Pontiac Women's Institutes Hold Semi-Annual Meeting

With representatives present from the branches at Beechgrove, Elmside, Clarendon, Shawville, Stark's Corners and Wyman, the semi-annual meeting of Women's Institutes of Pontiac County was held in the Sunday School rooms of the United Church, Shawville, on Wednesday, October 11. The county president, Mrs. W. J. Murray, presided and guided the deliberations of the meeting.

Reports of the tea room and of the W.I. exhibits at the Shawville Fair were given, and it was decided to carry on the same at next year's fair. Home-grown garden products and woollen articles will comprise the Women's Institute exhibits.

Copies of the booklet prepared from the paper written by Dr. Powles on "Vaccines and Serums" were displayed, the same now being ready for distribution. Provincial conveners' outlines were read and plans made for carrying them out. The president asked for more loyal support of the Women's Institute paper, "Home and Country".

At the noon hour, a bountiful luncheon was served by the members of the Shawville branch, the pastor of the church, Rev. A. F. Fokes, with Mrs. Fokes being present. At the close, Mr. Fokes made a short address, congratulating the members on the splendid work they were doing and wishing them continued success. Reply was made by Mrs. Murray.

Mention was made of the Life Membership given to Miss S. J. Armstrong and of the honor this is to her and the county, in that this was the first one to be taken out in Canada.

After lunch the woollen mills were visited, much interest being shown in the work of preparing wool for use.

All did ample justice to the bountiful luncheon and tea served by the members of the Shawville branch. A vote of thanks was given them for their hospitality, to the trustees for the use of the church and to Mr. Cowan for publicity.

Former Resident Dies at Ramsayville, Ont.

One of the oldest and best-known residents of Bristol, Que., until she left a few years ago to make her home at Shawville, Mrs. Charlotte Cameron Alexander, widow of Andrew Alexander, who farmed for many years in the Bristol district, died suddenly Saturday morning at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Harry Scharf, Ramsayville, Ont. She was in her eighty-fourth year.

Mrs. Alexander had been spending a month with her daughter and was stricken with a heart attack, from which she failed to rally, owing to her advanced age. Born in Portage du Fort, Que., the late Mrs. Alexander was educated in the local schools, and when she married, moved with her husband to Bristol, Que. After his death she took up residence in Shawville. Before she came to visit Mrs. Scharf she had been spending the summer with another daughter, Mrs. Richard Armitage, of Onslow Corners, Que. Three other daughters survive, Mrs. Albert Armitage, Smiths Falls, Ont.; Mrs. James B. Kirker, Pulaski, N. Y., and Mrs. (Rev.) J. C. Black, Assouat, Egypt, wife of a minister of the Holiness Movement Church, stationed there.

All her life Mrs. Alexander had been a devout member of the Holiness Movement Church.

The remains were brought to Shawville by Monday evening's train and the funeral took place from the Undertaking Parlors of W. J. Hayes & Son, on Tuesday morning to the Holiness Movement Church and Maple Grove Cemetery.

To Encourage Marriages

To encourage marriages of poor couples the Fascist party in Italy is offering $80 each to 200 couples who cannot marry for lack of funds. True, this isn't a very munificent sum on which to start in double harness, but the grandparents of many of us have done it on less. — Ctrford Beacon-Herald.

For Single Men

Well-conducted camps appear to be the best way of meeting one phase of the unemployment problem. — Regina Leader-Post.

Things in the Papers

The extraordinary thing—which is almost the most ordinary thing in a newspaper's experience—is that it is the same sort of people who commonly want to get certain things into the paper who also want to keep certain other things out. The mark of the species is that the things they want to keep out are almost invariably news by the most honest and intelligent definition and the things they want to get in or not. In both instances they assume to be censors; in both instances they can never be persuaded—and very often they are quite decent citizens—their censorship in the long run is an utterly futile and self-defeating thing. — Vancouver Province.

Great Britain's Improvement

Hardships don't kill people. Great Britain is healthier to-day than it has been for years and the death rate has decreased in districts hit hardest by the depression. — Lindsay Post.

Small Bills

One thing about the depression, it tends to reduce superstition. Not nearly so many people will still consider a two-dollar bill unlucky. — Woodstock Sentinel-Review.

A Great Shock

Chicago man died of a heart attack as he was parking his auto. Probably the shock of finding a parking space within four blocks of his destination. — Winnipeg Tribune.

Unmarked Victories

An impressive granite monument was recently erected at Fort Erie, Ont., to mark the earliest trading post and also the capture of two United States ships of war during the war of 1812. Ontario has numerous sites on which victories over invaders from the south are marked. New Brunswick also possesses them, but with the exception of Fort Cumberland or Beauséjour, none is marked. Some six miles west of Fredericton on the site of what once was the Indian village of Aukpak, a rebel American force, under John Allen, was captured, and at Manawagonish, west of Saint John, a similar rebel defeat occurred. Neither is in any way marked. — Fredericton Gleaner.

Use For Small Spuds

Potatoes are not a good crop in this community. Half the crop is too small for table use. Farmers who have potatoes to sell would be helping themselves by grading them. One of these days, someone will bring in a carload from the Maritimes, and the grocers here will find trouble in selling their little or mixed stock. Half of the small potatoes is lost in peeling. The Irish people find little potatoes good food for little pigs, and their bacon is graded on the best bacon market in the world three points higher than the Canadian bacon which is made from hogs fattened on good corn, which is counted the best ration in the world for fattening hogs. — Port Rowan News.

Up to the Motoring Public

Just as long as the general public continues to smile at stories of excessive speed; to feel that traffic laws are for the other fellow, and that it is all right to break them as long as you don't get caught; to hold the opinion that any action, walking or driving, is permissible so long as one is able to get away with it; for just that period will motor vehicle accidents continue to be menace. When every driver and every pedestrian realizes that safety comes ahead of schedules, ahead of personal rights; that safety comes ahead of everything else, then we may expect a reduction in the waste of life, health, and property through accidents, to be brought about. — Ontario Motor Vehicles Branch.

In Middle Ages

We are told women used to paint their faces in the Middle Ages. They still paint their faces in the middle ages. — Ottawa Journal.

Thrifty

They must have a thrifty bunch of councillors in Pennbrook, Pennsylvania. Hitherto a curfew bell had been sounded there to clear the streets of children, but in order to save 15 cents a day the fire hall bell will now be used for the job. The final signal will be for lights out instead of fire out. — Brantford Expositor.

Help For the Potato-Grower

Two years ago, when the potato-growers of this Province were receiving as little as ten cents a barrel for their product, they were contributing their share to ensure the orderly marketing of wheat. If it is fair to support wheat even to the extent of the Dominion Government becoming a partner in the business, then it is equally fair that the potato-grower demand be favourably listened to. They are asking less than the wheat-growers are getting. With the example of the West so strikingly before us, in which millions of dollars have been risked to support the price of wheat, there should be no modesty in New Brunswick in demanding similar treatment for the potato-growers of this Province. — Saint John Telegraph-Journal.

THE EMPIRE

British Films to the Fore

When a Berlin butcher attends an American movie and beholds Greta Garbo as Mata Hari making love in guttural English with a Swedish accent to an oily Latin impersonating a Russian officer, he suddenly remembers the League of Nations and the abomination of Versailles, hastens from the theatre and never is seen again. Foreign customers all over the world have been hastening for five years now, and the end is not yet in sight. . . . The sound revolution in America gave struggling European producers the breathing spell which they so sorely need. That they have taken full advantage of it is evidenced by the fact that of the five major world studios showing profits during the last year, three were in Europe—Ufa, Gaumont-British and British International. German pictures are gaining on the Continent in almost direct ratio to the decline of American prestige. British companies are making heavy inroads in the Colonies, the French have gained ground in Middle Europe, and the Russians, of course, have their market all to themselves. It is safe to say that within two years foreign films—notably British—will be offering spirited competition in Hollywood's back yard. — Mr. Dalton Trumbo, in The North American Review.

