YOU CAN SEE IT,
perhaps, one of Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets—but you can't feel it after it's taken. And yet it does more good than any of the huge,
old-fashioned pills, with their grip-

COUNTY NEWS.

Eustis
The Rev. Principal of Bishop's College,
Thos. Adams, D. C. L., will preach here
next Sunday evening at 7 o'clock (standard time) service.

Massawippi.
All that attend the County Fair at Ayer's Flat, Aug. 30th and 31st, are invited to call at the W. C. T. U. "C. Z. Cur-er," where they will be welcome and entertained by the ladies, with interesting books, music, friendly chats, ice water,
etc. The "Corner" will be in the County Building, first floor. All in sympathy with the cause are asked to come and register their names in our "Fair Register." If it is decided to sell medals due notice will be given, but it is somewhat doubtful.

E. ST. DENIER,
Hatley (Town) Supt. of Fair Work.

Compton.
Aug. 22.—Just as I was about to take my pen to declare settled weather down
came a splash of rain, but that has passed away and we still hope for sunshine which is much needed, as there is a great quantity of grain in the town to be harvested.

Mr. S. J. Craig is taking a little outing at the Weirs, N. H. Mr. and Mrs.
A. D. Smith left Compton yesterday for the World's Fair. Mr. and Mrs. A. B.
Hartwell left also for Chicago, and to visit their son in Minn. They were accompanied by the widow of the late Elder Tyler, (formerly of Compton) who was returning to her home in Spencer, Wis., after a visit of a few months at her native home.

The Rev. Mr. Choquette has returned from the World's Fair. We are sorry to hear that Mr. Archie Jamieson is failing fast. A number of our townsmen are attending the Fair at Stanstead this week.

Georgeville.
Several real estate transfers have taken place in the village recently, among these Mr. N. A. Beach has become the owner of a site in the centre of the village, just opposite the Camperdown Hotel. On this property he intends erecting a new hotel, equally well fitted for the accommodation of transient travel and summer boarders.

The large building known as Black's Hall will be moved from its present site, beside the Episcopal church, to the side of the new hotel building. Mrs. J. T.
Routledge, nee Elythe Allen is stopping at the old Sir Hugh Allen estate, "Bel-mere" which property it is said she intends buying. Summer boarders come and go, but on the whole the season will not be so long or the number of visitors as large as last summer. Georgeville's little social event, the annual bazaar of the Ladies' Guild and concert following,
was held on Saturday and proved a good success financially and otherwise. Mr.
A. W. Bullock, of the Montreal Herald, is in town staying with his parents at Likview House.

Bulwer.
Since my last local nothing unusual has taken place with us. The farmers have gathered in a splendid hay crop and the prospects are good for a bountiful harvest. Luke Libby's barn was burnt by lightning with all its contents on the 7th inst. Little Luna Williams has been very sick but we are glad to report her better. Nettie Wheeler from Lowell, is home on a visit and Mr. and Mrs.
Willard Wheeler are visiting friends here. A band has been organized in connection with the church; present membership 14; appointments for regular meetings, two Saturdays in every month;
object, foreign and home missions. An ice cream social will be held under the auspices of the W. C. T. U. on the evening of the 31st, at the residence of Mr.
Thomas Johnson. Cakes will be supplied to the ladies. A cordial invitation is extended to all. Admission 10 cents.

Maple Grove.
Haying is completed, harvesting is progressing, crops are excellent. In this month two socials have been held on behalf of Trinity church; the first on Aug.
9th, was given by Mrs. Wm. Sealy at her residence; the latter by Mr. and Mrs.
John Donaghy on Aug. 19th, it being the anniversary of their wedding day. On July 21st a violent electric storm visited this place. A portion of the fluid entered through a broken pane of glass into the shop of Mr. J. O'Brien striking him on the lower limbs and throwing his little child out of his arms some distance on the floor without injury. Mr. O'Brien was partially disabled for a few minutes,
and Fred Cross and another young man who were in the shop at the time were somewhat shaken up. Fire caught in some coal oil but was quickly extinguished. The lightning followed the telephone wire about half a mile to the trout brook on J. Dinning's farm disfiguring the poles in its route. The Kicka-poo Indians, who have been holding entertainments and selling their medicine for two weeks at St. Ferdinand, have fitted. On the evening of Aug 18th, the remains of the late Peter McDonald
was interred in Trinity Church cemetery.
He died in Portland, Me., where he has been since last fall under medical treatment. He leaves no relatives here to mourn, he being the last of the family
who have all died within a few years.
He was a good citizen and was respected
by all his neighbors.

Phillipsburg.
As you are aware, this is a pleasant summer resort and while we have been
and are favored with visitors, still, more will be welcome. The Rev. W. J.
Crothers, M. A., of Port Hope, Ont., recently occupied the pulpit of the Methodist church. He and his brother were on a visit to parents and friends here.

Rev. H. Montgomery who died so suddenly some little time ago, has been followed by another. John Poulin, aged 58 years, died on the 18th inst, after a brief illness, and was buried from the Episcopal church on the 20th. Mrs.
Outwater, the wife of the young and rising physician of this place is still an invalid. Rev. Mr. Allan, rector of the Episcopal Church is still away on his vacation. Haying is done and a heavy crop has been secured. Much grain has already been harvested. Those interested are pushing the new railroad vigorously. I presume the sort of the iron horse, and the rumbering of the carriage wheels will soon be heard. Miss Mary Howard, who recently obtained a model school diploma, has been engaged for the school at St. Armand. The Howard young people will give two musical and elocutionary entertainments this week and one next week as follows:—
At Morgan's Friday evening, the 25th,
and at Pike River, Saturday the 26th
inst, and at Phillipsburg, Friday, Sept. 1st.
At the latter place, C. W. Coates, Esq., of Montreal will assist.

Waterville.
Mrs. William McIntosh with her mother, Mrs. Jos. Stone, former resident of Waterville, were visiting friends here last week. Mrs. George Howe, of Wisconsin, formerly of Danville, Que., and Mrs. Willard Hunting of Massawippi,
with a married daughter from Colorado,
were visiting our neighbors, the Silvers,
last week. Mrs. Alex. McClay, of Richmond, with her daughters Ethel and Amy are visiting there this week. Miss Mary Silver has gone to spend a few days
at Mount View. Mr. and Mrs. Drysdale of Montreal spent Sunday with her brothers, the McIntoshs. George Freeland, of Bowmanville, Ont., grandson of the Rev. Mr. Purkis, who was for a long time pastor of the Congregational church here, has been visiting this, his native village. Mrs. Blount and her son Willie returned to Worcester, Mass., Wednesday. Mr. C. O. Swanson, Emigrant Agent is home from one of his long trips. The work on the foundation for the new factory is progressing. There are men coming to this place every day seeking employment, on account of the works in so many places shutting down.
The services of the Church of England
Waterville Mission, Holy Communion
only at 9 a.m.; North Hatley,
service at 10:30; Waterville, Bible Class
and Sunday School at 2:15, service at 3; Eustis service at 7 p.m. All standard time.

