Art is just a click away with Sherbrooke online gallery

By Matthew McCully

With the upcoming launch of an online gallery, Sherbrooke resident Michel Gagné proves that with enough determination, virtually anything is possible.

"I've always been passion about art," Gagné said. "It was always a dream to one day own something from a master."

Around two-and-a-half years ago, that dream came true.

While vacationing with his family in California, Gagné happened upon an art gallery on Rodeo Drive with a big banner in the front advertising Picasso, Rembrandt, and Renoir.

"That's impossible," Gagné thought. "No art gallery could have all those things."

"I can't buy anything, but do you mind if I look around?" he asked the owner, who was happy to oblige.

The owner later invited Gagné downstairs to a special temperature controlled room with only two pieces hanging on the walls; one by Monet, the other by Renoir.

"One of them had a little cardboard tag hanging from it," Gagné said, explaining it was a price tag for $498,000.

The gallery visit had such an impact on Gagné that he couldn't get it out of his head for the rest of his vacation.

"I didn't want to live my whole life and say I never had a masterpiece," he said.

After a long discussion with his wife, Maryse Landry, Gagné and his family returned to the gallery before leaving California.

"I was in there for seven hours," he said, going through the entire collection.

The prices ranged from $1,500 to $500,000, with a handful over a million.

Gagné left the gallery with a piece by Salvador Dali, based on a work by Francisco Goya in 1797.

Goya had published an album of 80 prints, Los Caprichos, pointing out the follies of Spanish society at the time.

According to Gagné, in 1977, Dali petitioned the Spanish government for permission to redo Goya's plates, adding his own style to the series.

Knowing the history of a piece and how it came about adds to the experience, Gagné explained.

Surprise! Johnny Depp appears as Jack Sparrow on Disney ride

The Associated Press

Sparrow himself.

Some visitors to the Pirates of the Caribbean ride at California's Disneyland got a surprise: Captain Jack Depp donned the getup of his swashbuckling alter ego and interacted with riders on Wednesday. Videos taken by park goers and shared on social media show Depp chatting with fans as they passed by on the ride's boats. He also spoke to a crowd outside.

Depp returns to the big screen as Sparrow next month in the fifth film based on the ride. "Pirates of the Caribbean: Dead Men Tell No Tales" opens May 26, after premiering at Shanghai Disneyland on May 11.

"Almost all artwork has a story," Gagné said, "It makes it more interesting and unique."

After acquiring that first piece, Gagné became consumed with the idea of opening a gallery.

"My wife said that's another one of your crazy ideas, but she saw potential there. It was one of the more appealing crazy ideas I've had," he said.

Gagné and Landry dipped into their retirement savings to invest in art to open Gallerie Gagné.

Because of the costs associated with a physical space, he opted to launch an on-line gallery.

"It's about making people enjoy artwork," Gagné commented, wanting to create a way for people to buy art that is easy and friendly.

"They can see the description and the price, and if they want, they can take it to the next level," Gagné said.

Gagné's inventory ranges in price from $300-$7,000.

"I don't have 100 pieces, but what I have, I own," he said.

In addition to the pieces he owns that are up for sale, he also sells the work of five Quebec artists.

"I don't expect to sell a piece to someone in Texas or India," Gagné said, explaining that even though his gallery is online, his focus is on the local community.

"I'm trying to build a reputation, a niche in this area."

Gagné said that as soon as he decided to open a gallery, he wanted to do it properly.

He is currently finishing a certificate in art management at Bishop's University, and taking several art history classes as well.

When asked about the challenges of selling art online, Gagné admitted the lack of a personal connection with a buyer is a challenge.

"It's hard to transmit that sincerity through an email."

Authenticity could be another source of apprehension for some buyers, skeptical there could actually be a Rembrandt or Picasso hanging around somewhere in Sherbrooke.

Gagné insisted that all his pieces come with a certificate of authenticity, which can be used to trace the sale and history of the artwork.

These days, there is no shortage of copies, remakes or prints of well-known artwork that people can cover their walls with.

Gagné agreed the market for original artwork is not what it used to be.

"You don't do this for the money," Gagné said, explaining that what he would most enjoy is spending his retirement working in the gallery, and sharing and exchanging with other art lovers.