World Conference and British Commonwealth

The Conference served further to consolidate the British Commonwealth and likewise the sterling bloc. The sterling bloc is more favourably situated than when the Conference opened, for it is now definitely in a position to hold the balance of power between the old gold standard and the dollar. In other words, London is once more the centre of the world's commercial and monetary gravity. — Johannesburg Sunday Times.

Gold Standard and Sterling Bloc

Britain has been driven by the failure of the Conference to establish a so-called sterling bloc. Its object is to ensure at least a measure of monetary sanity and economic co-operation. Britain will make things as easy as she can for the gold countries, since for various reasons she wishes them to remain on gold. It is, however, doubtful whether Holland, Belgium and Switzerland, or even France, will be able to hold out indefinitely. — Cape Argus.

The Indian Cultivator

The thriftlessness of the average Indian cultivator is perhaps the most obstinate trait in his character standing in the way of individual as well as collective progress. For this reason, the adoption of better methods of cultivation, the purchase of new types of agricultural implements, improved and better cattle require a capital outlay generally beyond his capacity. — Bombay Times of India.

Empire Migration

A stimulating breath of the practical Imperial spirit comes from the manifesto of the Empire Trade League, which proposes overseas community settlement under chartered companies or other auspices, such "colonizing adventures" being regarded as a long-range plan for the future. Among the signatories are prominent men whose Empire-building doctrine is in sharp contrast with the present official policy of quotas, restriction of output and like measures which would end the migration of British people to British dominions, stop expansion, render it more and more difficult for the Dominions to pay their debts and make more or less static the Empire market for the manufactures of the Motherland. — Auckland Weekly News.

THE UNITED STATES

Refunding Britain's Debt

The British Government scrupulously observed the terms of its contract until last June. Even then it made a payment on account. It has maintained this record in the face of peculiarly difficult financial conditions. No official request for revision came until it was plain to all thinking people on both sides of the Atlantic that the original debt pact no longer rested on a fair basis. The honour which the British exhibited in keeping the letter of the contract long after it became evident that common justice required its revision should now be matched by equal honour on our part in giving them a fresh contract that will be equitable in the light of a greatly altered economic situation. — Providence Journal.

Farmhouse Fires

Being Investigated

Hamilton.—Authorities are pressing investigation into 11 fires of suspicious origin which were discovered in the frame farmhouse of John Prowse, Fiddler's Green, and were extinguished before they got beyond control.

First of the fires was discovered by 14-year-old Edwin Prowse, half-brother of the owner of the house. The blaze was emanating from a pile of oil-soaked rags in an unoccupied section of the building. The fire department was notified and the flames were soon extinguished.

As the fire engines turned to leave the house other fires were discovered in a part of the house used by Philip Vipond of Ancaster for the storage of furniture.

Fire continued to break out during the day and the fire engines were called back three times to the dwelling. Most of the blazes were found to be in bundles of oil rags.

N.B. Paper Company To Increase Wages

Saint John.—All employees of the Port Royal Pulp and Paper Company, Limited, will receive a salary increase of 10 per cent starting on October 15. "Steadily improved business conditions led us to make the decision of raising wages," an official of the company said.

The plant started out with a crew of 140 men last November and now employs 200 on three eight-hour shifts.

Shilling Bible Result Of Gift From Dominion

London.—The British and Foreign Bible Society has sold more than 1,000,000 copies of a shilling Bible first issued "owing to the generous gift of Canada in celebration of the society's 125th birthday."

The Bible is still the world's best seller. Last year 10,000,000 volumes in 667 languages were sold.

Rural Courier For Twenty Years

Alfred Thompson Retires After Long Service on No. One Route

Twenty years of service over the same rural mail route terminated with the retirement of the contractor for rural mail route No. 1, in the person of Alfred Thompson.

Mr. Thompson estimates that he has travelled approximately 125,000 miles in mail delivery alone in the score of years. Members of the post office staff took advantage of the occasion to present to the retiring member a handsome easy chair and illuminated address.

William B. Skinner, who resides on the 2nd Concession, of Blandford, succeeds Mr. Thompson as contractor.

Calgary Families Plan Co-operative Village

Calgary, Alta.—An experiment in establishing a co-operative community along the line of the small co-operative villages in Europe, will be tested out in Alberta.

Eleven families with 15 children are intending to form such a community provided the provincial government will grant them land for the purpose.

The Calgary City Council has agreed to supply to these unemployed families relief grants for a year. Their rent allowance which the city of Calgary has been paying will be applied to the purchase of lumber and building materials.

The fathers of the 11 families are experts in a number of trades including carpentry and poultry raising, and they will exchange their services in establishing the co-operative community. The wives will be just as active as their men folk in furthering the community plan and will help each other with dressmaking, light gardening, canning, pickling and other household accomplishments.

Britons Spending Much More Money

London.—The marked recovery in British business continues to be attested by reports from all quarters of commerce and industry. The statistics published by the Association of Retail Distributors show that retail sales for August increased in their total value for the first time since 1931. Sales of men's wear were up 11.7 per cent, hardware 11.6 and household piecegoods 3.8 per cent.

Commenting on these figures, the Financial Times says it is evident that there has been a decided upturn in the purchasing power of the people with increased railway traffic as an acceptable sign that money is being spent. For the last nine weeks the total revenues of the British railways have registered a gain of approximately $5,280,000 over the same period of 1932.

Eats Bear Meat With The Bear's Own Teeth

Los Angeles.—Here's one told by Ross Moulton, of Vancouver, B.C., here for the International Sour-Dough reunion.

"With two friends, Happy Jack and Bill the Horse, I set out from Circle City into the Yukon country. Jack broke his false teeth.

"Well, Sir, that same day Bill the Horse shot a bear. We skinned the bear and cemented its teeth into his plate with copper rivets. Then he helped eat bear meat with the bear's own teeth. So help me, it's true."

N.Y. Woman Nominated For Nobel Prize

New York.—Congratulations are pouring in upon Mrs. Donald Carr, or Blanche Shoemaker Wagstaff as she is known to admirers of her poetry, for the signal honor accorded her in her nomination for the Nobel prize for literature by the Swedish critic, Victor Soderberg.

Mr. Soderberg first met Mrs. Carr upon a visit to the United States several years ago with a group of foreign golfers, when she was doing book reviews for a golf magazine. He became so interested in her work, particularly "Mortality," and the verses included in the volume published under that title, that he asked permission to translate it into Swedish upon his return to Europe, where it has had a wide circulation.

The poem "Mortality" is perhaps the best known of her work. The inspiration came to her suddenly and it was composed in six minutes. It came in for wide notice not long ago, when it was found after his execution among the belongings of a convict, to whom the credit of authorship was given until the error was discovered.

Canadian Girl Sees Queen at Close Range

Toronto.—"I wonder what one would do if one stepped on the Queen's foot."

That is the question still puzzling Jessica Jarvis Toronto aviatrix, recently returned from Europe. Although she didn't quite step on the toes of her Majesty, she narrowly missed them.

When paying a bill in a London book-shop the clerk said to Miss Jarvis: "Don't turn about immediately, the Queen is just behind you." "After a 'sweet' interval," Jessica Jarvis said, "I turned around and saw the Queen, looking at a book. After the first surprise nobody paid any more attention.

"I shopped around after looking at some things, turned suddenly to find the Queen was beside me and I had narrowly missed stepping on her toes."

Deputy Minister Made Indian Chief

Brantford.—Ontario's Deputy Minister of Agriculture, J. B. Fairbairn, is now "Chief Handsome River." That is the interpretation of the name — Ga Yoon He Yo — by which he will be known henceforth to the Six Nations Indians on the reserve here.

