One more chance for House to fall

GOING VIRAL

ELLEN GOLDFINCH

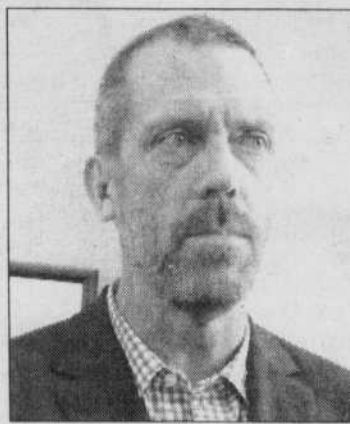

It's human nature for people to wait for the guy on top to slip, but that just doesn't happen when a show is filmed. Seven seasons and British actor Hugh Laurie's American accent is absolutely immaculate. Watch him on a talk show being Hugh Laurie and you feel like you're watching Dr. Gregory House messing with us all by putting on a posh British accent. Yet it's just the opposite. Hugh Laurie, famous for such characters as Bertie Wooster in Jeeves and Wooster and Blackadder, is as British as you get.

You have to respect the fact that the producers of the show took a risk and cast Laurie as a medical version of the quintessential detective Sherlock Holmes who, along with a team of diagnosticians, solves the toughest cases and cures patients of fairly unbelievable diseases at the mythical Princeton-Plainsboro Teaching Hospital. House is cold, has the empathy and compassion of a flea, but is brilliant enough to make connections that no one else can make.

Six seasons have gone by and there are only so many medical mysteries that can drive a plot so the writers have resorted to all kinds of character conflicts. There have been the usual affairs, betrayals, break-ups, and more break-ups. By watching this show, you'd think that no doctor is able to sustain a relationship for more than a few months. In fact, you'd be driven to think that all those tangled relationships keep doctors from holding down a job. Dr. Cameron was driven from her cushy job when she discovered that her husband had managed to kill a dictator of an African country (played by James Earl Jones) and successfully and unrepentantly covered it up. This kind of exotic plotline is used time and again because all medical mysteries are made clear pretty much between 8:40 and 8:45. That kind of repetition can't sustain a show for six years so House's Vicodin addiction can always be counted on to sustain some form of suspense.

I was pretty much ready to give up on the show, but this season, the writers have tried a few innovations. House is in a relationship with his boss, Lisa Cuddy (Lisa Edelstein) the head of the hospital, and has a new member of the team who is diametrically opposed to everything he believes in. House believes that everybody lies and that lying is what life is all about. His team member, a very young and brilliant intern Dr. Martha Masters who has to endure House firing her several times in the first episode, stands up to him time and again, and frankly, her character is like a breath of fresh air.

After years of House constantly being right, I'm rooting for him to be wrong. I'm rooting for Cuddy's toddler daughter, Rachel, to melt him into putty. I'm hoping that Dr. Masters will just plant a tiny seed of doubt into the certainty that is Gregory House's perception of the world. It's only natural that the audience would want to see House's self-satisfied bubble of certainty pop and reveal a shred of self-doubt. This is not to say that House is a happy guy; he has fought chronic pain in his leg and struggled with an addiction to Vicodin under whose influence he had long conversations with his friend, Dr. Wilson's (yes, that sounds like Dr. Watson) dead girlfriend.

The suspense that has viewers watching week after week is not another opportunity to see him magically save the day like Superman. We're all waiting for him to fall off his high horse and fall off big-time. Here's hoping that Ladies Cuddy and Masters can slowly push him off. Most hit series last about seven years so they'll have to make this fall a very, very slow one if they want to make it to seasons eight and nine.

Upcoming highlights: Got a young Miley Cyrus fan in your house? The Last Song: In a Southern beach town. Based on a novel by Nicholas Sparks, a man tries to reconnect with his estranged daughter through their shared love of music, starring Miley Cyrus, and Greg Kinnear. Saturday night, 9 p.m., Movietime (211 in Sherbrooke). Happy watching.

