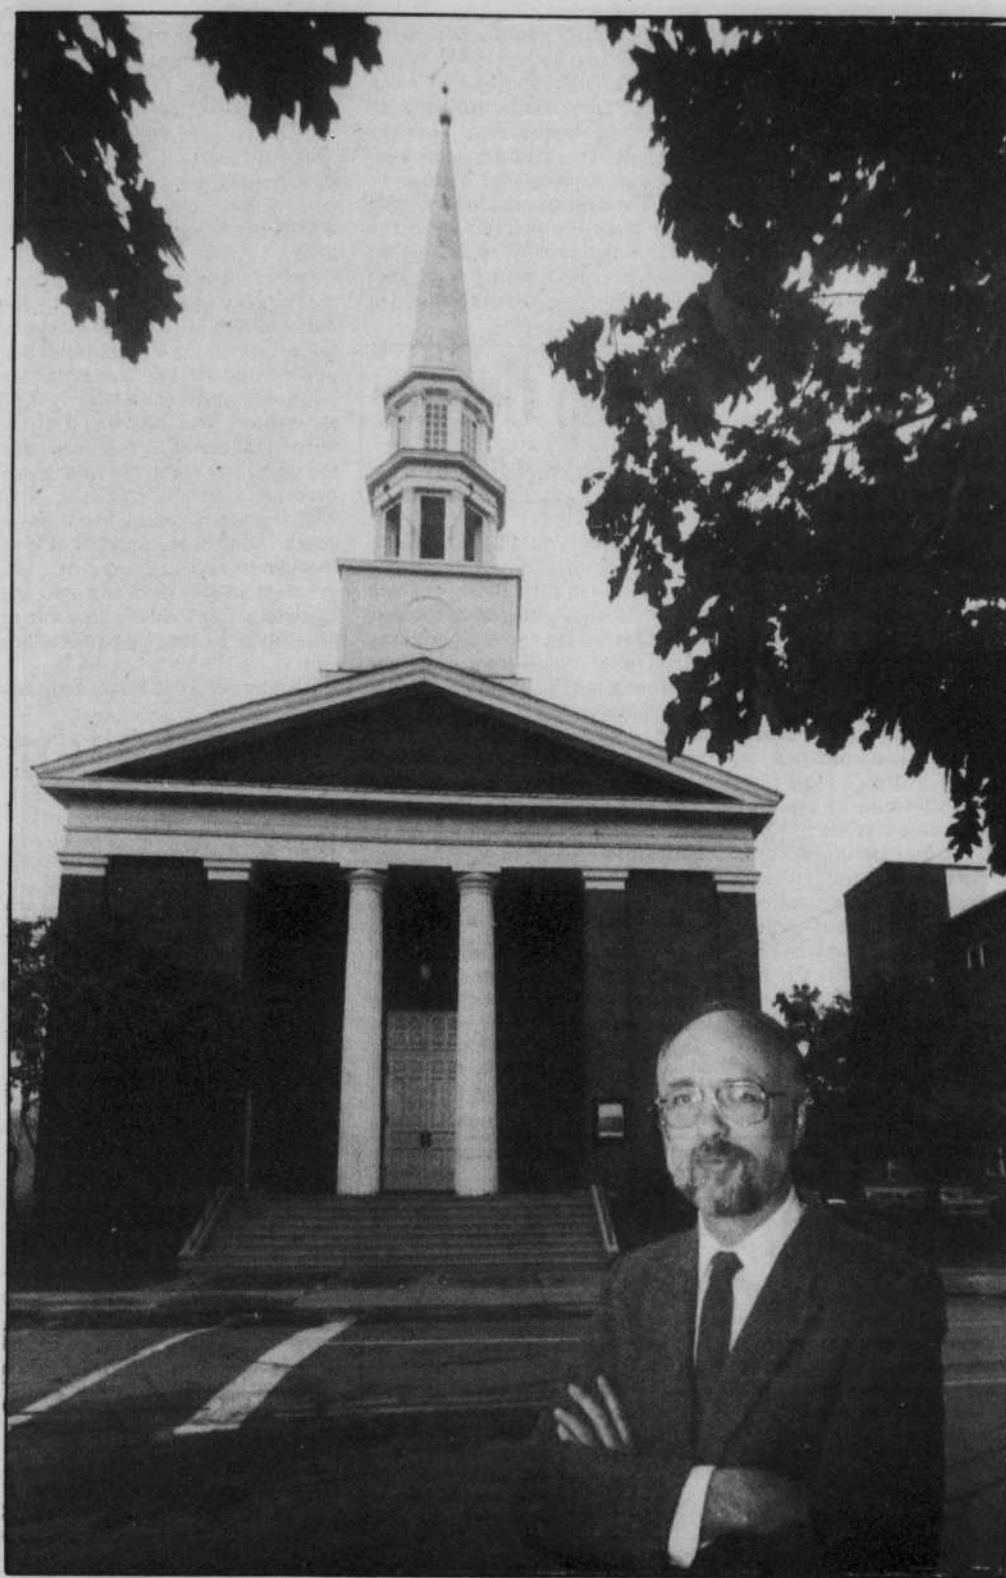

By this action, the Ministry has ensured that the historical and cultural significance of the building will remain of importance not only for the citizens of Sherbrooke, but also for the rest of Quebec and all of Canada.