The honor of chieftainship was conferred on Mr. Fairbairn, F. P. Sandrell of St. Catharines, and Charles Byrd of Hamilton at the Six Nations Fair at Ohsweken. In the ancient ritualistic manner, Indians in war paint and feathers performed the war dances while the ceremonies were in progress.

The conferring of the chieftainships marked the closing day of the fair, which this year has attracted record numbers of visitors.

Beauty Hints Are Offered Men at Women's Exposition

New York.—The men got some beauty hints here at the exposition of Women's Arts and Industries.

"The Beauty a sensible person looks for in a man," Miss Florence E. Wall, Fellow of the American Institute of Chemists, said, "means good physical development, good health—and above all, radiant cleanliness."

Some things she recommended were: Good cleansing cream instead of water for the dry skin; a mild, low-alcohol tonic lotion for after-shaving; and finally a lightweight face powder in a natural shade—"not the marshmallow white or baby-doll pink."

"Correction of the oily condition is not an effeminate move," she said. "Rather it is true altruism. Use good skin spars for daily cleansing—even tincture of green soap; alcoholic lotions for after shaving, and in severe cases a recognized astringent lotion."

"Good Colour" For Fruits

"Good Color" for fruits other than apples as laid down by the Fruit Act, means color, characteristic of variety when mature. For apples "good color" means, as defined by Circular 40 of the Fruit Branch, Dominion Department of Agriculture. In this circular, percentages of color are laid down for each grade of each variety of apple. For instance, McIntosh No. 1, 65 per cent.; Winesap, "Domestic," 25 per cent.; Gravenstein (red), 40 per cent.; and so on. These percentages of color refer to the area of the surface which must be covered with a clear shade of red, characteristic of the variety. That is, 25 per cent. means that one-quarter of the surface of each apple is covered with normal mature color.

Winters Up to 1937 Colder Say Engineers

Chicago.—Gas company engineers are out to back the Canadian trappers and other weather sages with a prediction that this coming Winter is going to be colder than last but not especially severe. Trappers predict by the fur on their foxes, or how thick muskrats build their houses, but gas engineers look at heating bills for the last 50 years, and see what the trend is. And they predict on a big scale. Every Winter up to 1937, they announced, would be "generally colder."

Three Sisters In A Triple Wedding

Dressed Alike, They Act as Attendance for Each Other

Bridgeport, Conn.—Three sisters, Florence, Loretta and Jessie Whelan, recently became brides in a triple wedding at St. Charles Church.

The sisters, dressed identically and acting in turn as attendants for one another, were married to Victor Coburn of Bridgeport, Edward Wells of Great Barrington, Mass., and Joseph Gilmartin of Bridgeport. The triple ceremony was performed by the Rev. Joseph McCarthy.

The members of the bridal party left together from the home of John W. Whelan, father of the brides. When they reached the church, a crowd estimated at 1,500 persons had gathered.

Each carrying old-fashioned nose-gays, the brides were dressed in frocks of white faille with matching veiled turbans, white pumps and white elbow-length gloves.

All three couples will make a wedding trip to Washington before returning to their homes.

Would-be Crook Loses His Nerve

Vancouver.—A would-be swindler's groundless panic lost him $5,000, according to a police report.

The man, whose name is not given, opened an account in a local bank by depositing a certified cheque for $18,000 drawn on a Calgary bank.

The next day he deposited a cheque for $412 drawn on a New Westminster bank, but came back about noon to withdraw $8,000. His cheque was initiated, but when the teller started to pay in small bills, he asked for larger ones. The teller went to the safe and at that moment the bank doors were closed for the day.

The man, apparently thinking he was about to be detained, rushed for an exit and tugged so violently that a bolt was forced. He fled down Hastings street and is still being sought.

A cheque revealed the New Westminster cheque was counterfeit and police at Calgary have been asked to investigate the other.

Mouse in Bottle Causes Woman to Seek Damages

Chicago.—A mouse in the bottle is worth two in the cupboard to Mrs. Iva Gousha.

She found one deceased mouse in a bottle of pop, and alleged the following results:

A severe nervous shock.

A recuperative spell in a sanitarium.

A trip to Europe, during which she found it necessary to place her daughter in a private school.

All of which being expensive, Mrs. Gousha filed suit against the bottling company demanding $35,000 damages. Judge Joseph B. Davis suggested the company pay her $1.00. The bottlers said they had already offered $1,500, which she rejected.

The court gave opposing counsel until October 10 to agree.

First Lumberjacks Leave for Sudbury

Toronto.—The first contingent of lumberjacks to be sent from Toronto to the Northland in more than two years is now on the way to timber properties near Sudbury. The group numbers 25. They will be paid $26 to $28 a month and board.

The employment lists were closed 10 minutes after their opening, said J. F. Marsh, superintendent of the Federal Employment Service's Toronto office. He believed further orders would probably come in, as the available supply of workers around Sudbury had been employed already. At one time it was common to send 2,000 or 3,000 bush workers north from Toronto in a season.

Mr. Marsh reported increased demand for workers in other lines. He has just sent a crew of 30 to the celery fields around Brockville.

Father Is Witness of Son's Horrible Death

A despatch from Clarksburg, Ont., says: "While his father and two fellow workmen looked on horrified, Victor Marritt, 32, was killed instantly when he stumbled and fell on a circular saw which practically cut his body in two. The accident occurred at the Clendenan shingle mill where Marritt and his father were both employed. Victor was operating the saw when a cedar slab became jammed in the movable frame. In attempting to dislodge the piece of wood he lost his balance and fell across the unguarded machine-operated saw."

B.C. Co-Eds Desire Real Education

Vancouver.—Miss M. L. Bollert, dean of women at the University of British Columbia, believes 90 per cent. of the co-eds go there for an education. She doesn't think their primary object is a pleasant social life.