Agent Orange and Slaves on Dope to play Le Magog Bar

JESSE FEITH

This coming Thursday, February 3, Sherbrooke bar Le Magog will showcase a double bill of talent probably bigger, and definitely louder than the bar can contain.

Legendary California surf punk band Agent Orange will be playing the City of Sherbrooke for their first time. Slated as one of the first bands to mix punk rock with surf music, originally forming back in 1979 they've since been credited with being a major influence on the skate-punk scene and are more and more recognized as a band who didn't quite get the recognition they deserved.

Opening for Agent Orange as the first part of the show are Montreal nu-metal band Slaves on Dope, returning from a five-year hiatus and doing a mini tour in preparation of the release of their new album, Over the Influence, due out later this year.

The Montreal group had originally disbanded back in 2004 after lead singer Jason Rockman left the band for personal reasons, wanting more time to spend with his growing family. Rockman completely detached himself from music during that time.

"The wear and tear constant four-month tours can have on you is inexplicable," he explains. His departure from the band came after they had enjoyed moderate success in the early 2000s. "Back in '99 we really went for it, us four guys (referring to himself, current band mate Kevin Jardine and former band members Frank Salvaggio and Rob Urbani) packed up all our stuff and went out to L.A. where we really hustled for one year, playing as many shows as we could." The hard work eventually paid off, leading to them to sign a record deal with Ozzy and Sharon Osbourne's Divine Recordings.

Slaves released their first full-length album back in 2000, the same year they toured Ozzfest, an annual heavy metal tour that runs through the United States and is considered an honour for any upcoming metal band to get a chance to play.

Turmoil at Divine Records eventually left the band without a label and the release of their second full-length, Metafour, in 2003 was soon after followed by Rockman's departure from the band and subsequent hiatus.

While the lead singer was staying clear of the music business in the years panning between his departure and the band's reformation in 2009, guitarist Kevin Jardine was hard at work as a producer back in Montreal at his own Uplift studios.

"I started visiting Kevin at the studio," adds Rockman, "and started talking to all these young bands there, answering questions about our past tours and what not, then I was asked to do some guest vocals on some songs, and that's when it became clear that we should start the band back up."

Rockman and Jardine held auditions to round out the group, eventually deciding on Sebastien Ducap and Peter Tzaferis, and have been hard at work on the new records since.

When asked why the band wanted to do these shows with Agent Orange, Rockman answers without hesitation, "We just couldn't pass up an opportunity to play with such a great band, they were so ahead of their time with what they were doing back in the day, and I feel like in some regards we were the same way."

The difference between how they're going about things today is clear to Rockman, as well.

"Music was always a job, now it's not; it's just like when we first started out." Look for that very re-found enthusiasm for their work again to lead to an exciting, can't miss show at Le Magog in Sherbrooke next Thursday night.

Tuning in to online music

OUTSIDE THE BOX

KELLY McDEVITT

Remember when MTV and Much Music actually played music videos? Take your time... think about it. There it is, the vague memory of endless video clips, punctuated by talk shows and interviews with musicians. Now of course these channels are where you go if you want to watch exploitive reality television like Celebrity Rehab with Doctor Drew and Teen Mom or reruns of teen melodramas like Gossip Girl and Hellcats. The musical component of these channels has been slowly, but almost completely, eroded from the airwaves.

For a long time I bemoaned this as a sign of network greed, the bosses up top catering to a fast-food-entertainment audience (ie: cheap, bad for you and society as a whole, strangely addictive, easy to consume, full of drugs, hormones and chemicals). Though I still think there's a degree of truth to this, in recent years I've conceded that the Internet has really done a number on the music industry, including the music video industry. People don't buy CDs anymore, so for a long time the music industry has been trying to figure out how to get people to pay for downloading songs that they could otherwise get for free through file sharing. By the same token, ratings began to fall on specialty music channels when pirated music videos started popping up on Youtube.