The Plymouth-Trinity church was built in 1855 according to plans made by William Footner, the architect of Montreal's Bonsecours Market. It is one of the finest examples of Greek-revival or Neoclassical architecture in the country.

To mark this special event, the Plymouth-Trinity congregation will unveil a bronze plaque during the worship service on Sunday afternoon, May 26, 1991 at 2:30. The Presider will be the President of the Montreal & Ottawa Conference of the United Church, Reverend Burn Purdon. The preacher will be the Chairman of the Quebec-Sherbrooke Presbytery, Reverend V. Martyn Sadler.

The congregation extends a warm welcome to all those who wish to join them for the worship service and the reception that will be held in the church hall after the service.

Reverend V. Martyn Sadler will preach at Sherbrooke's oldest church this Sunday.

The rise and fall of a studio

By Hillel Italic

The Associated Press

As the Academy Award-winning Dances With Wolves dragged a month behind schedule during its filming, detractors probably said, "This is what happens when you put the artist in charge."

But Kevin Costner wasn't doing anything revolutionary when he decided to be director, star and co-producer.

He was simply continuing what started in 1919 when Charlie Chaplin, Douglas Fairbanks, Mary Pickford and D. W. Griffith shook up the movie industry by stepping outside a rigid studio system and taking control of their work.

The cries of "Kevin's Gate" that greeted Costner's epic western, which won seven Oscars, echoed one Hollywood wag's insistence that the "lunatics have taken over the asylum" after Chaplin and company founded United Artists.

Ironically, the studio collapsed under the wreckage of another western, Heaven's Gate.

ALL THEMSELVES

Imagine Costner, Julia Roberts, Eddie Murphy, Woody Allen and Tom Cruise forming their own studio. Imagine them financing and distributing their own films and collecting all the profits.

That was the concept of UA, and the result was both a great success and an agonizing failure.

UA was home to the biggest stars of the silent era — Chaplin, Fairbanks, Buster Keaton, Gloria Swanson and Rudolph Valentino — and to future industry giants such as Walt Disney, Samuel Goldwyn and Darryl Zanuck.

Its pictures pulled in 11 Oscars. Billy Wilder directed The Apartment. Milos Forman contributed One Flew Over the Cuckoo's Nest. Allen made Annie Hall. Other Oscar winners included Rocky, Midnight Cowboy, In the Heat of the Night and Marty.

UA also made a string of James Bond movies starring Sean Connery and The Pink Panther cartoons.

HEAVEN'S FLOP

But the studio also had its disappointments, dry spells and disaster, notably Heaven's Gate, the big-budget flop that forced UA in the early 1980s to merge with MGM.

United Artists' history began in 1918, a time when the industry was dominated by such biggies as Fox Film Corp., First National (later Warner Bros.) and Adolph Zukor's Paramount Pictures.

Hiram Abrams and B.P. Schulberg, two associates of Zukor, became frustrated with their lack of influence and wanted a company of their own, not one controlled by businessmen.

What they had in mind was a studio financed by the artists themselves. Names were needed, the biggest in Hollywood.

By the beginning of 1919, Schulberg had put together a manifesto called "89 Reasons for United Artists," and went to work on the idea.

He started with Chaplin. The comedian was intrigued by the idea and discussed it with his close friend, Fairbanks, who in turn talked to Pickford, his future wife.

Queen Elizabeth II Centennial stamps: definitive issues

Definitive issues have generally been considered as the best source of collecting among philatelists or as some prefer, stamp collectors. Unlike commemoratives, they offer challenges. That's usually because they have long runs and a number of printings.

The Queen Elizabeth II Centennial issue has been well documented as a definitive issue and has provided collectors with a great many hours of enjoyment. That's probably because of the many varieties the issue offers. Of lesser interest to collectors, and yet, a definitive issue that can provide almost as much enjoyment is the Queen Elizabeth II "Wilding" portrait issue of 1954-1962. The issue received its name because of the design based on a photo by Dorothy Wilding.

The first five denominations of this issue appeared on June 10, 1954. The five cent denomination was issued in April of that year while the six cents was issued in June of 1954. Also included in the series was a fifteen cent Gannet and it was issued at the same time as the five cents denomination.

The Wildings didn't really attract much attention in the first eight years of existence. They were just another definitive. Coil stamps were issued for the two, four and five cents denominations along with booklet panes of various combinations. Even postal stationery provided very little for the specialist. In short, until 1962, the issue had to be considered as dull.

In 1962, Canada Post decided to experiment using tagging on stamps for automatic cancelling. The experiment was carried out in Winnipeg using Phosphor bands. They naturally assumed the name of Winnipeg Tags. At the same time, these stamps began to appear on Fluorescent and hibrite papers. This immediately changed the whole of the Wilding issue. Tagging was reserved for definitives only. The first stamps to be tagged other than definitives were the Christmas stamps of 1963. The first commemorative stamp to be tagged was the flag and map stamp of 1967.

Stamp Corner

By Peter McCarthy

Many people didn't grasp the significance of tagging for quite some time. In fact, there was one Canadian catalogue publisher that didn't list the tag varieties until the early 1970s. The ultra-violet light became a necessary tool in Canadian philately.