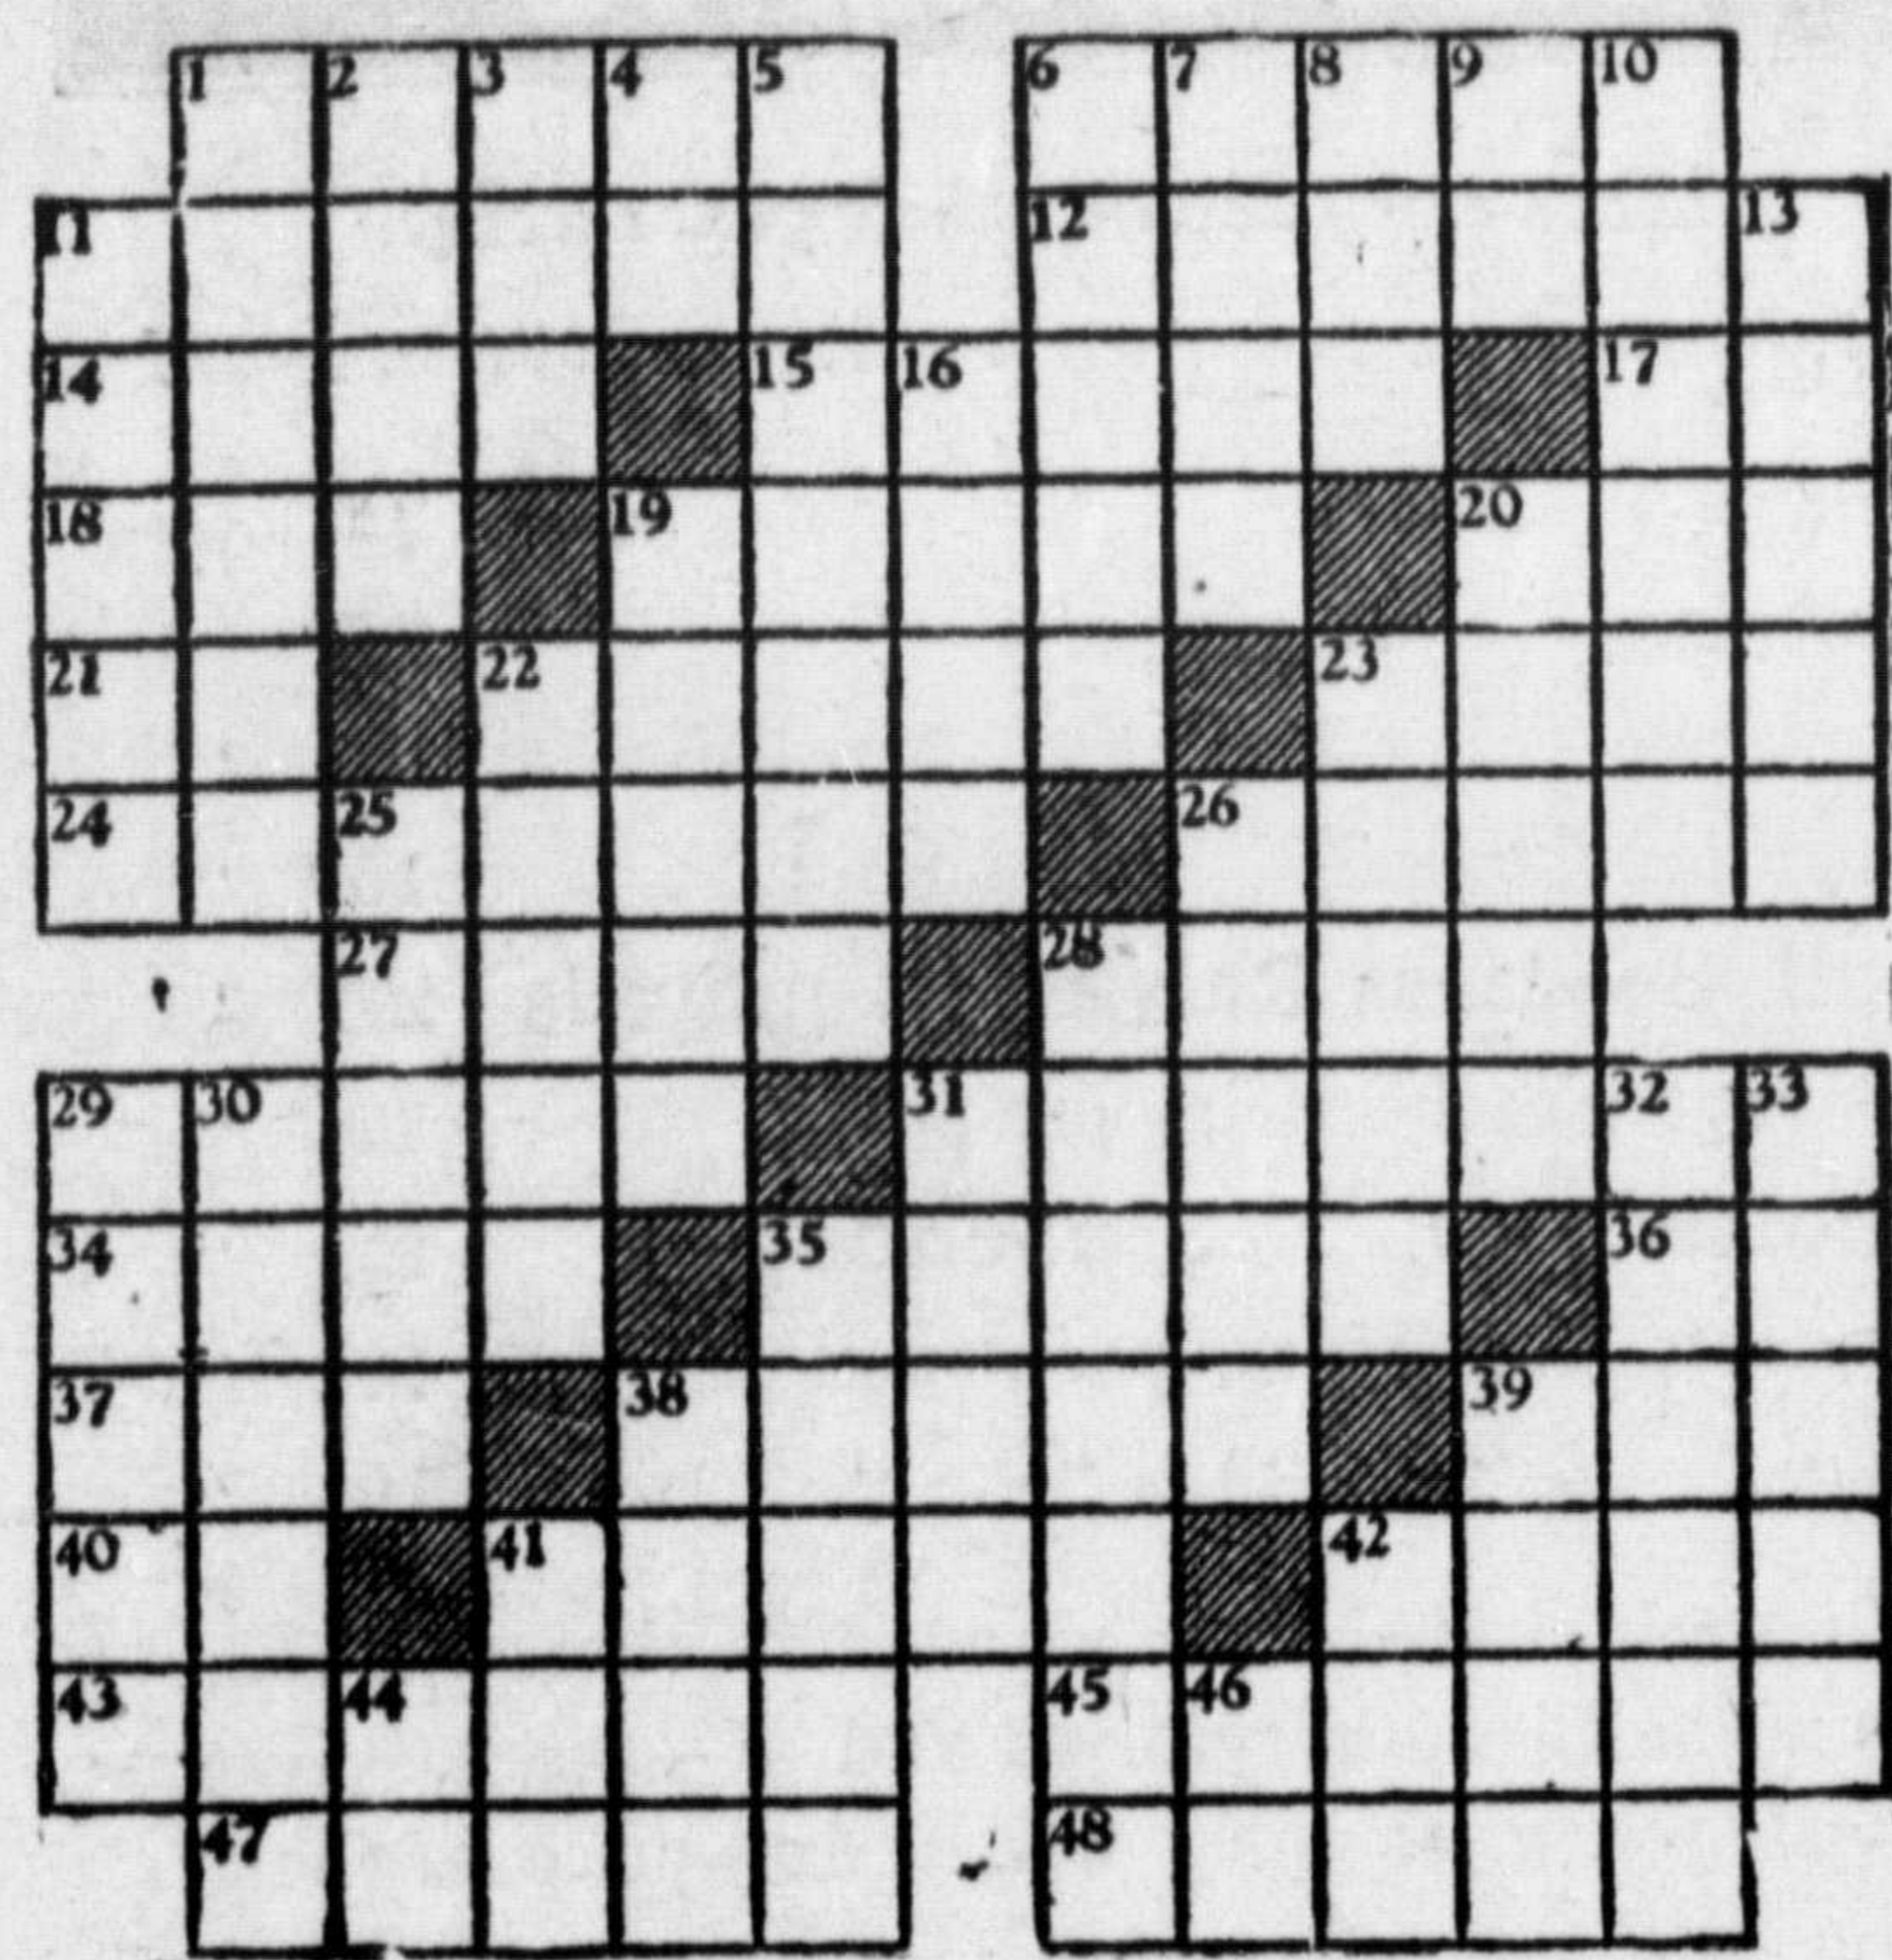

Some of them are prepared to do housework, even such tasks as dish washing, in order to pay tuition expenses, she said.

Curious News Notes

New York.—Mrs. Warren has quarrelled with the local authority in a New York suburb because they have decreed that as her house is in the residential zone she cannot use it for business premises.

She replied by advertising for artists and architects to make her house the ugliest building in the world.

A start has been made by painting the house with jazz designs of pink, blue, green and purple.

From the front windows Mrs. Warren has run a network of clothes lines on which she exposes an array of old-fashioned underwear in all the colors of the rainbow.

This is a true fish story. John Anderson, a Glasgow holiday-maker at Kinghorn, Fife, felt something solid between his bathing suit and his skin. He investigated. The something was a sole weighing 1 lb.

A cow caused a girl to be electrocuted at Speokkorn, Germany. She was leading the animal when it became restive and plunged into an electric power standard. There was a flash, and the girl and the cow were killed.

In Johannesburg a crocodile has committed suicide.

When the cold weather made the zoo officials noticed that Jeanette, the favorite crocodile, became morose and restive.

They pampered her, covered her with blankets, and applied hot-water bottles.

MOTHER OF 13 WITHOUT A WRINKLE

What a rarity!—a woman with a large family and an unlined face. Read this letter she has written:—

"I am a woman of 50, have a family of 13 children, and have not a wrinkle on my face. Some time ago I passed through a very severe illness, and resolved to try Kruschen Salts, and am a new woman since taking them. I have taken Kruschen for twelve months—not a small dose, but half-teaspoonful every morning in a cup of hot water. I think Kruschen gives you a feeling of buoyancy and youth that nothing else does."—(Mrs.) E. T.

Many minor illnesses, depression and worry—which are the chief causes of wrinkles—are frequently due to the presence in the system of poisons bred by the waste products of digestion. These poisons are the root cause of rheumatism, headaches, kidney trouble and other complaints, which make people old before their time. It is the un-failing effect of Kruschen Salts to expel these poisons and keep the bloodstream pure. And a rich supply of pure, vigorous blood is the secret of youthful vitality—millions of men and women have already proved that.

An engine of only one-horse power, if kept running all the time, is more effective than one of several hundred horsepower standing still.

From the Waste Basket