I admit, I hardly ever tune into Much Music to watch music anymore and that's only half due to the fact that they hardly play it anymore. It's so much easier to just look for the video you want to see online then to wait for it to play on TV, and that's only if you care about the video at all. Many times I just want to hear the song, or look for a new artist. So I can understand the slew of absolute crap that's on music channels these days, but that doesn't mean I like it. I still want to hear interviews, live performances and collaborations that used to feature on shows like MTV Unplugged.

These shows too, it seems have largely shifted to the Internet (with the notable

A dying man's Last Lecture, and other tales of exploration

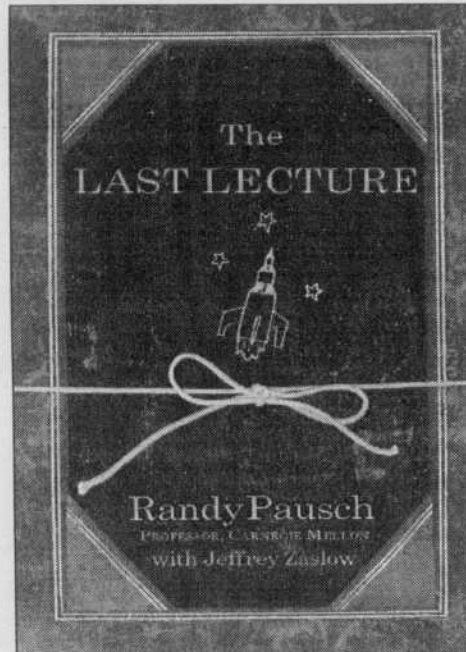

GOOD READS

ELEANOR BROWN

This week's Good Reads presents books which feature rocket ships on their covers, and begins with Randy Pausch's, The Last Lecture, based on a public talk given by a man who knew he was dying. He had one last chance to tell the world about himself, life, and the future without him.

The Last Lecture was delivered in 2007 and turned into a short book a year later. It was published just months before Pausch, a university computer science professor, died of cancer.

This book is the story of his dreams. It's also a legacy for his three young children, so they'll know who their father was when they get older. (Wife and now widow Jai will eventually play the taped lecture for them, when they're a bit older.)

Pausch's childhood dreams included "Being in zero gravity" ("my experience in zero G was spectacular," he writes, "and no, I didn't throw up, thank you") and "being Captain Kirk" (he instead studied leadership and met William Shatner).

There are newer dreams. And dreams he never got near, like playing in the NFL. Pausch learned from each of his dreams, fulfilled or no.

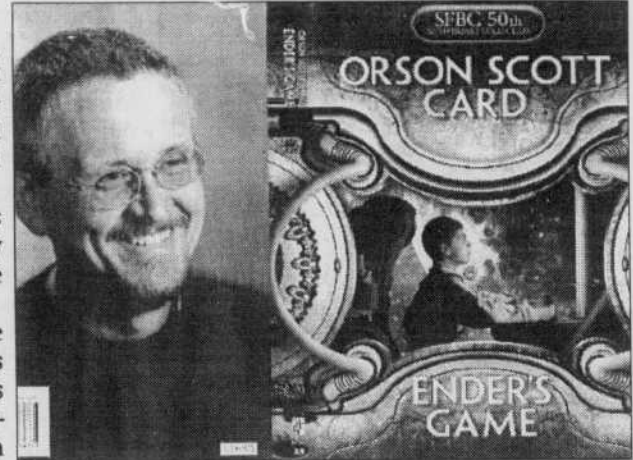

Of course when one says rocket ship, one generally thinks of exploring the skies, rather than oneself.

First Women In Space (2007), by Terry Barber, is filed in Easy Reads and is part of the Famous Firsts Series. The old USSR (of which Russia was just one part) launched Sputnik, the first satellite, in 1957. The USSR also sent the first women into space, Valentina Tereshkova. (She later became a politician.)

The first Canadian woman to go into space was Roberta Bondar. She has since spent her time helping women go into the sciences.