Moes River.
Fred Patterson has been home on a visit. Henry Bliss has gone to Richmond. Ernest McCoy of Dixville was in the place last week, with his photographic apparatus. Dr. Woodman's daughter has been visiting her grandfather here. Mrs. Jennie Woodman Owen is still at home. Mr. A. A. Woodman is quite ill. Mr. C. J. Draper has moved his family into the Byron house. Mrs.
A. O. Crosby of Hillhurst has come to live among us. Many strangers gathered here on the 19th to witness the dedication services of the new church. The services which were lengthy, were fully attended.
Seven clergymen were in attendance.
The sermons on Saturday were by Rev.
R. Brunning and Rev. A. G. R. Gers D.D.
Saturday evening, exercises by children with floral offerings. Sunday two instructive sermons by Rev. Q. H. Shiren, addressed by Rev. Messrs. Brunning, Potter, Smith of Williamston and Harris of Compton. At the close of the ordination service words of welcome were given by Mr. Samuel Pierce for the church, and a most hearty welcome was given Mr. Leonard by Bro. Harris of Compton. Sunday evening, sermon by Rev. W. D. Potter, who brought a token to this people from his flock at Shelburne Falls, in form of a pulpit bible. Music was furnished by the church choir, the concert being prevented from being present by sickness. Three beautiful oak chairs upholstered in plush were presented by H. A. Wilder & Co. of Montreal. The pulpit was donated by the Hunting Bros, Herbert and Willis.
Many other things were kindly contributed but these seemed most noticeable.

Brookbury.
A picnic was held under the auspices of the Brookbury Bury Farmers' Club, on the 10th of August, in the sugar grove of James Joyce. The grounds were in excellent order and the day all that could be desired. After luncheon the speakers repaired to the stand which was tastefully decorated with flowers and different kinds of grain, (thanks to the ladies who so kindly assisted the Club.) The President, Mr.
Warren, in his usual happy manner addressed the audience, explaining the objects and progress of the club, and called upon Mr. I. C. Lassell who gave some excellent advice on farming, also some telling remarks on some well known newspaper writers. After Mr. Lassell the name of Mr. R. H. Pope was called, who in quite a lengthy address gave to the club
and their friends the benefit of his experience in a number of different branches of farming. He was listened to with intense interest, and so he ought to be for his advice was both able and instructive, the more so as he is a practical farmer himself
and knows whereof he speaks, not guessing at the ideas he holds. He was followed by Mr. John Martin, who is one of the oldest farmers in Bury, having made it his business all his life. He in turn was followed by the "Spirit of the Post." Yes, the Spirit was there and the Body was there, and gave some hints as to how a man might make money faster than by farming. Music was furnished by Misses Parker, Stacey and Hodge; songs by Messrs. Bennett, Murray and Betts. A platform was laid close by for dancing,
which was well patronized. Altogether
the picnic was a success, bringing a pleasant
and profitable day for all who attended.

Best Cure For

All disorders of the Throat and Lungs is Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. It has no equal as a cough-cure.

Bronchitis

"When I was a boy, I had a bronchial trouble of such a persistent and stubborn character, that the doctor pronounced it incurable by ordinary remedies, but recommended me to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. I did so, and one bottle cured me. For the last fifteen years, I have used this preparation with good effect whenever I take a bad cold, and I know of numbers of people who keep it in the house all the time, not considering it safe to be without it."—J. C. Woodson, P. M., Forest Hill, W. Va.

Cough

"For more than twenty-five years, I was a sufferer from lung trouble, attended with coughing so severe at times as to cause hemorrhaging, the paroxysms frequently lasting three or four hours. I was induced to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and after taking four bottles, was thoroughly cured."—Franz Hoffman, Clay Centre, Kans.

La Grippe

"Last spring I was taken down with la grippe. At times I was completely prostrated, and so difficult was my breathing that my breast seemed as if confined in an iron cage. I procured a bottle of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and no sooner had I begun taking it than relief followed. I could not believe that the effect would be so rapid and the cure so complete."—W. H. Williams, Cook City, S. Dak.

The Row in the Commons

"There was a sound of rivalry by night." It was in the House of Commons, and a Tory had taken the floor. The speaker of the chamber with his eloquence did not fail. And, oh, he had a pretty wit, a wit so pretty that beside it that of London Punch seemed very stale and flat. He talked not of the weather, and he chatted not of sport. But such remarks as made T. P. O'Connor wildly snort. Whereas T. P. observed, amid a lot of Irish grins. It seemed to him that Joseph and old Judas must be twins. That set the ball a-rolling: Mr. Healy then arose and spoke a British Commoner upon his Roman nose. Whereas a noble Tory, to the credit of his race, bent both his ears a-couraging into Mr. Healy's face. Then sixteen members from the Isle let out a wild hurroo! And twenty-seven Tories they proceeded then to do. They smashed them on the benches, and they tossed them to the sky; The only thing they couldn't catch was Mr. Speaker's eye. When every Tory nose was red, and every eye was blue, When every Irish hat was smashed the scragmagers got through. And Mr. Gladstone, grand old man, in language fit and pat. Called for the question previous, which was—"Where are we?"—Harper's Weekly.

AFTER SEVENTEEN YEARS.

The "Jefferson Borden" Mutiny.

BY EPHRAIM W. CLARK.

On the afternoon of the day of the mutiny, and while I was at the wheel, I overheard a suspicious conversation between the Pattersons. I heard the words "fight" and "midnight" freely exchanged, and I was convinced that the tyrants were plotting some set piece of cruelty upon us. My convictions were further strengthened by certain circumstances that occurred about the same time. The handspikes had been taken from their usual places on deck and stowed away aft, marinspikes, belying their name, were actually in use, and the men had also been put out of reach. These circumstances combined occurred to me in an ominous light and seemed to be certain portents of coming trouble of a tragic nature. So far there had been no talk of concerted resistance among my shipmates—nothing but a hopeless murmuring against fate and very little time to exchange even that poor consolation. But now that appearances were so ominous I spoke to the others and told them that we would certainly have to defend ourselves to the last or take the risk of being killed outright. My shipmates acquiesced in my opinion of the gravity of the situation, though quite at a loss for a course of action.

"The captain and mates mean some serious mischief," I said to them. "Whatever it may be we don't know, but one thing we must determine upon is that if deliberately attacked we must fight back and fight hard. The officers are well armed and we are not—the more reason to fight well. If the worst comes to the worst we must take whatever comes to hand and trust to fate for the rest. Do you understand?" Miller and Glew understood too well the situation they found themselves in and promised to do their part manfully if called upon. That is the sum total of the "conspiracy" and events speedily proved that we had need of a mutual understanding of the action that was forced upon us.

The night of April 20th, 1875, was one of the few moderately fine nights of the passage. The heavens were light and a fair wind blowing on our port quarter sent us along at an eight-knots' gait. It was the second mate's watch on deck from eight o'clock till midnight and Jake was at the wheel. I was pacing fore and aft the maindeck alongside the forward house and turning over in my mind the events of the voyage. Under the circumstances I would have felt cheered by the fine weather and the prospects of a speedy passage to port, but now a feeling of coming disaster took possession of me and do what I would I could not shake it off. The very fact of the weather being fine had a sinister appearance to my overwrought fancy, for I recalled vividly the terrors of the "tricing up" on that beautiful day some weeks back.