Gagné also pointed out that artwork can be a good investment.

"Most pieces from important artists will grow in value," he said.

"But you have to love the artwork. Don't buy something you don't like."

Like any small business, diversification is key. In addition to his artwork, Gagné also sells lighting fixtures that can be mounted to highlight paintings, and is developing lines of gift boxes, cards and books to have art themed collectibles to suit any budget.

Far from being an elitist, Gagné's home has a bit of everything on the walls. Among the pieces by Dali, Chagall and Rembrandt, he has a painting of a sailboat he picked up from a gift shop for $100.

"I liked it, so I bought it and put it on the wall," he said, adding it brings the same pleasure as the more expensive pieces in his collection.

While Gagné's gallery is exclusively online at the moment, he will officially launch the website in Sherbrooke at the Centre Culturel Pierre-Gobeil on May 20 and 21.

"Everything will be there on the walls," Gagné said, giving locals an opportunity to see his collection in person.

Country fans will love Dale & Ray

COUNTRY CONNECTION

JESSIE PELLETIER AULIS

Traditionalist artist Dale Watson and Western Swing Asleep At The Wheel frontman Ray Benson had planned a long time ago to record a duet album, but with their busy schedules, it was hard to find the proper time.

Finally, they made the time and their new album is out and titled Dale & Ray.

The longtime friends and icons really deliver here. This album is pure country candy for the ears from beginning to end. This album can be referred to as real traditional country greatness.

These two guys built very successful careers while consistently sticking to their particular styles of country music, no matter what the trends were and despite the requirements imposed by the Nashville industry to be considered mainstream.

Watson's and Benson's voices blend extremely well, the pairing of the two baritones could not have given better results. The duo plays off both their musical similarities and cultural differences, in the slightly humorous title track of this ten-song collaboration.

On "The Ballad of Dale and Ray" the guys sing about what they love, such as pot (a recurrent topic lately), drinking, and great country music. What a way to open an album.

The iconic duo pays respect to the late country music icon Merle Haggard on the touchingly melancholic "Feelin' Haggard." This sums up how most of Haggard's fans felt when they heard we lost Haggard last year. They also recognize his impact on country music and squeeze in several of the Hag's better-known song titles into the lyrics.

COREY BELLAM

They also pay tribute to another great in Buck Owens on "Cryin' to Cryin' Time Again." It is a reference to Owens' classic "Crying Time." You can easily feel the reverence they have for these great legends.

There's also the clever "A Hangover Ago," a classic country drinking song, complete with heavy steel guitar throughout.

No one can imagine this album without a mandatory tribute to the state they both love so much. It comes with "Nobody's Ever Down in Texas," which decidedly features the Western swing sound.

They are unbelievable on their cover of The Louvin Brothers' "I Wish You Knew." The catchy instrumentation will make you love it on the very first listen, as the twangy fiddles and steel guitar make it instantly infectious.

On "Sittin' and Thinkin' About You," a light and bright production really gives the song a light-hearted feeling, while looking back to the golden days of country music. The fun that the two compadres have together shines throughout this wonderful, informal, yet masterful production. It's a perfect pairing as it showcases both artists equally.

"Bus Breakdown" is the funniest song, as this bluegrass ode recalls a business deal they made where Benson sold Watson a broken down old bus. It's set to a fast-paced melody, similar to one you may be used to hearing on one of Dale's Truckin' Sessions records.

Watson and Benson offer a message of hope on "Forget About Tomorrow Today."

There's the nod to Willie and Waylon covering "Write Your Own Songs." They revisit this relatively little-known Willie Nelson tune (1982). Including it here must have felt very gratifying for the two musicians, one of whom started a band just so he could play a type of music that had not been popular at least 20 years.

Indeed, Ray Benson by doing that, played a crucial role in preserving Western swing for future generations of musicians; while the other has simply founded his own genre altogether still

Atwood pleased with 'The Handmaid's Tale' adaptation

By Victoria Ahearn
THE CANADIAN PRESS

ATV adaptation of "The Handmaid's Tale" is getting rave reviews ahead of Sunday's Canadian premiere on Bravo, including from the novel's author, Margaret Atwood.