What gave the Wildings such a boost was the timing of the tags. They appeared in 1962 and the definitives were changed in 1963. In fact, the five cent denomination of the Cameo issued made its appearance in October of 1962 while the rest of the issue was released in early 1963.

In the early days of tagging, the catalogues simply listed the Wildings as being tagged two bar. The exception was the four cent violet which was tagged one bar. The six cent orange was the only stamp not to have been tagged. In talking of the Wildings, the Gannet is omitted. As late as 1984, one particular catalogue actually devoted more to the 1967 centennials than the Wildings.

As more collectors realized that an ultra-violet light was must, more interest in phosphors and Fluorescents was generated. It wasn't long before information was being funnelled into a central area.

One of those very important central areas was a gentleman by the name of Ken Rose. Ken became infatuated by tagged perfin and tagged errors. He had a regular column in a philatelic newspaper on the subject. Not only was it discovered that the Wildings were printed on Fluorescent and hibrite papers but, these also came tagged in addition to the tags on non fluorescent. What was significant was the discovery of tagged errors. The greatest in the Wildings was one bar where there should have two or possibly once missing bar at either side.

Booklet pane collectors soon discovered that while tagging bars were not applied to the Wilding booklets, they did come in the fluorescent and hibrite papers. Due to the short run of the latter, prices have since gone quite high. As of 1984 however, these varieties were not even listed.

A close study of the coil stamps revealed the same as the sheet and booklet stamps. The too appeared in various grades of fluorescent papers. Errors were found in the "jump" strips. Pre-cancelled stamps in the coils were not being listed.

During the Wilding period, perfins were very much in existence, although it was a practice slowly being done away with. Large companies such as Canadian National Railways, Bell Telephone, Canadian Pacific Railways and Canadian International Harvester among other smaller companies still used the perfin on their stamps. While these are interesting subjects to collect, Ken Rose went a little farther by looking for tagged perfins. During the Wilding era, only three companies insignia were found on tagged stamps. Canadian National Railways' Winnipeg office and the Great Northern Railway whose office was in St. Paul, Minnesota.

Thanks to a post office experiment in 1962, the Wildings were taken from a ho-hum definitive to a rather exciting issue that deserves more attention that what it has received. A well organized exhibit of this issue will certainly reap respectable philatelic awards in most major shows.

A major case of injustice?

By Betsy Powell

The Canadian Press

Rubin (Hurricane) Carter was a top middleweight American boxer preparing for a title fight when he was railroaded into prison in 1967 for the killing of three people in a New Jersey bar.

After facing the prospect of execution in the electric chair and enduring almost 20 years behind bars, Carter was cleared of the shotgun slayings through the efforts of a close-knit group of Canadians.

In ordering his release, the judge concluded the conviction had been tainted by racial bias and the prosecution had concealed evidence.

Carter is black; the victims were white.

One U.S. legal scholar has called it "one of the most significant cases of American injustice this century."

How the Canadians won Carter's release is documented in the new book Lazarus and the Hurricane.

TOOK EIGHT YEARS

Authors Sam Chaiton and Terry Swinton, two of the eight Canadians who spent eight years trying to free Carter, recount how a black youth named Lesra Martin led them to the jailed boxer.

They met Lesra, a stocky 15-year-old denizen of a Brooklyn ghetto, while in New York on business in 1979.

The Canadians "adopted" Lesra — the way his parents pronounced his biblical name Lazarus — and took him to Toronto to teach him to read and write.

When Lesra delved into African-American history, he stumbled across Carter's prison biography, The 16th Round.

"From its pages Rubin Carter spoke directly to him," the authors write. Lesra was so enthralled that he read most of the book aloud to his adopted family, who were shocked by the travesty of justice that had sent the boxer to jail.

Thus began a crusade to prove Carter's innocence.

FALSE EVIDENCE

By hiring a private investigator and researching voluminous records of the case, the Canadians discovered that the two key witnesses who testified against Carter later recanted, saying they had been pressured by police to give false evidence.

They also learned that public outry during the 1970s resulted in a second trial, but Carter again was convicted. He became a cause celebre; his story of justice gone wrong was even the subject of a Bob Dylan song.

NOT IDENTIFIED

The six other Canadians who fought for Carter's release want their identities kept secret.

The authors also play down their impact on Lesra, who has just completed his masters degree in anthropology at Dalhousie University in Halifax.

Carter, however, isn't so low-key.

"There's not much doubt about that at all," he says of the likelihood that he'd still be a prisoner had the Canadians not come along.

Today, the authors and Carter, who is 53 and married to a Canadian, live together in a large house north of Toronto.

RECALL MARSHALL

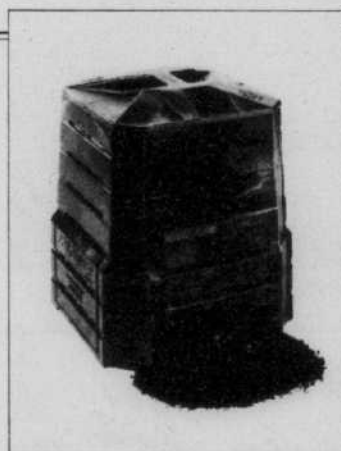

They agree there are similarities between the case of Carter and that of Donald Marshall, the Nova Scotia Miqmaq who spent 11 years in prison for a murder he didn't commit.