Many a girl takes a 1/4 carat husband to get a 2-carat ring. You have to season your own soup; nobody can do it to your taste; but be careful and not use too much pepper. There are styles in love making too—and this seems to be the era of long kisses and short romances. Maybe it was the man who married for money who first said: "It is the woman who pays." Virtue is held to be its own reward, yet some people seem to think it requires a lot of advertising. Married life may be a 50-50 proposition, but the trick is to find a boy who will meet you half way. One of the reasons why you should never send good money after bad is that it seldom catches up. Nothing ever takes a harder fall out of worry than hard work. A man can usually have the last word if he says it as he bangs the door on his way out. Charity also covers a multitude of sacred concerts. Antinomies develop fastest among those who feel their importance keenest. Another difference between the rich and the poor is that the latter always know how much they owe. If stupidity were a crime, we'd all spend time in jail. Everybody is entitled to courtesy—even your wife.

Mr. Pester—"I wonder why a woman has to change her mind so often."
Mrs. Pester—"I suppose it's because the styles in minds change so."

A friend is one who is an intelligent and patient listener.

Personally there is no one for whom we have a warmer affection than the experts who say fallen leaves make good fertilizer for a lawn.

Customer (in store)—"Won't you take off something for cash?"
Salesgirl—"Sir!"

"When we were first married I used to waken my husband with a kiss every morning."
"And now?"
"He's bought himself an alarm clock."

Rustic Bridegroom (after the wedding breakfast)—"Well thanks for all yer good wishes. I'm startin' married life with a dozen fine heifers and Sarah; if I can't make a do with that lot, I don't deserve to."

"How much are your peaches?"
"Penny each, lady."
"I'll have one, please."
"Givin' a party?"

Sallyforth—"I can't find words to express my indignation."
Horseradish—"Then why get wild when I say you are ignorant?"

Bride (at ball game)—"Who is the man in the blue coat, darling?"
Groom—"That's the umpire, dear."
Bride—"Why does he wear that funny wire over his face?"
Groom—"To keep from biting the ball players, precious."

One answer given as the reason for hard times was: "A period when people stop feeding the cow and wonder why she gives less milk." Some merchants are that way with advertising and their business.

Chivalry—the behavior of a man towards a strange woman.

Girl (to her sweetie)—"What have you there?"
Her Sweetie—"Some insect powder."
Girl—"Good heavens! You aren't going to commit suicide?"