"I'm very impressed with what they've been doing. Like, really impressed," said the celebrated Toronto novelist and poet, who wrote the 1985 Governor General's Award-winning dystopian story that inspired the series.

The 10-part, Toronto-shot drama (which premiered on Hulu in the US on Wednesday) is set in a male-dominated, totalitarian society ruled by a fundamentalist regime that treats women as property of the state.

Elisabeth Moss of "Mad Men" fame stars as Offred, who is torn from her daughter, enslaved in the commander's household, and forced to become a "handmaid" sexual servant and have babies.

The theocracy takes such measures — in what was formerly part of the United States — amid environmental disasters and rising sterility.

"She's very good," Atwood said of Moss. "She has a very expressive face, but she's also a producer of (the series)."

The cast also includes Samira Wiley of "Orange Is the New Black," Alexis Bladel of "Gilmore Girls," Joseph Fiennes of "Shakespeare in Love" and Max Minghella of "The Social Network."

"The cast is wonderful and particularly of interest is that a lot of them are cast counter-type, like it's not the kind of role they usually play," said Atwood. "So that's going to be a surprise to some people, too."

Amanda Brugel of Pointe Claire, Que., is the lone Canadian in the cast. She plays Rita, who is a Martha, which is a household servant.

"It's been such an intense, gorgeous, wonderful, terrifying, awful, beautiful experience," said Brugel.

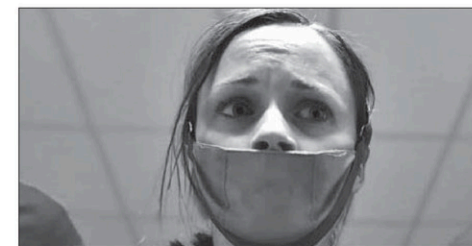

"And Rita has a lot of secrets, as do most of the characters in 'The Handmaid's Tale.' But she's very dark, sombre. She has an edge and a bite to her."

Although Atwood wrote the novel in 1984 and published it the next year, many are pointing to its relevance in the Trump era.

"There's a lot of things that this book touches on that are relevant to where we are now," said Brugel. "It's just so amazing that Margaret wrote this over 20 years ago and it's still so relevant."

Bruce Miller created, executive produced and wrote the series. Atwood makes a brief cameo and was a consulting producer.

"I spent a good deal of time talking to Bruce Miller ... and discussed his concepts," said Atwood. "And then, as well as meeting him in person, emailing about various questions that might come up and looking at the scripts and making some notes."

"I met them all when they came into town, including the designer.... It's just excellent, what I've seen so far."

The entire first season of "The Handmaid's Tale" will also launch on Bell Media's streaming service CraveTV this spring.

Home Free

keeping the traditions alive.

Dale Watson and Ray Benson are two men who have always put the music ahead of their personal goals, and though this record will probably never sit at Number One on the Billboard, it is so much fun to hear them together for the first time and having a ball.

The musicians working with them also deserve some credit. With Dale Watson's ultra-tight touring trio, and the extended family of musicians including the main lineup of Asleep at the Wheel, it is easy to figure out it would be spot on.

Dale & Ray is a really traditional album and one any country fan will love and appreciate.

Home Free at the Centennial

A sold-out show on a Monday night is not exactly something that happens very often. But people showed up to support Home Free, an a cappella group who surprised more than one fan. People in attendance made it very clear that they appreciated the show.

The a cappella group always relies on sound quality in order to deliver at their best and of course, it was faultless. Tim Foust didn't have any problems demonstrating those beautiful low notes that he can reach. The guys provide flawless harmonies and exceptional vocal talent, and they don't disappoint.

Maren Morris' "My Church" as well as Johnny Cash's "Ring Of Fire," and The Oakridge Boys' "Elvira" are among the songs that people enjoyed. I must say that their rendition of every number was impeccable.

Adam Rupp (one of the founding members) provides the beats and the rhythms that give the band their signature sound. It was a high point of the show when he remained on stage alone for an imaginary drum solo (all these drums sounds came from his mouth).

Their talent and humour made for a breathtaking show and earned them many standing ovations.

The show was a presentation of Firehouse Productions — another great coup!