Next, some children's books. The Magic School Bus, er, Space Bus, brings a whole busload of kids into the galaxy—little girls and boys together—in Out of This World: A Book About Space Rocks (1996), by Joanna Cole.

Ms. Frizzle takes the kids out to check on an asteroid that is heading right for Earth! That's quite the field trip. And this is the story of how the children save the world. Out of This World is filed under a yellow dot. Make sure to read the NASA space agency's cool comments at the end, on how books sometimes simplify reality.

For the 411 on the real thing, The Big Book of Space, by Robin Kerrod (1990), filed with a green dot, explains gravity, how space suits work, the solar system and some basic physics. And it's packed full of rocket ships. (It's good to note that scientists have now decided that Pluto isn't really a planet, because it's too

An apocalyptic novel about water

BOOK REVIEW

TERRI SCHLICKENMEYER

"The Water Wars"
by Cameron Stracher
c.2010, Sourcebooks $16.99 / $19.99
Canada 256 pages

You would never even consider it. Going to school without a shower or a bath? No way. There's a time and place in school to be sweaty and it's called "practice" - as in, football, basketball, the gym. But walking around without being clean? Nope, that's a quick way to friendlessness.

So what if showers, baths, swimming pools, car washes were all illegal? What would you do for a glass of water? Find out in the new novel "The Water Wars" by Cameron Stracher.

For as long as she lived, Vera never forgot the day she first saw Kai. He was standing on the side of the road, thin and blonde like seventeen-year-old boys can be, and he was drinking water.

Water was something that Vera rarely saw because most of it was controlled by Canadians and Water Authority Board members. There in Illinowa, one of the republics created after the Great Panic, people like Vera could only get water by using government-issued credits. But there stood Kai, drinking it in big gulps, then upending his container on the ground.

Though Vera's father said she shouldn't talk to strangers, Vera couldn't resist this impertinent boy who was wasting water. She was intrigued when he told her that he didn't have to go to school.

She was enticed when he told her that water was everywhere. She was fascinated when he was picked up by a limousine and whisked away.

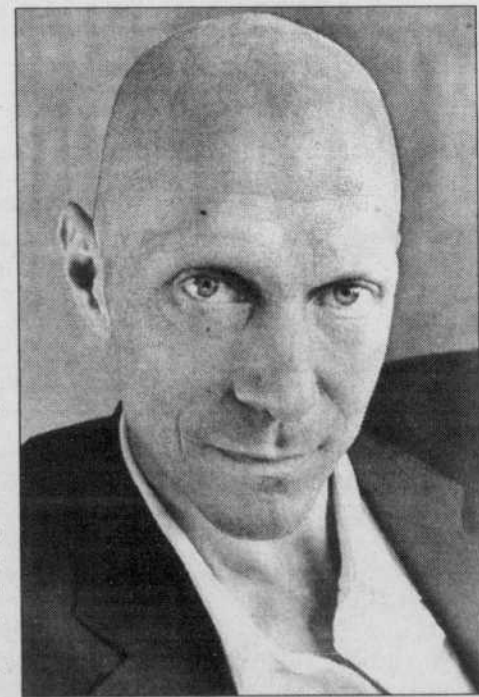

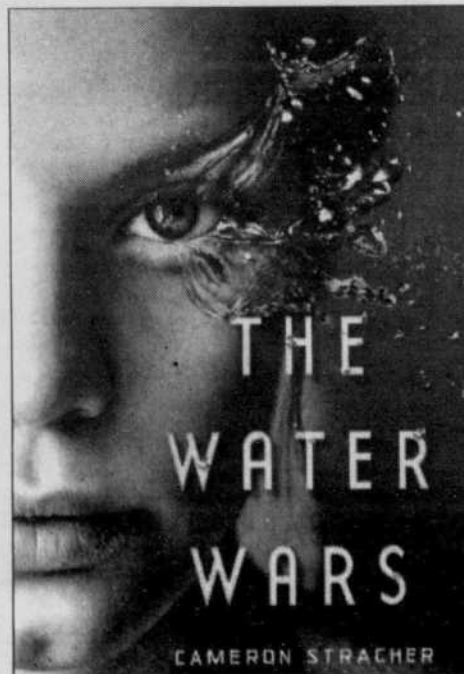

Though Vera's older brother, Will, was skeptical about this other boy, Kai and Vera became friends. At fifteen, she wasn't allowed to date but Kai was special. He liked her enough to spend his afternoons with her. He liked her enough to show her a secret aquifer near an abandoned mine.