But it's the differences that are most striking, they say.

After Marshall's release from prison, the Nova Scotia government made him a formal apology and appointed a royal commission to examine the justice system. It also awarded him a lifetime annuity and a lump-sum payment for pain and suffering.

Singer Pelchat wants us to feel God's love

Romantic Roger dreamily strumming away, enchanted by God's creation.

RECORD GRANT SIMON

By Catherine Cheng

ST. ELIE D'ORFORD—"The silence of the forest inspires me because it's somewhat like listening to the spirit of God," says self-taught Christian singer and songwriter Roger Pelchat.

His friendly, grey eyes shine. His mustache twitches amusingly. His fluffy, dark hair bounces. His hands and body move graciously as he speaks unceasingly—a reflection of his extroverted nature.

For Pelchat, who works as a pressman for a graphics art company but has always dreamed of becoming an artist, music is a form of expression that allows him to dig deeper into himself.

"Anybody can verbally express himself or herself and say anything he wants, any way he or she wants to. But I want to be true to myself and express the feelings boiling deep down inside me and externalize them in a meaningful way—through music. In fact, I always compose my pieces after having experienced something that has had a strong impact on me. I never compose for the sake of producing," he explains.

ACTIVE SINGER

For the last five years, he has actively been singing songs of praise and worship to different groups of Townshippers at weddings, baptisms, and cafés. His first tape, entitled, Faites comme les oiseaux, was produced a few months ago. He plans to release another tape soon.

Nicknamed 'Rossignol', or Nightingale, as a child, Pelchat recalls that he started singing at the age of four.

"During family parties, my mom used to make me sing in front of everyone. I sang all the time. And she bought me a $12 guitar because she didn't want me to break hers."

Pelchat, the only musician in the family, was not only different from the rest of his siblings, but admits he was never part of the mainstream.

"I wanted to be myself even if others laughed at me. I never wanted to measure up to others," he says.

While the boys played toughie, he projected a "romantic and quiet" image. They hid their feelings; he openly expressed his. They hung around in gangs; he secluded himself in the forest. They actively played sports; he took social dance and drama classes. They grabbed selfishly; he gave generously. They took advantage of him; he forgave them.

SOLITARY BUT TALENTED

Although he grew up with five brothers and one sister, he didn't really have anyone to confide in. So he shared tears and laughter with Mother Nature, sitting at the foot of his favorite cyprus tree by the stream near his home in Ascot, strumming away on his guitar, improvising, experimenting, inventing, creating.

He knew he had a talent for singing, composing his own music, and writing lyrics for his songs.

"I just couldn't ignore (my talent). I just had to follow my heart and my instincts to create music."

wed his parents' advice and took welding classes during his three years in high school. He quit at 17.

He then had more time to experiment with music. He had more time to think and reflect. He had more time to search for his identity.

So he found a job and hung around piano bars to admire the artists' way of life. And he started singing publicly every once in a

So he shared tears and laughter with Mother Nature, sitting at the foot of his favorite cyprus tree by the stream near his home in Ascot, strumming away on his guitar, improvising, experimenting, inventing, creating.

He was into blues and rock music at first, but after he "gave (his) life to the Lord" almost 15 years ago, he began composing and singing Christian or gospel music in his spare time.

Although his parents knew he was a gifted singer, they did not encourage him to earn a living as a musician. So he reluctantly follo-while.

CONVERSION

At the age of 20, he became an Evangelical Christian. The pastor's sermon at the Brethren church on Desormeaux Street in Sherbrooke touched his heart, he said.

"I read through the Bible in six months and used to cry every time I read about Jesus' crucifixion. How could He love me so much—enough to die on the cross! He sacrificed His life for me. I understand that what He hates is sin."

Pelchat lives with his wife in St. Elie by Lake Brompton and still composes his own music.

"The beauty of nature has always fascinated me. It inspires me to write. I listen to the sound of the water, to the birds singing, to the wind rustling the leaves. I somehow always knew that nature didn't just pop out of the blue. It's all part of God's beautiful creation showing us that He is omnipresent and accessible," he says with a smile.

Pelchat says that the goal of his singing ministry is to show Jesus' love for human beings. He hopes those who listen to him will feel "God's warmth and love."

He says that the most difficult thing to do in the world is to love, because it implies having confidence in others. And how many times have we been disappointed and hurt by human beings? Too many. But if we trust God, He'll never let us down, he promises.

Pelchat will sing during a Café mufin this Sunday at St. Joseph Church on Belvédère Street after mass at around noon and at the Café Rencontre, 715 Desormeaux Street, June 1 at 7:30.

Bob Dylan celebrates his 50 years with great album

By Ron Sirak

NEW YORK (AP) — Bob Dylan has always been a musical measuring stick of our times.

His songs provoke the kinds of memories that remind us exactly where we were and what was going on in our lives when Dylan did whatever it was he was doing.

It was 30 years ago that Dylan captured the New York City folk scene and kept it in his thrall for decades.

On May 24, it will be 50 years since he was born in Duluth, Minn., as Robert Allen Zimmerman.

Now comes a remarkable three-disc collection of outtakes, rehearsal cuts, demos and concert recordings packaged as The Bootleg Series (Columbia Records), which reminds us of just how much time has passed.