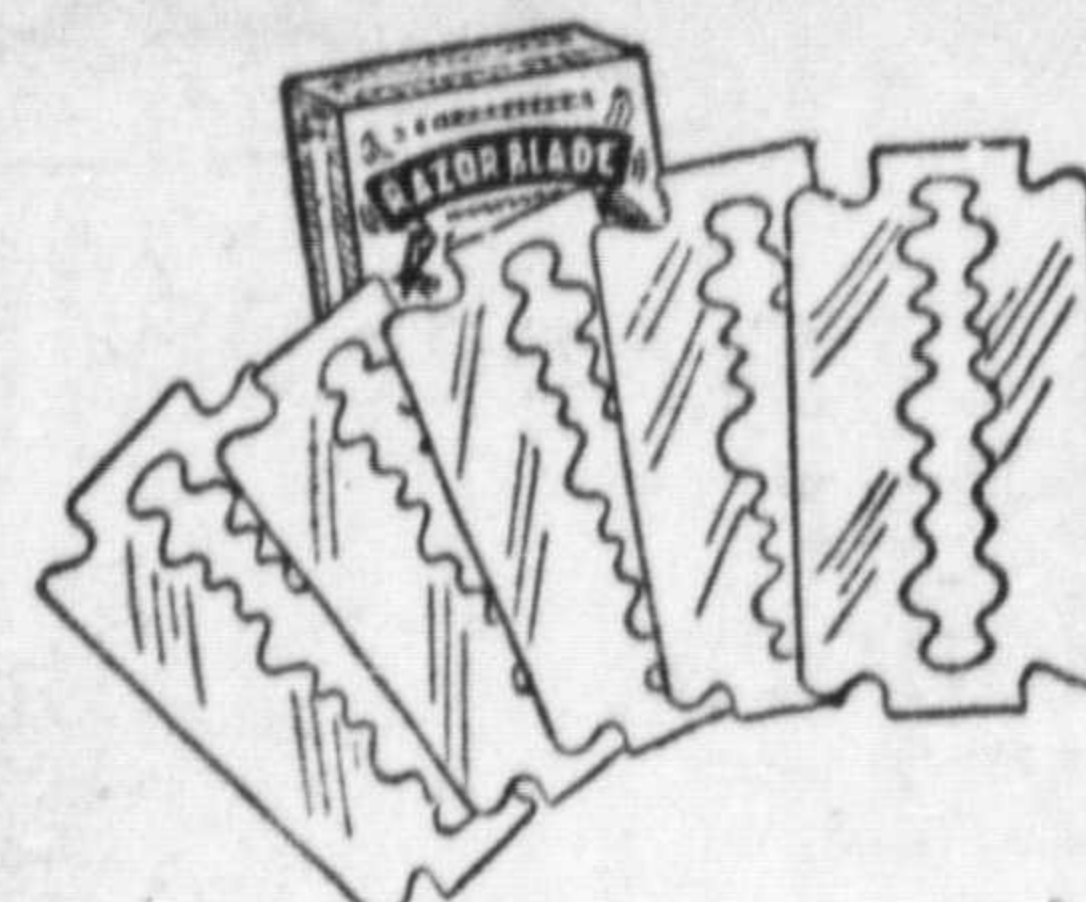

Whether its marriage or business, patience is the first rule of success.

Prosperity deceives, adversity instructs. The bow lamp of business adversity is courage—the street lamp is common sense.

Hudson Bay Ship On Perilous Trip

Vessel Making Annual Cruise to the Arctic—Danger From Ice

Vancouver.—The twenty-second annual Arctic cruise of the Hudson's Bay Company is under way with the departure from this port recently of the S. S. Anyox, Captain B. D. L. Johnson, R.N.R., commanding.

Eighteen times Vancouver has welcomed the Arctic ships back. Three did not return. Two were caught in the Summer icepack, that tremendous area of floating floes that slowly rotates in tidal and air currents around Point Barrow, heading, in the Fall, north and west, to join the pack that is anchored for all time near the North Pole. The third ship was kept in the Western Arctic by her owners to distribute supplies to the Herschel Island to extreme eastern trading posts.

These Arctic adventures commenced in 1913 with the Ruby, a wooden schooner, with an auxiliary plant of 140 horsepower. The pioneer voyage was arranged by A. Bassett, fur trade inspector for the company. The master was an experienced Northern whaler and trader. Then, as now, ship: bound around Barrow had to adjust their sailing to a period in Summer when balmy Southern winds loosened the polar field from its Winter grip and shoved the icepack out from the land, leaving ice dotted lanes of open water to the wider seas north of Canada.

Many Narrow Escapes

More than once a company ship has slipped through the narrowing channel between the pack and the land and seen the ice lock with the shore right under the stern of the speeding vessel. First to be caught in the ice was the 1914 vessel, the MacPherson, commanded by a famous Indian trader and Bering Sea sealer, Captain Buckholtz. Ice-bound off the Alaskan coast, she wintered there, and next year was sent to Herschel Island, remaining in the Arctic for more than ten years before being relieved.

The Lady Kindersley, trapped by the icefield in 1924, wrote a stirring chapter of history of conquest of the Arctic. Commanded by Captain Gus Foelmer, who died three months ago, she had made two successful voyages, but on Aug. 6, 1924, was caught just south of Point Barrow. For the rest of the month the master and crew fought to free the ship, while the wind blew the icepack almost opposite the mouth of the Mackenzie River, then west and north toward the Siberian coast. With axes, dynamite and steam the crew managed to keep the vessel in a small lake, but despite their efforts the frost gradually closed in.

Eskimos Saved Crew

Rescue ships, including the ill-fated Baychimo, hovered helpless on the edge of the pack. Finally Captain Foelmer gave the order to abandon the ship, with its million-dollar cargo of furs. The crew started across the icepack, which was badly broken. They had almost given up hope of reaching the rescue ships when Eskimos, with sledges and a skin boat, reached them and transported them to safety. The Lady Kindersley has never since been definitely reported, although there have been rumors that she finally was looted by Siberian natives off the Kolyma River.

The Baychimo succeeded the Lady Kindersley until 1931, when, out-bound from the Arctic, she was badly crushed by the icepack south of Point Barrow. Captain Cornwall made camp ashore and lighted practically all the cargo. He remained until the ship disappeared. Then another stirring chapter of Arctic history was written by American airmen, who saved the crew and the whole of the cargo. The Baychimo thereafter became a ghost ship. Again and again she appeared. Once an Eskimo party reached her, but had great difficulty getting back. For the past year she has not been reported. Her mate, R. J. Summers, is chief officer of the Anyox, which carries many of her crew.

Needs No Latch-Key

Ramsay MacDonald, the British Prime Minister, does not have to remember the latch-key of his London home when he goes away for a rest, for No. 10 Downing Street has none. Efficient attendants are on duty every minute of the day and night and the door swings open as if by magic at the approach of the Prime Minister or his family or any member of the Cabinet.

It was only when Lloyd George was Premier that this constant vigilance was instituted. Before that there was a very old method of opening the door from the outside. Near the knocker was a small wooden knot, which few people noticed. By pulling this the latch was raised by means of a piece of string attached to it.

Legend has it that No. 10 once had a latch-key, which had to be disposed of because ex-Prime Ministers developed an awkward habit of turning up at odd times of the day and wandering about their old residence, greatly to the embarrassment of their successors.

Even Marriage Mart Has Turned Corner

London.—Some observers profess to see another sign of trade improvement in the boom in the marriage market. London has proved most susceptible. While less than 12,000 Londoners married in the first three months of the year that figure was nearly doubled in the second quarter despite the alleged unpopularity of May as a wedding month.

The increase is apparent throughout the country and even in Lancashire where marriageable men are supposed to be especially canny the number of weddings has more than doubled.

IRELAND AND EGYPT

Evidence of Commerce Between Them
Thirty-five Centuries Ago

Following Sir Flinders Petrie's excavations at Gaza, which recently brought to light gold ornaments of Irish manufacture of the time of Queen Hatchepsut, inquiry has now disclosed that in 1914 Professor Archibald Sayce and the late Dr. H. R. Hall of the British Museum identified certain blue glazed beads discovered at Stonehenge and elsewhere in Wiltshire as having been made in Egypt about the time of Hatchepsut, according to Sir Charles Marston.

Hatchepsut was the Egyptian princess now believed to have brought up Moses about 1500 B.C.

"We thus have evidence of communication both ways between Egypt and Asia Minor on the one hand and the British Isles on the other, nearly 1,500 years before Caesar." Sir Charles told a newspaper correspondent. "It is thought that the route traversed was up the Mediterranean from Egypt or Asia Minor to the south of the Rhone, thence across ancient Gaul and so across the English Channel."