And then he disappeared. Believing that Kai's life was threatened, Vera and Will went in search of him. But finding one boy in the middle of a dry, rocky, millions-of-miles-large landscape wouldn't be easy, and there was danger. Officials from the nearby republic of Minnesota were rumored to be especially protective of their 10,000 dams, and local pirates would kill anyone who tried to steal their water.

As apocalyptic novels go, "The Water Wars" isn't bad.

Vera and Will are likeable enough and their circumstances are totally believable - to a point. Yes, there were times when the action here will take your breath away, with chase scenes and double-crosses. But there are also times when it descends into silly territory with plot lines that stretch credibility a bit too far.

Still, author Cameron Stracher's dark novel is a page-turner and I was up way past my bedtime reading it. It's easy to visualize the Armageddon-like landscape that Stracher describes, and it's all-too-easy to imagine the futuristic scenario that makes water so precious.

MARION EITTLINGER

Cameron Stracher

Go without food for three weeks and you'll lose a lot of weight. Go without water for three days and you'll die. But if you can put up with the few bumps in plot, don't consider going without "The Water Wars" at all.

Good music, but don't call it country

COUNTRY CONNECTION

JESSIE AULIS

Many will refer to Steel Magnolia's newly released album as mainstream country music, but it should be called pop music from the 80s with a bit of banjo and steel added for good measures.

Now, the members of Steel Magnolia have very nice vocals, most of the songs are good, the album benefits from a slick production and it is very easy and pleasant to listen to, but please don't call it country music.

Steel Magnolia, a duo formed by Meghan Linsey and beau Joshua Scott Jones is charismatic and dynamic enough to gain a lot of fans. They work well together and offer convincing delivery of their material.

Prior to the release of this album, the duo released an EP on February 23, 2010, which produced two singles; 'Keep On Lovin' You' and 'Just By Being You (Halo and Wings).'

Now they have released Steel Magnolia, their self-titled debut studio album on Big Machine Records.

This album features each of Steel Magnolia's three singles: 'Keep On Lovin' You', 'Just By Being You (Halo and Wings.)' a simple and beautiful ballad that expresses the vulnerability of being in love. Linsey's girlish vocal curls bring out an accessibility that is just riveting, and the latest, 'Last Night Again.'

Honestly, these two impress more when they keep things loose and moving. Linsey has a raspy drawl and her voice shines the most on tunes with a blues-rock feel, including the light and bright opener 'Ooh La La.' The tune is bouncy, engaging and immediately captivating.

The chemistry between the two really shines on 'Eggs Over Easy,' a sultry and catchy romp. Jones, with his worn out baritone, serves as the perfect singing partner. While the duo wrote seven of the 12 tracks, they leave the rest to some Nashville songwriters such as Chris Stapleton, Chris Tompkins, Hillary Lindsey and Lori McKenna.

'Homespun Love' allows Linsey to flash her attitude and she sounds as she can give as good as she takes when she sings: "You spun your web back a Sunday or two/ I ain't never met nobody like the likes of you."

Lori McKenna, who is one of Faith Hill's favourite songwriters, collaborates a great cut here titled 'Bulletproof,' about the tale of a woman on the verge of a breakdown, but Linsey's powerful pipes make it sound like a breakthrough instead.

Album closer 'Glass Houses' gives the pop a break as the duo take on a Guy-Clark-number as they deliver quite a stunning acoustic guitar-driven murder story song.