I was glad to get rid of these unpleasant reflections when the second mate sang out, "Pump ship," at three bells (half-past nine o'clock). Jake being at the wheel, the second mate and myself pumped the vessel out. At four bells I relieved Jake at the wheel. The Borden was scudding before the wind at a lively rate and required constant care to keep her from jibing, so that my attention was distracted from the former unpleasant bent. The second mate was the former unpleasant being in sight and as I became used to his appearance as he walked the deck, sometimes standing by my side for a few minutes and looking in the compass, then, again, taking a turn fore and aft the deck, and so on I became oblivious of his presence. I suppose there must have been some unaccountable spell in the night for I shortly forgot my surroundings and all the terror of past few days: the idea of impending trouble might have been the vaguest phantasy, so completely had it vanished for the time being, and I stood there at the wheel without any tangible feelings, and certainly without any rancor for the past injuries in my memory.

Along about midnight I asked the second mate to be relieved for a few minutes as I felt temporarily unwell. Mr. Patterson took hold of the wheel and told me to send Jake aft to take the wheel from him. I answered, "Aye, aye, sir," and did as I was ordered, proceeding forward without waiting to see whether my watchmate obeyed or not. I had gone from my post less than five minutes and was returning, having just descended from the topgallant forecastle, when I observed the second mate coming rapidly towards me. He was dressed in a monkey-jacket and a muffler and these he threw off quickly as he approached me.

In an instant all the terrible fear of the past hours returned to me. I could not misconstrue the attitude of the second mate; that he meant me violence was quite evident and I mentally prayed for strength to resist my brutal assailant. I was alone on the vessel's deck, Jake, as I supposed, being now at the wheel, and had the further disadvantages of light weight and no weapon of defense, except my hands. The second mate was a large, powerfully built man, and as he came on with a few rapid strides I could see the gleam of a belaying pin or similar weapon in his hand.

I retreated toward the lee side of the deck and as I did so he raised the pin above his head and, without uttering a word of explanation or preface brought it down with stunning effect on my head. I was spurred to desperation, though not to futile rage. I retained my senses and sprang forward to where the head sheets were belayed. Throwing off the balloon jib sheet I snatched the pin from the rail and stood at bay. Patterson uttered an oath and raised his hand again to fell me.

In that moment all the memory of my wrongs and the present danger of assassination nerved me to defend myself to the uttermost. I experienced the valorous spirit that is praised in the patriot and sinks every consideration of danger before the power that is a just cause. Not vengeance, but indignation, and the horrible menace of my assailant, who bowed over me with uplifted arm, gave me strength to strike him down, and had the trio of my tormentors stood before me I would have braved them single handed to the end, not was the momentary stimulus of the situation.

I grasped my weapon firmly with both hands, and as the second mate aimed to strike me again, I jumped aside and dealt him a blow with all my might upon his head.

He fell to the deck without a groan. Fate was merciful to him, for death came suddenly, almost while he was gloating over the wrongs of his victims.

The encounter began and was ended in less than a minute. I had not intended to kill the second mate, but to defend myself as far as might be needed. In the calmer moments that succeeded the fight, as I looked at the dead man lying at my feet, my sentiments were of pity that the fortunes of war should have been so decisive against him. My conscience was no accuser. I had faced my man and the death blow had been struck fairly and openly in self-defense.

The noise of the balloon jib shaking in the wind and the falling of the second mate had aroused my shipmates, Miller and Glew, who now came on deck and went aft. Exactly what occurred between the mate and these men I did not notice, but when I followed them and asked Miller if he had seen the mate, he replied in a significant tone: "Yes; come and see him yourself."

I found the mate lying on deck by the fore rigging, exactly in the same spot where the brutal attack had been previously made upon Miller. The man was dead and after a brief consultation we consigned the bodies to the sea.

Captain Patterson did not appear on deck, nor did we make any attempt to call him or notify him of what had been done. Shortly after the fight we heard the captain calling for the mate from the cabin, and receiving no answer he called for me, but we remained silent not knowing just what course we had better pursue to provide against further violence on his part. Captain Patterson, the steward and the French boy, or rather young man, for he was over eight years of age, were aft and had the advantage of fire arms, so that our position was a precarious one still. At daybreak, while we were standing forward by the foremast, the captain came on deck and having already grasped the situation, began firing at us from a place of safety. We retaliated with whatever missiles came to hand, which were wholly ineffectual. He was assisted by the steward and cabin boy and between them they succeeded in wounding us more than once during the first day's siege.

At night the afterguard retired to the cabin and barricaded the doors and skylights against a possible surprise. This guerrilla warfare was carried on for three days' during which time we ate nothing and dared not go to sleep. Sometimes the foreward would take place, the captain calling upon us to surrender and we refusing to do so unless assured of fair treatment. Captain Patterson would make no terms, nothing but absolute submission would satisfy him. He held the stinews of war and was content to make a waiting fight in which he finally won.

At the end of the third day, tired, hungry and wounded in several places, we retired to the fore-castle and gave up to exhausted nature. The fore-castle doors were immediately closed and locked by our victors; loopholes were bored in the sides of the house and shot poured through them into the bunks. Then the successful strategist conceived the plan of pouring boiling water through the stove-pipe hole in the roof. As the water washed under our bunks we were compelled to come out and receive the other alternative of hot shot from the captain's rifle. Glew put up his hands and said: "Don't fire, captain; I surrender."

The captain deliberately took aim and shot him. Glew fell with a wail in the spine which crippled him for life. The captain would have shot him again as he lay on the deck had not the steward prevailed on him to desist. At first Patterson refused to be convinced that we were beyond any further resistance, saying that we were only "playing possum," as he styled it.

We were now ironed, hand and foot, dragged out on deck and thrown down on the hatch. Then Mrs. Patterson approached us and offered whatever consolation lay in her gift. She ran her fingers gently through my hair, called Glew a "poor fellow," and wanted to know if Miller had any dying statement to leave his mother. She implored us to accept some gruel of her own make and to join in prayer for the repose of our souls, which she vowed, would be flitting from the clay in a few moments at most. I told Mrs. Patterson that I had nothing to say and would esteem it a favor on her part if she would leave me alone. I was suffering intense pain besides being thoroughly exhausted from loss of blood and the hardships of the past, but I conceived a very lively disgust for the hypocrisy of this woman who had aided and abetted in the beastly work of her relatives and who was now posing as spiritual comforter to the dying sailors.

The object of her solicitation was soon apparent when she began to question us about the killing of the mate and to put ready-made answers into our mouths when we failed to respond. Captain Patterson was present at this supposedly ante-mortem interview, and looked and acted for a time as if remorse had claimed him for its own. However, simulation was not his strong point, and he soon lost his temper with us and threatened to club us if we refused to answer the questions put to us by Mrs. Patterson. Then he told us bluntly that his object was to get evidence enough to hang us, or, failing that, to send us to "board" with Uncle Sam." This, of course, did not hasten our replies, and the last recourse was adopted. Miller was particularly obstinate, and Patterson, picking up a chain-hook, hit him with it several times till he cried out in his pain: "O, mercy! Take me to the law, captain; take me to the law." "I give you law, and more of it than you want. Answer these questions, or I'll give you law and judgment and execution, too," was Patterson's answer.