HAS 58 CUTS

It also reminds us how truly staggering Dylan's work has been, and how astonishing that these 58 cuts would go unpublished for as long as they did. Everything in the set is worth listening to. Even the bad cuts provide valuable insight into the evolution and choices of a major artist.

Dylan was raised in the mining town of Hibbing, Minn., the son of a Jewish hardware merchant. He started playing the piano at age eight and the guitar and harmonica at about 10. His heroes were Hank Williams and James Dean, Leadbelly and Little Richard. And, of course, Woody Guthrie.

He migrated to New York in part to visit Guthrie who was dying and in hospital.

Dylan is remembered by childhood friends as a loner who didn't seem to mind that almost no one seemed to understand, or like, his music.

Out of it all came the music of America — blues and country and folk — filtered through a blue-eyed, skinny college dropout determined to be noticed.

SEEN AS UNIQUE

He hit New York City for the first time in January 1961, and right away people saw he was unique. He hadn't yet emerged as a writer (he wasn't quite 20) but the voice that seemed to search for notes, the pounding guitar, the wailing harmonica and uncanny sense of timing and phrasing produced a package perfect for the words he was singing.

That later became even more true when he was singing his own words. The desperate, on-the-edge sound was perfect for the scolding condemnations of injustice or the nightmarish visions of insanity and destruction he put into words.

"I don't write about things," he said in an interview with The Associated Press. "I write from inside of something, and I sing and play the same way. It's never about that 'something,' hoping to touch it. It's rather from the inside of it reaching out."

North America was on the verge of tumbling madly into something that would later be known as The '60s. Dylan was a step or two ahead of everyone, dragging as many as he could with him.

In 1961, after rave reviews on the New York coffee house circuit, Dylan signed a three-year deal with Witmark and Sons to publish his songs. In three years, he wrote 237 songs for Witmark, among them Blowin' in the Wind, A Hard Rain's Gonna Fall, Masters of War, With God on Our Side, "It Ain't Me Babe, Don't Think Twice, It's All Right, Only a Pawn in Their Game, and Mr. Tambourine Man.

Says Dylan: "When I'm singing my songs, it never occurs to me that I wrote them.

"If I didn't have a song like Masters of War, I'd find a song like Masters of War to sing."

HISTORICAL TRIP

It was a stunning burst of creativity by an artist in his early 20s. Everything he would ever do again would be compared with that remarkable time.

The Bootleg Series documents this period and much more. It takes us on a trip not just through recent history but through the life of one of the most powerful interpreters of that history.

All of the Dylan eras are represented in the set: The acoustic folk-protest of the first five albums; the surrealistic and shockingly electric albums Highway 61 Revisited, and Blonde on Blonde; the playful, post-motorcycle mellow of the late '60s and early '70s; the regained passion of Blood on the Tracks and Desire; and finally the Born Again and post-Born Again period with Saved and Slow Train Coming.

The earliest cuts in the collection are from late 1961, the most recent from 1989.

Throughout collection is heard the anger that is as much Dylan as anything — anger at a lover, at God, at the powers that be, at who knows. Sometimes just a shouting anger such as in Idiot Wind: "You hurt the ones that I love best, cover up the truth with lies"; or in Let Me Die in My Footstep: "There's always been people that have to cause fear."

But mixed in with the anger is humor, and occasionally hope. There is the determination of the Civil Rights Movement and the fear of a child growing up in the shadow of the atomic bomb, as he sings in Masters of War. And yet Dylan, who is divorced, has five children.

And always there is a spirituality, a belief that somehow all of the suffering he saw — and all of the pain he felt — make sense.

The Bootleg Series also reinforces the notion that Dylan's overtly religious art is his least interesting. It's obvious, almost forced. But the collection also shows that Dylan's best art is very religious.

'Bootleg' Albums

By David Bauder

The Associated Press

A record company offering a "bootleg" album for public sale is a little like Pepsi Cola handing out free samples of Diet Coke.

Yet two of rock 'n' roll's biggest names have released albums this spring with the word "bootleg" in the title. On The Bootleg Series, Columbia Records has opened its vaults of Bob Dylan outtakes, shelved songs and live material.

And Paul McCartney, betting on beating the bootleggers to the market, is releasing a disc of his MTV Unplugged performance in May.

The releases are vivid testimony to the public's enduring fascination — and the music business' annoyance — with the unauthorized recordings of a musician's work. Bootlegs have entered the compact disc era on the fringes of respectability.

"The public has an insatiable appetite for their heroes, and they'll always want to listen to what is new and never before released," said Columbia president Donald Ienner.

The 58-song Dylan box contains live recordings from a 1963 Carnegie Hall show, early versions of Tangled Up in Blue and Idiot Wind that later appeared radically reworked, and many discarded outtakes.

'BOOTS' THRIVE

Despite the music industry's best efforts, bootlegs remain a thriving subculture. The popularity of boxed sets — spurred largely by Dylan's own 1985 Biograph set — have persuaded record companies to release some material that's always been bootleg fodder.

The bootleg industry is more than just albums with scribbled cardboard covers these days. CDs have largely replaced records, and illegally recorded concert videos are a new flourishing business.

Some bootleg "labels" have become so established that their names are as recognizable to connoisseurs as the product: Swinging Pig, Great Dane, Scorpio, SAIE and Oxford Library.