Steel Magnolias is the vocal duo that won the second season of CMT's, Can You Duet talent competition. Linsey and Jones' very first vocal collaboration took place that night with an impromptu version of Air Supply's 'I'm All Out of Love.'

A native of Ponchatoula, Louisiana, Linsey began performing at an early age. By the time she was 15, she had already opened shows for Toby Keith, Brad Paisley, Travis Tritt, Gary Allan, Blake Shelton and others.

Dream projects?

With trained staff, a broadcast tower facility, two equipped production studios, a performance studio with stage lighting and a Steinway grand piano, Radio Communautaire Missisquoi has more potential, in the eyes of the federal government, than ever before.

With a mandate from the CRTC to develop talent, RCM has done what is required of it; built a performance venue and put on shows featuring Canadian artists for recording and broadcast. RCM does not develop artists by simply playing CDs nor does any other broadcaster. The CBC, for example, has the Glenn Gould Studio in Toronto and we have Radio Village Hall in the Town of Brome Lake.

Community radio cannot be a clone of commercial radio. As mentioned in the Canadian Community Radio Policy:

"The Commission's (CRTC's) primary objective for the community radio sector is that it provide a local programming service that differs in style and substance from that provided by commercial stations..."

It's not as if, now that we have a tower and a 500 watt transmitter, we are going to magically fulfill our mandate with the government by simply playing music with a smattering of chatter and interviews, and fill our coffers with money from advertising. Why would anyone want to advertise on CIDI? We aren't allowed to play the most current trendy music on a regular basis, the main reason why most people listen to radio according to the studies.

We have to reflect our community first. This is what the government wants, as outlined in its policy: "A community radio station is owned and controlled by a not-for-profit organization...Programming should reflect the diversity of the market that the station is licensed to serve."

I might add that not one commercial radio station would venture into such an undertaking. Radio consultants have long figured out that if a station wants to attract listeners it should focus on a specific market, not appeal to all demographics. Thus we have stations such as Classic Rock, Oldies etc.

The Policy further states, "...that community stations have an important role to play in the development, support and exposure of local talent. The Commission expects community stations to continue to undertake initiatives to promote and feature music by new Canadian artists, local artists and artists whose music is seldom heard on other stations. These initiatives should be described in applications for new licenses and for licensee renewal." Now you know why RCM puts on musical events in our community.

The broadcasting decision of the CRTC titled 2003-199, made in Ottawa, July 2, 2003 in regards to RCM's community radio broadcasting application says: "The applicant will record local talent and broadcast these recordings on air at later dates. It will also make its studios available to local artists to record their own work and will provide scholarships and grants to young people for talent club. Jones, a singer-songwriter from Charleston, Illinois, also began performing at an early age and later moved to Los Angeles, performing at different clubs.

He eventually returned to Illinois for a period of time before relocating to Nashville. As winners of Can You Duet, Steel Magnolia was rewarded with a contract at Big Machine Records.

Overall, the album proves how talented they both are and holds some promises as Meghan Linsey totally let herself go in her delivery. They are one of the most engaging duos to grace the music scene in a while.

Without a doubt this eponymous album will be embraced by country radios, (who sadly promote pop to build their ratings) as a long-time sweetheart. However, they are let down by their poorly chosen material, which is way too pop. If they could get away a little from the pressure of securing hits and look more in their hearts, this disc might have taken a more favourable turn.

But this is their first studio album and who knows, the second one could very well be more country oriented.

shows and contests." Now you know why we have the Stop! talent shows and Radio Village Hall events.

I have been told by well-meaning supporters of RCM that we should drop our "dream projects" (Radio Village Hall, Stop! TV and radio shows and promotional events featuring local talent who are recorded for broadcast) and focus solely on radio if we wish to remain viable in the future. Excuse me! What do they think community radio is?