Thus ends the story of the mutiny. I will not dwell upon the cruelties perpetrated upon us during the rest of that passage—of the thousand deaths inflicted on the prayers for relief in any shape from our festering wounds and no less from the taunts of the captain and the hypocrisy of his wife. We were helpless to the gallows. No opportunity was given us to testify in our own behalf, and though I had written out a statement of our case, our counsel refused to read it in court, saying that the court would only laugh at what a common sailor had to say, and that he would depend upon the witnesses for his defense. Under these circumstances the only logical thing happened—Miller and myself were sentenced to be hanged. Hopeless and friendless, we bowed to the will of God and trusted in Him who has said: "Fear thou not, for I am with thee; be not dismayed, for I am thy God. I will strengthen thee; yes, I will help thee; yes I will uphold thee with the right hand of my righteousness."

I could do nothing but appeal to Him in my distress, and the God of the friendless has abundantly testified His forgiveness, if any be needed at the hands of the Almighty, by raising me up a host of staunch and loyal defenders. I confess the killing, with this qualification, that the deed was forced upon me. Circumstances not my seeking and entirely beyond my control placed the imperative duty of self-defense upon me and the blow was struck. I believed my life was in deadly peril and I defended it at the cost of the life of another. A worm will turn when trod upon. Could I do less?

The "apology," after the tricing-up, and the "confession," after the so-called mutiny, were extorted from us on the pain of further torture, and were used against us in evidence, while our own statement was not even allowed to be read. If the reader believes that the Pattersons were mercilessly struck down with out provocation or warning, he will pronounce the killing unjustifiable. But if, on the other hand, I have substantiated a case of self-defense and shown the condemning documentary evidence of the "apology" and "confession" to be worthless for the purpose it was used for, I beg the reader's sympathy and co-operation with my personal friends in whatever way may seem fittest to them.

I now conclude with thanks for the reader's patience, and trusting that everything will come out all right in God's own time.

KEEPING THE HOUSE COOL.

Much of the comfort of the household depends upon keeping the house cool, writes Maria Parlos in a practical article on "Housekeeping in the Country" in the July Ladies' Home Journal. In the morning every window and blind should be opened, giving the sunlight and air access. After the house has been thoroughly aired and put in order the blinds should be closed and the shades partially drawn. If the windows are closed in the hottest part of the day the house will be cooler. As soon as the sun begins to go down reopen the blinds and windows. On an intensely hot day the room of a sick person can be made more endurable by having sheets of cheese cloth wrung out of cold water and hung across the open windows.

The Question of the Day. Often asked—Where can I find a home? Where can I make a living? Where can I, with ordinary diligence, prudence and economy, provide my family with the necessities of life, and feel assured that at the end of it I can leave to my children a decent inheritance? To what place can I go and find good land on terms so reasonable that I may get a portion of it without burdening myself with debt, which I can never be sure to pay off? Where can I find such a place as to be sure and safe from crop failures, and allow me to devote myself to any special branch of agriculture for which I may feel myself fitted.

Answered in a few words. Get a home in the great Flour State of Minnesota. It never yet had a crop failure—where land values are increasing rapidly. Write without delay to the International Land Company, Grandview Loan Building, Minneapolis, Minn., for all information. They can sell you farms on any terms you may desire so that you will be satisfied.

MESSRS. DICK & CO. Your book and medicine were received some time ago but I did not use them on the horse I wrote you about, having bought another which was in much worse condition; he was a four year old with a "horse air" of the worst kind and was thought incurable: so I thought I would try it on him. His appetite was poor, hair rough, his appearance stupid, in short he was all knocked out. I gave him Dick's Blood Purifier which worked like magic. Appetite is now good, hair glossy and whole appearance much improved. It also proved the best worm irradicator I ever used and I thank you very much.

Exhibition Notes.

All arrangements are about completed for the approaching Fair. The buildings and sheds have been thoroughly renovated and repaired, and the grounds and track placed in first class position. Favorable replies have been received from the judges in the different departments and exhibitors will be glad to learn that such experts as Wm. Crozier, of Long Island, N. Y., the celebrated Jersey man, and J. I. Felch, of Natick, Mass., whose wide reputation as a poultry expert is so fully acknowledged, have consented to be present and act as judges. All attractions are in shape, everything that has been advertised is guaranteed to take place. The management are glad to announce that the entries are larger this year at this date than they have been any year since the Dominion Exhibition. The Main building will be well filled with a large and attractive exhibit. The cheap rates and excursions have now been fixed by the different railways, as will appear by the special railway advertisements. The Canadian Pacific have consented to hold the Megaratic local which leaves Sherbrooke at 4:30 until 8 each day of the Fair, and on the 6th Sept. a special train will leave Sherbrooke at 6 o'clock for Farnham. The Grand Trunk, Boston & Maine, Maine Central and Quebec Central will run the same excursions and rates as last year. The prospects have never been better since the organization of this association for a successful Fair, and the general public will do well to take advantage of the opportunity to visit Sherbrooke and their popular townships Fair on one or all three days of the exhibition.

GEOLOGIST BILL NYE.

NOT EVERY MAN KNOWS WHAT HIS FARM IS MADE OF.

But William Does—Filling an Icehouse in One Day—Something About the North Carolina Hounds—Visiting a Mountaineer—Sye Will Not Yield to Vanderbilt.

(Copyright, 1893, by Edgar W. Nye.) PEE WEE CHATEAUX, N. C., July. I have just been posting notices at the remote outlines of my grounds warning off all trespassers, hunters, peasant poachers and the general hoi polloi and sans culottes from trespassing, and especially from tracking my game preserves around over the place. One of my quail was shot last season, and the other naturally went away. We also lost several white rats. We think it was the work of an incendiary.

POSTING NOTICES.

So I have just had my farmer in chief, assisted by my geologist, go out and post the entire tract of country and instructed the lodgekeeper to see that all persons entering the wicket are correct in the annual passwords, explanations and signals, and the gardener is required to see that all present are qualified to remain.

Last season I set out a number of canvasback ducks, but they were not familiar with my boundaries, and therefore got on another plantation. I heard afterward about their having company over there, but it did not get through my head about the ducks till day before yesterday.

My geologist has been of great use to me. He has reduced the pitch of my farm from one-third to one-quarter. No man should try to farm in the Blue Ridge mountains without a knowledge of geology or without some one on the farm who is thoroughly conversant with this science.

My farm is mostly pliocene, post pliocene and reene. I learned this while digging my well. Below the farm proper, however, lie the cretaceous, jurassic, triassic and jackassic periods.

The well has revealed all this on account of its great depth, yet the farm is so perpendicular and the well so far above the house that by tunneling in eight feet from the kitchen door we strike the bottom of the well and get ice cold water to run through the house and pour in a beautiful cascade over the front door-steps.

The waterworks above the first floor are simple. A large stove in the bathroom is made to heat seven or eight paving stones, which you toss into the bathtub until sufficiently heated, cold water having been carried up sufficient to fill the tub.

Guests who really come to see us because they are fond of us do not mind carrying the water up for their own personal use. At first I tried to raise the water supply by means of a windmill, but the plumber who put it up was not the one from whom I bought it, and so it never worked. We then tried horsepower, but the ground was so elevated on one side of the well and so depressed on the other that the horse when coming down hill skated so rapidly that he broke the pump.

Last winter I filled an icehouse in one day with good thick ice, which shows that we have a good all the year round climate. Our climate is not wholly confined to the summer.