Dedicated Dylan fans probably already have heard about half of The Bootleg Series, said Todd Rosenstock, a Pennsylvania writer who monitors bootlegs for Rock and Roll Disc magazine.

Among many fanatics of the Grateful Dead and Bruce Springsteen, live bootlegs are prized more than the artists' legitimate recordings. The dozens of Springsteen bootlegs include one 10-record set, Rosenstock said.

Prince, U2 and the Cure are among new acts popular with bootleggers, said Steve D'Onofrio, director of anti-piracy for the Recording Industry Association of America in Washington.

Prince's Black Album, a 1988 record that he yanked just weeks before it was due to be released, had such wide bootleg distribution that it was reviewed in Rolling Stone magazine and other music publications.

BEATLES TOPS

But the new artists still can't compete with the all-time champ of bootlegs: The Beatles.

Stratford still engenders awe, excitement, magic

Canadian actress Kate Reid has returned to the Stratford Festival for the first time in 10 years. "The theatre has changed, the town has changed, I've changed, but it's wonderful to be here, like coming home," says Reid.

By Rod Currie
CP Arts Writer

STRATFORD, Ont. (CP) — The redoubtable Kate Reid sits at a battered, old table, a faintly shabby sweater tight up to her throat.

Behind, there's a scratched, yellowish refrigerator, a plastic-topped cupboard, a dilapidated washing machine — Quebec kitchen gloom, circa 1965.

Reid has a cold, which brings a raspy edge to the commanding growl of her famous voice. And she's a tad impatient that she can't find an ashtray.

Ever the professional, she's reluctant to commit the theatrical crime of swiping one from the Quebec kitchen, erected as a temporary set for Michel Tremblay's Les Belles soeurs in the second-floor rehearsal hall of the Avon Theatre.

The whole scene's a downer. But Reid's upbeat.

Except for the cold, the Canadian star of stage, radio and screen, as they used to say, is as happy as all get out.

"Stratford still engenders awe, excitement, magic," says Reid of her return to the festival after a 10-year absence in a career that also has taken her to Broadway, Hollywood and London's West End.

"The theatre has changed, the town has changed, I've changed, but it's wonderful to be here, like coming home."

Reid's something of an exception in Canadian theatre, a star who has had a Canadian career while also making a name abroad, working in everything from movies (Captive Hearts, A Delicate Balance) to TV's recently expired Dallas.

ACCIDENTAL START

She's been Kate in The Taming of the Shrew, and Lady Macbeth at the Stratford Festival, Queen Victoria in the Broadway play Disraeli (Emmy Award nomination), played opposite Alec Guinness in Dylan, and was Big Mama in Cat on a Hot Tin Roof.

Reid started acting at age 15 — by accident, literally — and has always made a living acting, "rearing two children and never having to resort to waiting tables."

For a long time Toronto was Reid's base — she once commuted to New York twice a week to do Broadway matinee performances as Martha in Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf? — but for the last 10 years she's been in New York.

Now, frightened of the violence in the Big Apple, she's thinking of moving back to Toronto.

The last time she was on Broadway — starring as Linda Loman opposite Dustin Hoffman in Death of a Salesman — "they sent a car to pick me up and to bring me home."

"At the theatre, because of Dustin, there was heavy security but still a few creeps got through. I've kind of stopped enjoying the city. It's frightening."

Aside from playing Angeline in the English production of Les Belles soeurs (The Sisters-in-law), Reid is assisting director Bernard Hopkins in staging Shakespeare's Twelfth Night and also teaching young Stratford actors taking drama courses.

TUTORS ACTORS

But Reid emphasizes she is simply assisting Hopkins, she's not an assistant director; and she teaches although she doesn't believe you can teach acting.

"I give classes and I adore the young people," who are tutored by senior actors in such arts as text, movement, voice, mime and stage combat. "But I kind of stay away from that word teaching. You can guide, you can help the kids open up, but teaching acting is impossible."

Born in England in 1930, Reid arrived in Oakville near Toronto as a child and stumbled into acting after a series of accidents — "It's true, I was accident prone, still am, to the point that it was ridiculous, like a very, very bad hobby." Anyway, she was sitting around in a wheelchair when her mother decided to enrol her in a class affiliated with University of Toronto's Hart House Theatre.

She soon graduated into summer stock and the rest is history.

She did the first of nine Stratford seasons in the late 1950s, appearing in As You Like It and Othello.

Earlier, she got in on the golden age of Canadian radio — "It was great when I was pregnant, I could work right up to the 11th hour" — working with many of the great names, including actor Austin Willis to whom she was married for about six years.

Her son Reid, TV director-producer-writer, and daughter Robin, live in Toronto.

The Shaw Festival 30th season is at its best

By Rod Currie
CP Arts Writer

NIAGARA-ON-THE-LAKE, Ont. (CP) — The Shaw Festival opened its 30th season Wednesday night with fireworks, marching bands and a classy production of The Doctor's Dilemma, Bernard Shaw's wicked surgical strike against the medical profession.

This is the Shaw Festival team at its best, a splendid cast headed by Michael Ball, crisp, precise direction by Paul Lampert, handsome, evocative designs by Cameron Porteous and lighting by Kevin Lamotte.