Further to RCM's CRTC decision: "RCM stated that it will advertise on radio and in local newspapers and flyers to invite members of the community to participate in the proposed station...A full-time paid station manager will be responsible for training and supervising volunteers to ensure that they operate the station in accordance with its licensing requirements." This is why I write this column and train RCM volunteers. The thing is, I don't get paid. Some people think I am wasting my time. Am I? I might add that it has been suggested I stop writing this column as well.

Let me encourage all of you who are interested, willing and able, to join our ranks at CIDI 99.1 FM and to help shine a light on our beautiful part of the world. Give us a listen, send us your comments. If you can't pick us up on the radio go to our website and click on the live-stream button at rcmmedia.org.

Maurice Singfield is an RCM volunteer.

exception of Elvis Costello's wonderful series Spectacle). My aunt recently shared a link on Facebook to a musical web series that I'm now simply addicted to. Live From Daryl's House features live collaborations between creator/host Daryl Hall, of Hall and Oates fame, and various artists young and old. K.T. Tunstall, Rob Thomas, Smokey Robinson, The Plain White T's, the Bacon brothers, The Doors (or what's left of them), and Patrick Stump of Fall Out Boy are just some of the artists featured on the show. Canadian artists are represented too with techno-rockers Chromeo and hard rockers Finger Eleven also showing up to jam.

Each "episode" actually features eight to twelve videos including performances of the visiting artist's songs, a few of Daryl's and some classics thrown in for fun. Some videos also go behind the scenes showing how the artists collaborate, their lunch breaks and casual interviews. The show, which started in 2007, now has 31 episodes mostly filmed from Hall's own home. The show is quite laid back and easy to watch. You get a real sense of how much these artists respect each other and love the work they do.

If you're jonesing for a music fix, but don't want to suffer a reality show to get it, check out Live From Daryl's House at <http://www.livefromdarylshouse.com>.

Is your central vision becoming blurred?

Macular degeneration is the leading cause of blindness in Canada. It can destroy your central vision in a few short months and the ability to see the faces of those you love. If you experience any change in vision, consult your eye-care professional.

small and its orbit is too wacky.)

Finally, for Young Adults, the great Mormon author Orson Scott Card continues to visit Ender Wiggins, the child he first wrote about in 1977 in the seminal sci-fi novel, Ender's Game.

The idea for the plot came to Card when he was 16 years old. What if the government recruited the smartest kids, the best video game players they could find, and trained them to play shoot-em-ups to a genius level?

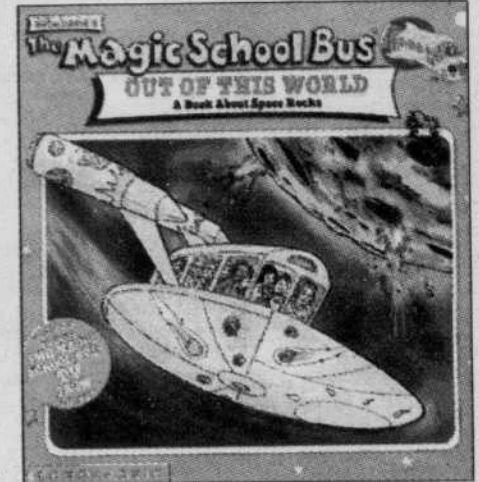

For Ender, it was a game. For his trainers, it was a real war against enemy aliens hoping to destroy the human race. The child is six years old.

In later books, Ender copes with the guilt of murdering an entire race himself. The now-grown man becomes a Speaker for the Dead (1986), keeping alive the stories of those who are gone.

GLIMPSSES OF THE PAST

John S. Bourque fonds. Sherbrooke Historical Society

In 1957, the Sherbrooke Winter Club's carnival queen was crowned, along with her duchesses. Surrounding her are several influential members of Sherbrooke's social and economic scene including Minister John S. Bourque, Member of Parliament Maurice Allard, and members of the Société Saint-Jean-Baptiste, who attended this event held at the arena at the fairgrounds.

A FAMILY OUTING

Visit the exhibition The Christmas Nativity Scene, a tradition with many faces, presented at the Sherbrooke Historical Society, until January 30, 2011.