Yet there are people who do not have faith in what I say. I know a man very well—have borrowed money of him, in fact, when he first came here and did not care what became of his property—who had to speak in a whisper and had $7 hemorrhoids. In the morning his pillow looked like that of one murdered, and friends had lost all hope of him. He had night sweats and had to live on cod liver oil and emulsions. He was brought here on a mattress, and yet in six months by breathing all the climate he could and under good care I was so surprised at the change in his appearance that I returned the money to him.

Summer or autumn is the best time to come here. Get a good horse. I have one that could be obtained of me for a given sum. He is an easy-going horse, but was a hunter once, I was told. I did not understand then what a hunter was. I thought it was a horse who would hunt me up if I got lost or anything. The man said that he was a horse who knew more than a man. He does. He knows more than I do, and I have been offered the chair of rhetoric and literature in Pinner's college, this state. I wrote them that if they would hold the offer open a couple of weeks I thought I could accept it, but not now. I could not accept a seat of any kind at present. I admit that this horse knows more than I do, for he knows where he is going, and I do not. I wish sometimes while briskly galloping over high worm fences and hornets' nests that I did know better what his future plans were than I do.

This country is full of hounds—not the foxhound of Chestnut Hill, Philadelphia, but the plebeian hound with a scaled back. Our feuds here are as deep and abiding as they are anywhere, but they are not so fatal. Vendettas fight each other by scalding each other's hounds with a dish pan of hot water.

These hounds have long, loose ears hanging at the sides of their faces and giving them a look like the method among ladies of combing the hair prior to the war. They—the hounds—have a yelp that sounds in the distant forest like a baby elephant with membranous croup.

My horse is attracted by that cry and takes me with him to see what it is. Most generally I do not adhere to him, but when I get there my clothes are mostly injured, and Virginia creepers and poison ivy stream out from my neck like vegetable bows.

The hounds are found trying to ascend a black gum tree for a katydid that they have treed.

Once we found them just as they had overtaken a little mammoth black hornet's nest and were in full cry. This horse would give a man health, I think, and take his mind from his other troubles. Visit Asheville, Mount Mitchell, Black Mountain, Buck Shoals, Ticktown and other summer places. Ride blithely over the lee or go tooting along the liquid boulevards from Piggy Back to the Dismal Swamp. You will feel renovated and gay.

In the mountains you will stop over night with a yeoman who lives plainly, surrounded by his 17 children. The girls are some of them 7 feet high and sleep in their smbonnets.

A young foreigner tried to kiss a mountain girl some 19 or 20 years old and of the above height. She did not know what the custom was among the nobility, but she reckoned it wasn't a common thing among strangers in that settlement, so she broke down and drove into the ground a large, beautiful lilac bush with him.

Some of these merry little mountain maids chew tobacco and chop wood in the forest, toting it home on their shoulders as they gayly carol some nocturne from Vogner.

The tourist will notice that his pink nightdress will attract attention in the family, and neighbors from a distance will come to see how he is resting.

The meals are plain. You ride up a little canyon, we would call it west. Here it is a coulie or cove. In California and the Spanish countries of America they would call it a little arroyo, or some such thing.

You reach the head of the gulch toward nightfall. You have heard that there is a cabin there. You can stay there over night. But there is no sign of it after all. Suddenly you hear the baying of 11 unclassified and pedigreeless dogs! They burst on you as though they would eat you alive, but look at them a moment and their tails are between their legs at once.

A copperas colored man now comes forth with a faded plum duff hat on his head and hair and whiskers that look like the inside of a buggy cushion.

He shuts up the hounds' noise and asks you to "light and tie." You do so. You have read that these mountaineers are profuse in their welcome, and you get all ready to be taken in his great warm arms and borne in and put to sleep in the spare bed, but he does not do so. He looks you over in a manner that reminds you of the way you felt when your wife's father first examined your lack of good points as a son-in-law.

By and by supper comes. Around a big pine table free from napery gather the family, with an outside fringe of dogs. One of these is a mother. She has a little baseball nine of big headed twins. You go there any time in the year and you will find a new set like this of fresh young dogs.

All stand up. In the middle of the table is a dish pan full of curdled milk and a large, thick corn pone. Every one is given a wedge of this coarse pone and a gourd. With the gourd you eat the upright milk and then wipe your whiskers on your coat sleeve. As you take a bite of pone the dog back of you samples your gourd, and when you try to save your milk he eats the most of your pone.

THE DOG EATS THE PONE.

It is a sort of Saxon method of life and seems to go back to the days of Cedric, only these people own no serfs. The affections are feeble, yet they cling for generations to the same coulie, and the seasons come and go and find them ever poor, ever sad of eye and voice, too lazy to love or to talk or to enjoy—just human germs, mammals that show the early rehearsals of nature in trying to create man; the discarded caricatures of humanity who forgot to die with the cave bear and the protodryad.

Yet they differ little mentally. They are free from ambition, and their only gesture which shows vitality is a grave movement of the hand toward the ankle in token of anxiety, but they are most generally too late—the flea has flown.

But hope is dawning. Mr. George Vanderbilt has bought another big tract of land near Pisgah. Thus he owns both north and south of me. Is it possible that he intends to surround me and thus compel me to sell?

Possibly! But I will not yield. I am like a colored man whose little farm still stands in the center of Mr. Vanderbilt's first purchase and who refuses to sell for 1,000 times the value of his little place. "This has always suited me," he goes on to say, "and hit allers will. All my neighbors hez sold out and went off, but I've know'd all kinds of people and never quarreled with em, and unless Mr. Vanderbilt is a mighty qu'esome man I kin get along wid him. I ain't pertickler."

GOOD Food - - Digestion - - Complexion

are all intimately connected—practically inseparable. Though the fact is often ignored, it is nevertheless true that a good complexion is an impossibility without good digestion, which in turn depends on good food.

There is no more common cause of indigestion than lard. Let the bright housekeeper use

Don't let that cold of yours run on. You think it is a light thing. But it may run into catarrh. Or into pneumonia. Or consumption.

Catarrh is disgusting. Pneumonia is dangerous. Consumption is death itself. The breathing apparatus must be kept healthy and clear of all obstructions and offensive matter. Otherwise there is trouble ahead.

All the diseases of these parts, head, nose, throat, bronchial tubes and lungs, can be delightfully and entirely cured by the use of Boschee's German Syrup. If you don't know this already, thousands and thousands of people can tell you. They have been cured by it, and "know how it is, themselves." Bottle only 75 cents. Ask any druggist.

NORTH DAKOTA BAD LANDS.

Among the most interesting sights along the entire line of this road are the strange BAD LANDS of North Dakota. Here fire and water have played great games. The result is a landscape of the most peculiar sort, Bluffs and hills of grotesque form, and again of most graceful and rounded shape and of vivid colors are seen. It is a region of fanciful creations.

The Hotel Broadwater.

At Helena the capital of Montana, there is a summer hotel and resort of unusual excellence. The BROADWATER is equal to any hotel in this country. The surroundings are artistically laid out and the view (which is restful and pleasant in the extreme) in connection with it there is the largest Natatorium in the world, fed by both hot and cold water from natural springs. Just About to Fall.
 Have you seen the happy mother when the babe begins to talk?
 Have you seen her teach the tiny tangled feet the way to walk?
 Ever near each slender shoulder, yet so feeble and so small,
 With her ready hands to hold her, when she's just about to fall.
 Shut your eyes and you can see in the baby's childhood days
 When the golden gleam of summer on her tangled tresses plays.
 And the mother, though grown older, still is near enough to call,
 With her ready hands to hold her, when she's just about to fall.
 Now the baby is a woman, and she's bending o'er a child,
 Where the spirit from the body of her gentle mother find.
 As the lifeless limbs grow colder, "Mother, Mother!" hear her call,
 But there are no hands to hold her, and she's just about to fall.
 Launched alone on life's rough ocean, she is drifting with the years,
 But the voyage is a lonely one, and sometimes through her tears
 She can seem to hear her mother, she can almost hear her call,
 And by faith she sees another hand to hold her should she fall.