If there is a minor flaw it is with the playwright himself — Shaw sometimes indulges his weakness for scoring the same point over and over again in a wordy argument against the medical profession. Otherwise the play presents him at his prickly best.

In fact, Shaw — a Fabian socialist, vegetarian and teetotaler — held most professions in contempt.

As Sir Patrick Cullen, the senior doctor of the Dilemma play, puts it: "All professions are conspiracies against the laity."

Although Shaw insisted that The Doctor's Dilemma was a tragedy, most see it as a brilliant farce in which Shaw embroidered his ideas that doctors perform unnecessary operations and prolong lucrative illnesses.

As he says in the preface to his play, there is no such thing as perfect health and thus nobody is ever really well. So doctors "exploit human folly, vanity and fear of death."

UGLY SERVANT

The play opens in the magnificent, high-ceilinged London town house of Colenso Ridgeway who on this day early in the 1900s has been knighted in recognition of his apparent cure for consumption.

Several eminent medical colleagues are arriving, eager to congratulate Sir Colenso and take the opportunity for a great deal of self-aggrandizement about their own services to the profession.

Each in turn is ushered in or out by the ugly, no-nonsense servant Emmy, comically portrayed by Pat Armstrong and grandly unimpressed by any of the gathering.

Emmy, as Shaw writes, is a woman who "has never known the cares, the preoccupations, the responsibilities, jealousies and anxieties of personal beauty."

Sir Colenso has undertaken to cure 10 patients of tuberculosis — the absolute maximum he can handle — and is deeply disturbed when Emmy convines an appointment with him for a beautiful young woman who wants him also to save her young, extremely talented husband.

The issue is to be decided at a dinner arranged by Colenso on the terrace of the Star and Garter pub in Richmond, giving the Shaw designers a wonderful chance to weave their creative magic in building a spectacular candle-lit, vine-covered evening setting by the River Thames.

Louis Dubedat, played with great swagger and arrogance by Steven Sutcliffe, turns out to be a liar and a cheat, totally without morals, while Colenso's colleague Dr. Blenkinsop is a good man but something of a loser.

As Colenso puts it: "Blenkinsop's an honest decent man; but is he any use? Dubedat's a rotten blackguard; but he's a genuine source of pretty and pleasant and good things."

Kitsilano Beach is for the serious sun worshippers

By Stephen Barrington
Press News

VANCOUVER (PN)—The guy in the G-string bathing suit was hard to miss, given the key spot he'd planted himself.

But just consider him part of the scenery at Kitsilano Beach, the closest thing Canada has to a California.

Not for the meek, this. It's for the ultra-serious beach-goer, where catchin' some rays is a pursuit steeped in a culture all its own.

Of 10 beaches in the city, this is the biggest, baddest and most popular; in warm weather an average 10,000-plus pack the place daily. It is, as they say on the sand, where the action is.

Arrive later than midday and forget about getting a good spot.

At the focal point of the city's fashionable cafe-society Kitsilano area, the beach, surrounding park and nearby pool sit following a curving stretch of waterfront along sheltered English Bay.

Under the city skyline and looking out at the freighters at anchor, it begins stirring in late April and stays alive through Labor Day.

There might not be any surf, but there's plenty else at this summer hotspot.

SURF ELSEWHERE

A few windsurfers catch whatever stiff breezes they can, but this isn't the best beach for that sport. Wanna-be poster girls and rock-hard musclemen bulging with self-importance mix with more average folk in a swirl that's been described as a nightclub without the night or the club.

What many consider the heart of the beach is by the lifeguard station, a squat observation tower with mirrored windows overlooking ocean and sand — and some seriously prime real estate.

Out front on a narrow strip of thinning grass, the primped and the pumped come to pose. Bikinis only, of course — for both sexes. And no one has the slightest inferiority complex. These are the ones who have a tan before they come to the beach.

Elsewhere on the sand are those of less noble physical attributes.

For all, the order of the day is simple: tan, see, be seen.

Down the beach is the volleyball area, home each season to numerous semi-pro and pro tournaments. As early as March, when the city is wet and windy, the dedicated are here practising, barefoot.

A short stroll south of the sand is a large grassy patch, turf to those preferring their sun with less of the scene.

QUIETER HERE

It's quieter here, as the beach's beer-commercial-like rush is reduced to a subtle undercurrent. A few read, most tan. Or watch passers-by promenading along the nearby waterfront walk.

Some prefer the silt-stirred ocean waters, but the outdoor salt-water Kitsilano Pool just down the way draws most swimmers. At an impressive 137 metres, it's the city's longest.

On a busy weekend, it seems there are more people lying on the narrow deck than taking to the water, tanning between dips.

If the entertainment of the beach

Kitsilano Beach is the closest thing Canada has to a California.

isn't enough, there's the Kitsilano Show Boat open-air stage on the street side of the pool, a regular feature since 1935. Against a hokey set made up like an old-time steamboat, amateur acts entertain for free several nights a week. One recent fixture is the Rangerettes, a marching and baton-twirling squad.

About the time the Show Boat "casts off" in early evening, the beach is quieting. In the twilight of 9 p.m., a faint red light comes on at the lifeguard station as the lifeguards go off-duty.

On the waterfront walk along the beach and beyond, the masses have thinned. A few stragglers are still around, but mostly they're subdued after a long, tough day on the beach.