Sir Flinders Petrie announced the discovery of primitive gold earrings, "probably of Irish origin," on the site of the ancient Gaza in Palestine, on his return to London. The earrings, two bent sticks of gold, soldered together to resemble a flattened letter X, are of a pattern on which gold ornaments previously had been found in Ireland, England and the site of ancient Troy. They date from 1400 B.C., about the time of the fall of Jericho and the beginning of the Bronze Age in Ireland. Hatchepsut, the daughter of Thothmes I, an Egyptian queen of the eighteenth dynasty, reigned with Thothmes II about 1500 B.C.

SMOKE WATCHERS

The Output of Factory Chimneys, Not Cigarettes Nor Pipes

Smoke watching, one of Britain's strangest occupations, is declining. Imperfect firing of boilers makes for soot-laden air, and many firms send old employees to the roofs of power stations and factories. They sit with a piece of mica glass in their hands, and when they can see smoke through the dark glass they signal the boiler-room and the fuel supply is cut down.

Scientists, however, have perfected a device by which, if smoke becomes too heavy in a chimney, a warning bell is sounded and the boiler-room attendants know they have been firing too heavily. The smoke watchers, whose profession is threatened by this device, work in eight-hour shifts, day and night, rain or sunshine.

Goitre is rare where fish foods from the sea are eaten regularly. The reason is that these foods are the greatest known diet source of iodine, the goitre preventative.

INDIA'S DEFENCE

Without the British, India must have great conscript armies. Without such armies she could not hold back the million and a half Afghan fighting men on her frontiers and beyond. It must not be forgotten that the flood of invasion is not held up by the exiguous British-Indian army; an equally important factor is the knowledge that behind that army is the whole weight of the British Empire. The position will be different when that weight is removed from the scale. There can be no doubt that the presence of the British exercises a restraining influence on the other potential enemy beyond the Afghan frontier, an enemy infinitely more powerful, more resourceful than the Afghan and equally more ruthless—Soviet Russia.—Sir William Barton in the "Contemporary Review."

MANHATTAN NIGHT

By William Allen Wood

SYNOPSIS

"There is a place in the apartment where something could be hidden," Martha Thayer told Peter Wayne. Tack Thayer, her husband, had been shot to death the previous day in their penthouse apartment, and Police Inspector Connolly suspected her and Evan Ross, with whom she was in love. Peter had fallen hopelessly in love with Martha. He met her for the first time with the heavy-drinking Tack at Emma's night club, and when Tack left Martha had asked Peter to give a jeweled bracelet to Benny Rufano, a hangman at Emma's, because she couldn't raise $500 cash that night. Peter refused and gave Benny the $500. Following the murder, Benny demanded "five grand" on penalty of Connolly's getting a tip as to where the murderer hid his pistol. At Detective Sergeant Charlie Mitchell's suggestion Peter aids in spiriting Martha from the home of Peter's sister Carol, Mrs. Steve Wentworth, to Peter's apartment. Charlie asks Peter if Tack was wearing a watch the night he was killed.

CHAPTER XXV.

Doorman and elevator attendant nodded to Peter; they went swiftly up to the roof. A uniformed patrolman answered the bell, and Charlie strode in.

"Anythin' new, Kauffman?" asked Charlie, and the other policeman shook his head.

"Naw," he said. "Pretty soft for me, at that; I'll take all the jobs like this they want to hand me."

"Sure. I want to have a look round, Kauffman. This guy's with me—witness—see? Hey—do somethin' for me, will you? Beat it down to the corner and get me some cigars." He took a bill from his pocket. "Any good two for a quarter smoke they've got—not too dark. Get four. Smoke one yourself when you get back."

"Sure, sarge, sure."

The patrolman picked up his cap and went out.

"Now then, Peter, get busy! Open up that fireplace! Quick! Remember what the madam told you?"

"Yes," said Peter, and dropped to one knee. The fourth tile from the left—the third from the floor, Martha had said—and you pushed it in. He did, and as the spring was released the whole side of the fireplace swung open, revealing a small safe. Charlie pushed him aside, unceremoniously, and grunted with relief as the safe door opened to his pull.

"Had to take a chance it wasn't locked—didn't think it would be, though!" he said. "Well—there's the gat a, right. Now—let's see! Close up after me, Pete!"

Peter obeyed; when he rose, and turned, Charlie, holding the pistol gingerly, by the very end of its short, blunt barrel, was dusting it with a light powder. He stared at it, turning it this way and that.

"Wiped clean!" he said. "Not a fingerprint on it. I thought so. You're a wise guy, Benny—but you ain't the only one!"

He dropped the pistol in his pocket.

"Which was Thayer's room?"

Peter pointed it out, and was treated, for ten minutes, to the spectacle of a real search. Kauffman came back with the cigars and looked on curiously.

"Seen anythin' of a thin watch and a chain 'round, Kauffman?" asked Charlie.

"There's a wrist watch, with a leather strap—"

"I know—I'm lookin' at that right now. I mean a regular watch, with a chain, like a guy wears in his vest pocket."

"No, I ain't seen nothin' like that, sarge."

"All right—guess it ain't here. Come on, Pete."

They went downstairs, and again Charlie gave the cab driver an order Peter didn't hear.

"That watch and chain, now—worth some jack, was they?"

"I imagine so," said Peter. "Tack's mother gave them to him when he was graduated. I remember him telling me that, once."

"Watch might have cost how much? A grand?"

"A thousand? I suppose so. Where are we going now, Charlie?"

"Ross's."

"Ross's?"

"Nowhere else but. I got what I've been after since last night—I know what Ross told Barclay and the boss!"

"What? For heaven's sake, what?"

"All in good time, fella. You'll know. It won't be long now."

They stopped outside the house in which Ross lived. This time Charlie nodded to Peter, who paid the driver.

He looked around for Charlie, who was talking to an inconspicuous-looking bystander—but one whom Peter had no difficulty in identifying as a plainclothes man.

"All right, come in," said Charlie. "He's upstairs."

"Ross's apartment?" said Charlie to the elevator man, and, when he hesitated, showed his shield.

Now, once more, Peter saw the Charlie of his earliest memory of him in action. He rang the bell; stood waiting, obscuring Peter with his vast bulk, his jaw thrust out pugnaciously.

"You Ross?" he said, when the door was opened by Evan Ross himself.

"Sure you are. I know you—and you're going to know me before I'm through with you." He showed his shield again. "Detective Sergeant Mitchell from Headquarters. On the Thayer case."

"Well?" said Ross. He recognized Peter. "Oh hello, Wayne! Come on in. I'll be with you as soon as I get rid of this detective."

"Maybe yes—maybe no," said Charlie. "That's up to me, fella."

"What do you want?" asked Ross, almost truculently. I've seen Inspector Connolly and Mr. Barclay, the Assistant Attorney today, and they told me I wouldn't be bothered again."

"Yeah? You don't want to believe everythin' you hear, fella. I'm here to bother you."

Ross stared at him. There were dark circles under his eyes.

"Thought you'd pulled a fast one, didn't you, huh? Thought you'd got away with—murder—because the chief and the D.A. acted like they was swallowin' the line you was handin' out?"

Peter caught his breath sharply.

"I don't know what you mean, Sergeant," said Ross. His voice was steady enough. But his eyes were wandering about the room; he couldn't face that unwinking, hypnotic stare of Charlie's.

"The hell you don't! I'm wise, fella—I'm wise." His hand went, with a sudden movement, to his pocket; he drew out the automatic pistol he had found in the penthouse. "Ever see this before?"

"No!"

"That's what you say. Suppose I told you it had had your finger-prints all over it?"

"I'd say it was a damned lie!"

"You would, would you? All right. Leave that lay—for now. Where was you Tuesday night—Wednesday morning, if you want to be fussy—between two-twenty, when you left Sanborn's, and three-twenty, when you got back there?"