Emerson Hunting Deer.
 In the August Century W. J. Stillman writes of "The Philosopher's Camp," a gathering of congenial spirits in the Adirondacks in 1858, among whom were Emerson, Lowell, Agassiz, Judge Hoar, Amos Binney and Mr. Stillman. The writer describes Emerson's attempt at deer slaying: "It was interesting to see how Emerson grew into the camp life. As at first he had refused to carry a rifle, and decided to take one only for uniformity, so in the early days of our forest residence he declined to take any part in the hunting or fishing; but we had not been long in the camp before he caught the temper of the occasion, and began to desire to kill his deer. Luck failed him in the drives in which he took part, the deer always coming in to some other watcher, and we decided to try night-hunting; i. e., stealing up to the deer as they browse in the pads along the shallow water, carrying in the bow of the boat a light which blinds the animal, the lantern throwing all its light forward and the hunter sitting invisible in the shadow. We took the best guide at the piddle, Emerson taking the firing-seat behind the lamp, and I in the middle with my rifle, ready in case he missed his shot.
 "There is something weird in silently gliding along a spectral diorama of irrecognizable landscape, with the rocks and trees slipping by like phantoms; for the motion of the boat is not disturbing, and the only sound is the occasional grating of the rashes on the bottom of the boat. It is in fact, the most exciting form of deer-hunting for certain temperaments, and the poet was strongly impressed. The practised ear of the guide soon caught the sound of the footfall of a deer making his way down to the shore, and he turned the glare of the lamp on the beach, moving directly on him till he was within twenty yards. The signal to fire was given and repeated, but Emerson could distinguish nothing. 'Shoot!' finally whispered the guide in the faintest breath. 'Shoot!' I repeated nearer. But the deer was invisible to him, and we drifted to a boat's length from him before the animal took flight, and bolted for the woods, undisturbed by a hasty shot I sent after him, and we heard his triumphant whistle and gallop dying away in the forest depths. Emerson was stupefied. We rounded the next point, and found a deer already on the feeding-ground, to repeat the experience. The deer stood broadside to him, in full view, in the shallow water; but, straining his vision to the utmost, he could distinguish nothing like a deer, and when we had got so near that the same result was imminent, I fired, and the buck fell dead. 'Well,' said Emerson, 'if that was a deer, I shall fire at the first square thing I see'; but we saw no more that night.
 "Each disappointment, however, plunged him more deeply into the excitement of the chase, and he was most anxious to kill his deer before he went home, unable to resist the contagion of the passion for it. He said to me one day, 'I must kill a deer before we go home, even if the guide has to hold him by the tail.' At that season of the year, when the deer are in their short coat, the body sinks at once if shot in the deep water; and on overtaking the quarry in the lake, if the deerslayer was not sure of his shot, the guide used to run the boat alongside of it, and catch it by the tail, when the shot became a sure one. As we hunted only when we needed the meat, we did not risk the loss of the deer, and when a poor shot held the gun, the quarry was caught by the tail and killed in this unsportsmanlike way. That survival of the earliest passion of the primitive man, the passion of the chase, overcame even the philosophic mind of Emerson, once exposed to the original influences, and he recognized his ancestral bent. Few of us who live an active life fail to be attracted by this first of all occupations of the yet uncivilized man. Emerson never had the gratification of his desire; the deer never came to him on the drive, and his repetition of the night-hunt was no more successful."

Outwitting a Shark.
 On board the good ship "Vincennes," during a cruise in the Pacific Ocean, a party of English and American officers were one day in the cabin talking cheerfully of the Cape and the cruise, when, as if by magic, every countenance changed. Spellbound for an instant, all sat intently listening. There was a strange commotion in the ship. Then came that noise of hurrying feet, unaccompanied by the voice of command, which, breaking the silence of a well-disciplined man-of-war, and echoing below, inspires a creeping fear of unknown evil. There were, too, half-suppressed exclamations of alarm, in which were caught ominously coupled words: "Shark!—Boy!" In a moment all were on deck. Glancing over the side rail, we saw in a rowboat moored to the end of the side boom, a few feet from the side, one of the ship's boys, a bright cheerful little fellow, standing erect, holding a boat-hook ready to strike. Gliding slowly toward him, scarcely rippling the surface of the water, through which its broad back could be plainly seen, was a great white shark—"man eater": such as in former days followed in the wakes of captured slavers, prizes to her Majesty's cruisers on the coast.
 The crew of the Vincennes stood aghast, powerless to aid. Some called to the boy to lie down in the boat; others shouted to him to pull away. But, wholly intent on the movements of the fearful creature, he did not hear them. We had not long to wait: the shark came on, raising its head out of the water, so that its sinister eyes could be seen. Pressing heavily on the wale of the boat, it bore down the side.
 We expected to see the boat roll over upon the shark, and held our breath. Down came the iron-pointed boat hook with all the force a boyish arm could give it. A blow, and then a quick thrust, and the light boat, buoyant as a feather, slipped out from under the shark's head and righted herself.
 It was a gallant sight, to see that sailor boy standing undaunted before what might indeed be called the jaws of death. Rapidly and well did he ply his weapon. The shark, nettled, drew back as if to take measure of the brave little fellow, preparatory to a final rush which should seal the boy's fate. In that perilous instant, cool and collected, seizing the boat-hook with the other, to ward off the shark's attack, the boy quickly drew the boat under the rope-ladder, and, springing up, climbed to the boom, along which he tripped lightly to the ship. —August St. Nicholas.

Care of the Bathroom.
 If you cannot keep your bathroom sweet by thorough flushing every day and by pouring hot soda-water, or dissolved copper through the pipes about once a week, there must be some serious trouble with the plumbing, and you should have it examined at once, writes Maria Parloa in the July Ladies' Home Journal. Sometimes the pipe in the kitchen sink is not kept perfectly free and sweet, or the closet in the basement is not properly flushed. If there be trouble anywhere in the wastepipes it will make itself known all over the house. Try having the pipe in the kitchen flushed twice a week with strong soda-water. It should be boiling hot. It will dissolve and carry off all the particles of grease that may be clinging to the pipe.
 The midsummer holiday number of The Century Magazine contains, in addition to articles on yachting and camping out, a number of papers relating to foreign travel and art, the opening one being a unique description of "Fiz, the Mecca of the Moors." A not less unusual feature is the second paper by Jonas Stalling, a Swede, who describes from personal investigation "The Famine in Eastern Russia." A third narrative of travel is furnished by a series of "Philips Brooks's Letters to Children." Japan is another region which is put under tribute to add to the interest of this number of The Century. A paper of strong personal interest in the group of papers relating to the Bonapartes deals with "The Prince and Princess Achille Murat in Florida," and gives a sketch of the attractive American lady who was the princess, and of her friendship with Louis Napoleon. The yachting article above referred to deals with "Cup Defenders Old and New," and thus strikes into the midst of current events in water sports. Particularly seasonable is the paper by Mr. W. J. Stillman entitled "The Philosopher's Camp," being a record of a summer outing in the Adirondacks in 1858 of a party including Emerson, Agassiz, Lowell, Dr. Jeffrey Wyman, and others, of whom Mr. Stillman was one. In the group of papers on matters relating to hygiene is an article on "Breathing Movements as a Cure," by Thomas J. Mays of Philadelphia. The fiction of the number, besides the continuation of "Benefit Forget," and the third part of Mrs. Catherine's "White Islander," includes two "Balcony Stories" by Miss Grace King—"One of Us" illustrated by Kenyon Cox, and "The Little Content Girl," with pictures by Steiner, the latter including a graphic description of a trip by steamboat down the Mississippi River. There is also a seasonable story by Miss Alice Brown, called "Farmer Eli's Vacation," and another, "Mr. Jones's Experiment," a society story by James S. Norton of Chicago. There is also a vivid short story, "The Redeptioner," a sketch of white slavery in the latter part of the eighteenth century, by Edward Eggleston. These enumerated are but samples of what The Century contains.