In the evening, folks stroll and take in the view.

At Kits Point just past the beach, the view across the water to the city's apartment- and high-rise-filled West End area is unequalled.

Little Doctor Lake: a spectacular place for all

By Irene Morck
For Press News

LITTLE DOCTOR LAKE, N.W.T. (PN) — Towering mountains painted bright pink by the sunrise reflect on the misty blue surface of Little Doctor Lake. Silence permeates everything.

For solitude and spectacular scenery, nothing beats a holiday at Little Doctor Lake in the Northwest Territories, about 450 kilometres southwest of Yellowknife in the Nahanni Range.

A getaway in the truest sense, the lake is accessible only by float plane in summer, and by ski plane and snowmobile in winter. A half-hour flight takes you the 90 kilometres west from Fort Simpson to Nahanni Mountain Lodge. After the pilot leaves, you're totally on your own.

There's only one "lodge" on this lake, really just two rustic log cabins nestled between the forest and the beach. With no caretaker, no guide, no neighbors, no phones, no radio contact, no one else anywhere around, Little Doctor Lake gives a whole new meaning to the words peace and quiet.

The cabins can accommodate up to eight people. Owner Ted Grant never mixes groups, so you and your friends or family "own" the lake and cabins for the time you're there.

Each cosy cabin sleeps four and is heated by a wood-burning stove. A propane stove and fridge and kitchen and eating facilities are in the larger of the two cabins.

LIKE ROUGHING IT

These aren't luxurious accommodations by any stretch but are designed for people who enjoy roughing it and who don't mind isolation. Painted plywood floors, no electricity, mice in the cabins and perhaps even a bear outside rattling the water pails at night are all part of the rugged appeal.

Usually a float plane flies over at least once a day, so if there was an emergency, you could wave for help.

But for all its isolation, there's plenty to do besides delight in the eye-popping scenery.

The pear-shaped lake is cut almost in two by the towering rock cliffs of the Nahanni Range. You can climb the mountains, or follow hiking trails into the forested hills.

There's wonderful swimming in the clear, sandy-bottomed lake, and fishing for walleye or grayling in the river mouths at the ends of the lake. The beige sandy beach is great for evening campfires, barbecuing freshly caught fish and sunbathing.

Pick blueberries, cranberries, saskatoons or raspberries in season. Or bring a hammock to hang between a couple of white birch trees and just relax the days away, enjoying unpolluted air perfumed with the smell of spruce.

The lake is about 11 kilometres long and five kilometres wide. Some visitors take a picnic lunch in the motorboat that comes with the lodge and spend a day stopping at various places along the shore to explore beaches and rock formations.

BOAT TO GAP

It's a fabulous experience to take the motorboat to the far end of the lake, passing through the narrow channel between 1,300-metre-high solid rock walls called the Gap. If you do, keep a careful eye on the weather — strong warm winds can blow in, changing the glassy surface to dangerous three-metre-high waves within minutes.

But a storm can subside on Little Doctor Lake almost as fast as it arrives.

The surrounding area is a naturalist's haven with wildlife ranging from beavers and moose to butterflies and eagles.

Visitors en route to or from the lake can arrange a day tour by float plane over nearby Nahanni National Park and landing at Virginia Falls, just east of the border dividing Northwest and Yukon territories.

The mild winter temperatures of this chinook region also make for good snowshoeing and cross-country skiing.

Writers, honeymooning couples, families with young children and countless groups of compatible friends have all found peace and solitude at Little Doctor Lake.

Included in a visit to the lodge are a round-trip flight from Fort Simpson, use of a motorboat, gas, two canoes, paddles, life jackets and kitchen utilities and utensils. Meals are not provided, so food should be purchased in Fort Simpson.

You should also take a light sleeping bag and a change of warm clothing during the summer.

For more information, contact Nahanni Mountain Lodge Ltd., Box 260, Fort Simpson, NT, X0E 0N0; (403) 695-2505.

THE PIGGERY: Here's a sneak preview of upcoming events at in North Hatley (P.O. Box 390).

From June 21-July 13, The Perils of Persephone, a play directed by Doug Beattie, will start the season. This continuation of the Wingfield Trilogy written by Dan Needles, promises to be a comic treat. This time character Eldon Currie longs to be warden of the Reeve of Persephone Township until an atomic waste truck comes into his ditch.

From July 16-July 27, in Tonight...Piaf, a musical play dramatizing the life of the well-known Edith Piaf, Joelle Rabu will sing songs that recreate the emotions inspired by the events of Piaf's life.

And from August 1-24, the play Dead Serious will be directed by the former artistic-director of The Piggery, Perry Schneiderman. It is a gripping, psychological thriller about an addicted player of practical jokes and his sister who enjoy scaring each other with strange mind games. If you enjoyed Twin Peaks, you'll love DEAD SERIOUS!

IN FOCUS

Nick Nolte (pictured) and Eddie Murphy were beating a dead horse when they teamed up for the sequel to a movie that never should have had one. As the weary renegade cop (Nolte) and the spirited con (Murphy) about to be released from prison, the two reunited in "Another 48 HRS." airing Saturday, June 1, on HBO. In this filmic déjà vu, the duo confront a gang of motorcycle thugs bent on killing the Murphy character.