A Fruit Tart.
 A tart in great favor is an iced case of puff paste with a filling of marmalade and whipped cream. For the case roll a quarter-pound of puff paste to a thin sheet. Trim to a round with a pastry knife, and build a rim round the moistened edges with an inch strip of the paste. Slip the case on to a baking-sheet, prick the centre to deaden the paste, and bake in a quick oven, with more heat underneath than atop. When the case becomes cool brush the crisp rim and edges with a film of icing, ornament with a tracery of icing forced from a tracing-tube, dust with confectioner's sugar, and crust a pale fawn with the heat of a salamander.
 Spread the centre of the case with an inch-deep filling of translucent marmalade or jam of whichever fruit may be preferred. If the flavor of the fruit be insipid, flavor a part of peach marmalade with a table-spoonful of cream de noyau, or a pot of sweet-curry with maraschino, or a pot of apple with brandy flavoured with noyau or noyau with rose. If the more acid damson, cherry, raspberry, or gooseberry jams chance to be a trifle stiff, moisten with a half cup of fruit syrup or that drained from preserves.
 A few moments before serving garnish the tart with a whip of thick cream piled within the iced rim of the puff-paste case. —Harper's Bazaar.

My Irish Sweetheart
 Not skylark in the blue at morn,
 Nor blackbird in the green,
 Nor thrush from the dew-wet thorn
 Can match the voice I love;
 And love, with trust that will not fall
 Though time or sorrow, lies
 Beneath the blue-veined lids that veil
 My Irish sweetheart's eyes.
 To make her lips no rose is found,
 Her neck is white as foam.
 Her laughter has the joyous sound
 Of mountain rills at home;
 Through heart beneath her airy tread,
 Each day from the grass
 Will quickly lift its tender head
 To see her pass.
 And naught she knows of guile or wrong,
 More than the daisies do,
 But, oh! her faith is deep and strong,
 Her love for me is true;
 And longingly one prayer I frame—
 To breathe my native air,
 To see green Ulster's hills, and claim
 My Irish sweetheart there.
 "You say you wunst lived off'n the fat
 of the land," jeered Walkabout Beggs.
 "How'd ye eat it?" "Eat it with the forks of the road," responded Rusty Rufus.

MOTHERS!
 Castoria is recommended by physicians for children teething. It is a purely vegetable preparation, its ingredients are published around each bottle. It is pleasant to the taste and absolutely harmless. It relieves constipation, regulates the bowels, quiets pain, cures diarrhoea and wind colic, allays feverishness, destroys worms, and prevents convulsions—soothes the child and gives it refreshing and natural sleep. Mother's friend, the children's panacea—the author's friend. 35 doses, 35 cents. 1y43

Wide Awake.
 THE MIDSUMMER AND FAREWELL NUMBER.
 The Midsummer number of this delightful magazine is much larger than usual—containing 150 pages of reading matter. Perhaps the "Story of Wide Awake," may be considered the leading article of the number. It is a graphic account of the magazine, from its very beginning to the present time. A fine frontispiece portrait of the late Daniel Lothrop, founder of Wide Awake, most fittingly opens this farewell number. Among the more notable stories and articles may be mentioned "A Race for Life," by John Willis Hays, a thrilling Indian tale; "The North Chamber," by Louisa T. Craig, and "The Thrilling Story of Capt. Norman," by Charles R. Talbot; "Concord Dramatics," by George B. Bartlett, will interest all lovers of Louisa Alcott's "Little Women" stories. With this great Midsummer issue, Wide Awake ceases to be a separate publication, and bids farewell to its thousands of readers. This new departure is explained in the article "The Story of Wide Awake." The D. Lothrop Company have made arrangements to merge Wide Awake into St. Nicholas. The extension of their great business as book publishers has made this arrangement, especially in view of their pleasant relations with the Century Company, a desirable one. The price of this number is 20 cents. For sale at news stands; or mailed by D. Lothrop Company, Boston, on receipt of price.

People entertaining at their country homes will welcome with delight the full and accurate description of the receiving and entertaining of a household of guests which Mrs. Burton Kingsland gives in a practical article on "Entertaining in the Country," in the August Ladies' Home Journal. The magazine is made still for their interesting because of the publication of the music and words of the beautiful song "My Star," by Kate Llewellyn Fitch—one of the famous Journal prize-compositions for the encouragement of American musical composition. A full-page poem by Madeline S. Bridges, illustrated by Frank O. Small, entitled "The Docks at night," is followed by an illustrated sketch of "A Niece of Robert Burns," the only near surviving relative of the poor Mrs. Hamilton Mott contributes a valuable article on "Sending a girl to Boarding School," replete with information on every point connected with boarding-school life. Younger mothers will find Doctor Powell's timely article on "Children at the Seashore," and Miss Scoville's on "Children in the Country," full of seasonable and useful suggestions on the care of their little ones during the summer outing. Children of a larger growth are remembered in a daintily illustrated paper entitled "Dressing a Growing Girl," Palmer Cox with his inimitable "Brownies." Eben E. Rexford with his valuable "Midsummer in the Garden," Margaret Sims with a page of "Designs in Mould Crochet," Miss Parloa in "Everything about the House," and Miss Hooper in "Home Dressmaking," all contribute to make this August Journal, The Ladies' Home Journal, is sold by The Curtis Publishing Company, of Philadelphia, for Ten Cents per number or One Dollar per year.

Grand Trunk R'y Excursion to Portland and St. Andrews, N. B., on the 28th and 29th. Return tickets to Portland at $6, St. Andrews $10. For particulars and tickets apply to S. B. Humphrey, Ticket and Passenger Agent, Coaticook.

The farm of Mrs. Elton Paige in Barnston has been sold to a Mr. McKnight. Price $600.

Mrs. Harris is making improvements to her buildings in the way of an addition to her barn.

Messrs W. Dupont and Ed Perrault of Manchester, N. H., were in town this week the guests of Mr. J. E. Morin.

The fire on Wednesday morning burnt off the Telephone cable on Main Street cutting off that part of the service.

On Wednesday and Thursday evenings of this week Coaticook was favored with entertainments by the African Choir.

The band in connection with the Bohemian Glass Blowers has been giving entertainments in Stanstead during the fair this week.

Mr. J. E. Morin of Manchester, N. H. has been spending his vacation in town and intends returning to-morrow to his business in the Paris Store.

Mr. C. G. Johnson has returned from a trip through Lewiston, Portland, Boston, and other parts of New England where he has been spending his holidays.

Mr. J. A. V. Michon, formerly of the Observer, who has been spending his holidays in Coaticook, returned yesterday to Three Rivers, Mass., where he is engaged in the dry goods business.

Last Wednesday morning about one o'clock fire broke out in the Millinery shop on Main Street, occupied by Mrs. A. Hanou. The store and dwelling belonging to L. H. Jenks were a total loss. The fire engine was on time and did very effectual work as may be seen by the ruins that are now standing. The buildings were gutted and being of wood it threatened to prove a very disastrous fire and had it not been for the work of the firemen it would have been impossible to save the buildings in the immediate vicinity.

The Bohemian Glass Blowers, under the auspices of the band, have been giving entertainments every evening of last week. On account of the rainy weather the attendance was not so large during the middle of the week as was expected but all who attended were well satisfied. Numerous presents were given away each evening and everybody seemed anxious to obtain some specimen of their work. The prizes to the most popular overseer in town was decided by voting as advertised and consisted of a case of fancy glass work valued at $50. Mr. Harry Smith won this with a majority of some 500 votes over any other overseer in the contest. Their wax figures representing important personages were very true to life and added much to the attraction of the show.

Flodden.

The frost which we had on Monday morning, 14th inst, did considerable damage in some low places; we have heard of one man who had five acres of buckwheat destroyed that night and several others who did not fare so bad as the first mentioned. Friday and Saturday it rained nearly all the time. The I. O. of Foresters Picnic at Eastman was not as successful as could be desired owing to the bad state of the weather; however over 100 excursionists left Kingsbury on the O. M. R., the crowd increasing in number at every station and siding along the whole route. Among the excursionists were the members of the New Rockland Brass Band and I. O. F. of Court Rockland No 146, also visiting brethren from Court Myrtle, No. 5, of Richmond, many of them accompanied with their wives and children, there were also visiting brethren from Lawrenceville. Many of the young men availed themselves of the cheap trip and had the fairer ones by their sides in a goodly number. It may be said of the people at Eastman that they did everything in their power to entertain the visitors; they sent their brass band to Kingsbury to accompany the New Rockland band and we had plenty of good music on our way out. Our thanks are due to Mr. Phelps, Captain Ward and others whose names we were not able to ascertain for the courteous manner in which they treated each and every one. We were shown all the public places and places of interest, such as town hall, the great saw mill, kindling wood factory and the C. P. R. trestle, which is 3,700 feet in length and nearly 60 feet in height. It was a goodly sight to see trains passing over nearly every hour of the day. Mr. Phelps kindly showed group after group through his mills and the different kinds of machinery, also his hand saw cutting off a solid block of birch 12 inches in diameter in less than 1/2 of a minute with one horse. It may be said that the High Chief Ranger of the Province of Quebec was present, Peter Strathern, Esq. Every one went home well pleased with the trip and the kind treatment which they received from the Eastman people. William McLean from the Black Hills is visiting friends here and in New Rockland. He has been absent from here for over thirteen years. Mr. Cameron, of Leeds is the guest of John G. Ewing of this place. Our school is to commence soon with Miss Elina Staiker as teacher. Miss Maria M. McLean, formerly of this place was united in marriage to Mr. Ernest A. Boynton Esq., of Lebanon, N. H. We wish them success in life.

The Stanstead Co., Live Stock Association Fair at Stanstead this week was largely attended and proved very successful. There is no excuse for any man to appear in society with a grizzly beard since the introduction of Buckingham's Dye, which colors a natural brown or black.

THE LUMBER TRADE.

(From our Boston Correspondent.) Boston, Mass., Aug. 19th, 1893.

As there has been no noticeable change in the lumber market since last week, I send you the following on the financial outlook.

In the first place I think times would not be near so bad as they have got to be, if the papers had not made so much about the tightness of money.

Congress has managed to drag itself through two weeks of tedious debate; although it has not been absolutely useless they seem to be no nearer to solving the question than when Congress was called. The repealers are bound to let the silver men have all their say, so that there will be no chance for them to accuse them that the repeal of the Sherman law was railroaded through Congress.

The repeal senators on the committee are anxious that a bill for the unconditional repeal of the purchase clause shall be reported to the senate without delay, and joined with them are the republican senators.

The silverites policy from the start has been one of delay. They have clung to the hope that by some mischance there might be a possibility of defeating the repeal bill. If this happened their position would be much stronger. However they do not seem to be very confident in this, their principal reason for delay being the natural reaction which they believe is bound to follow after so long a period of financial depression.

During the past two or three weeks millions of dollars have come to this country from Europe, and this is one argument of which the silver men have made the most they can.

A. W. WESTBY.

Stanstead.

The following is taken from the Boston Herald. Mr. Cowles is a former Stanstead boy and well known throughout the Townships:

"Eugene Cowles will leave the Bostonians at the close of the present engagement in New York and will sail for Europe to study under Italian teachers after appearing on the concert stage in London. Mr. Cowles' friends have often told him that his magnificent bass voice ought to be utilized in grand opera, and it is thought likely that he will study with that end in view. He has been with the Bostonians for five years."

Mr. Cowles' Little Joke.

The following story is now going the rounds of the American press:

"Mr. Eugene Cowles, the Bostonians' famous basso is a Canadian, a product of Compton. Mr. Palmer Cox, the 'Brownie' man, spends his summers at Granby, another Canadian town, and the other day invited Mr. Cowles to visit him.

On his arrival he found the village in high musical excitement over the production of a cantata, and Mr. Cox persuaded the basso to stay over and see the fun. The conductor was a recently-imported English curate, with advanced ideas with regard to music and himself. Palmer Cox introduced Mr. Cowles to the curate as a man who could croak a little bit on occasions and was invited to take part in the performance, the curate remarking parenthetically, 'Your figure would lend such an air of distinction to the front row.' The famous basso assured the curate that it had always been the dream of his life to sing in public.

"Very well, then, Mr. Cowles, you will consider yourself engaged, won't you? The cantata music is a little difficult, perhaps you won't be able to pick it up at such short notice, but I dare say you will be able to follow all right." Mr. Cowles said he would do his best.

On the following evening he enjoyed the unique sensation of hearing the song that he himself had made famous, 'The Jet Black Crow,' sung exuberantly by Granby's star bass, whilst he modestly joined in the chorus. The next morning at the railway station Cowles encountered the curate again.

"I should like to have a word with you, Mr. Cowles," said the curate. "With a little care and training I really think you might accomplish something. Now, your friend, Mr. Cox, tells me that you're throwing yourself away in that little farm at Compton. That's a pity, a great pity. With your voice, if you will pardon me saying so, you should be more ambitious, Mr. Cowles."

"Now, I want to make a proposition to you. I have a friend in Montreal who teaches singing, really first class, you know. If you will consent, I think—I say, I think, because one can never be sure of these things—I think I could get you a position in one of the church choirs. And some of the singers in Montreal, you know, get paid as high as $200 a year."