"I've already told Inspector Connolly—"

"Hey, fella—I don't care what you told who! I'm askin' you—see? Come clean! Where was you?"

"I was with a lady—" He looked at Peter, apologetically. "With—Miss Gould—"

"Yeah? Well—I'll say that's a damned lie!"

"Yes? Well, as the lady is prepared to swear that I was—as she has, in fact—"

"The thing that beats me," said Charlie, his manner altered for the moment, "is the way the women fall for inchworms like you. Oh, sure she backed you up! I know that, fella."

Menace came back into his voice. Only—she was lyin' too."

He was close to Ross now; his jaw thrust out, so that his hot breath must have brushed the other's face. "Get me, Ross—I know where she was—and it wasn't with you! And I know where you was, too!"

"Then why the devil are you asking me, if you know so much?"

But that was pure bravado, and Peter knew it. Panic had taken hold of Ross again; it was plain in his shifting eyes, in the trembling of his weak, bad mouth, in the way his fingers played together. He was in the grip of deadly fear, and his fright sickened Peter. It would be almost as bad for Martha if Ross had killed Tack as if she herself had fired the shot.

"I'm givin' you your last chance to come clean—that's why," said Charlie. Something about Charlie's manner puzzled Peter now. He had changed again; his voice was gentler; it was almost tolerant.

"You're a poor sort of man, Ross—I'll say you are! But you must have some guts! You know the whole frame—you've known it for a day and a night at least! Once more his voice was full of an unmeasurable contempt. "Oh, I know you didn't shoot Thayer—I know you didn't even know he was going to be put out!"

Peter jumped. His heart leaped in his relief—for he didn't, even for an instant doubt that Charlie meant that, nor, now, that Charlie, in very truth, had solved the mystery. Fascinated, he stared at Ross. He was as much afraid as ever; that word of reassurance that Charlie had tossed him hadn't relaxed the grip of the terror in which he was enmeshed.

"Let me alone—" he said. The roof of his mouth was dry; he talked as if his tongue were swollen. "I haven't anything to say—I've told all I know—"

"Yeah?" said Charlie. "That's your last word, is it? Remember, fella—I'm givin' you your last chance. You ain't headed for the chair—not this time. But they're other crimes besides murder, and they send guys up for them. Yeah—guys like you—"

"Shut up! Get out! I don't know what you're talking about—"

"You know, all right, fella—you know. And you know I know you know. But I can't make you talk if you won't. Have it your own way. Come on Pete. He can stew in his own juice for all of me—now!"

In the hall, as they waited for the elevator Charlie turned his cigar over, thoughtfully in his mouth.

Well, that's another good hunch gone wrong!" he said, philosophically.

"What do you mean?" said Peter. "Haven't you got anything on him?"

Was that all—a bluff?"

"I got plenty on him, Pete. Only—they're others he's worse scared of than he is of me. That's the trouble with Ross. The way he's sittin' he's damned if he does and damned if he doesn't. Come on—let's go."

The Patriarch

Graybeard of the forest, ancient beech, Beside whom fir and balsam tower no more

Than budding youths, whose arms may never reach

Majestic, elbowed lengths to Heaven's floor,

Your mighty roots have burrowed through the ground

To deeper rivers for their fount of life.

The lichen strips of pearl have built around

Rough bark, whose fissures prove long years of strife.

When each new spring shed here a gentle beam,

A thousand soft leaves sang, of strength possessed;

On shoulders that could bear it as a dream,

Fall cast her cloak, then heavy snows were pressed.

Mysterious music trembles toward the skies;

My spirit leaps to hear the notes that rise.

New Test Reveals Alcohol Intoxication

Two Drops of Blood From Finger Reveals Amount of Beverage in Human System — Also Used in Diagnosing Diabetes

Chicago.—A new, simple finger-prick test for alcoholic intoxication has been reported to the American Chemical Society.

As a purely incidental finding while proving up this test, the report told of three men and one woman who drank four bottles of 3.2 beer in 15 minutes, on empty stomachs. The alcohol in their blood, coming from the beer, proved to be less than half the volume which causes intoxication. It was just about enough to cause a sensation of warmth for a person in a warm room.

Painless Method Found.

The new test was devised to give a quick, painless method of testing alcohol in the system, to replace the usual blood tests which take enough blood to be painful to most persons. The finger-prick technique requires only two drops.

The same test can also be used in the diagnosis of diabetes. For that disease it shows the amount of acetone in the blood. For diabetes likewise the method is easy and quick.

It was described by Drs. T. E. Friedmann, W. G. Motel and Heinrich Necheles of the University of Chicago. The blood is placed in a small tube, with a little water, cleaned of proteins and distilled. In the distilled liquid is placed some potassium permanganate, which converts the alcohol into carbon dioxide and water. This conversion uses up some of the potassium permanganate. Measuring the amount used up by the alcohol gives an accurate estimate of the percentage of alcohol in the blood.

Dr. Friedmann also reported tests showing that the tissues of the human bodies, regardless of whether a person takes alcoholic drinks, contain alcohol in about the proportion of 10 parts in 1,000,000.

The Chicago experiments indicate that this natural alcohol is produced by the body from sugars. A small part of it may be formed in the body by bacteria.

Splendid Flax Crop Is Crown by King

London.—King George's flax crop at Sandringham has been gathered and the East Anglian harvest this year has been so good that Belgium the home of the finest flax in the world, may have to take second place in this industry.

"The seed will also be of excellent quality," an official of the Linen Industry Research Association said. "This is a matter of great importance as it is hoped East Tukia will become the centre of supply of pedigree flax seed for the Northern Ireland flax-growers, who for this commodity have had to depend almost entirely on the foreigners."

"The next stage is the baling of the crop at the quay in King's Lynn, so that it may be shipped to Northern Ireland for turning into fibre of Lambeg, County Antrim. Then only will it be possible to determine whether East Anglia can become the producer of a flax crop second to none, and whether modern mechanized methods can beat the inherited skill of centuries in providing for the linen trade a fibre of the famous Courtrai quality."

In 1931 the King grew a small acreage of flax on his Sandringham estate and the flax-straw was transported to Ireland, processed into fibre in the experimental factory of the Linen Industry Research Association, and manufactured by noted Ulster firms into a range of different kinds of linen. This linen was presented to their Majesties in December, 1932.

The experiment was such a success both as to the yield and high quality of the fibre, that interest was aroused in the possibility of establishing a flax industry in East Anglia, which up to 60 years ago was one of the traditional homes of flax.

Promises Should Never Be Broken

If Child is Counting on Something, Think How Disappointed He'll Be If You Change Your Mind

Teddy couldn't sleep. He lay there in the dark, his eyes wide open, thinking. He was trying to puzzle out something his mother had said.

By and by she looked in. "Asleep?"

"No," came a subdued little voice. "Turn over now and close your eyes. You'll have to get over being disappointed."

"I'm not dis-appointed."

"Then what's the matter?"

"Nothing."

"That's a good boy!" she kissed him and fixed the covers.

The door closed and he was in darkness again. He lay very quietly but he didn't sleep.

The little boy was wondering about things. Why he was promised something that made him so very happy and then suddenly told that the promise couldn't be kept.

Beyond His Reason

He wasn't old enough to reason in abstracts. To-night a very concrete problem was bothering him. He had never seen the moon at night. He had always gone to bed at six, except last summer when seven was the hour.

The moon had often looked down at him in broad daylight—a whitish disk in a pale blue sky—but he had never seen the great golden plate on a velvet background like the pictures in his books. He had never seen even half a plate or even a saucer. At least, not since he had begun to take an interest in things celestial as well as those terrestrial.

To-day someone had spoken of the beauty of the moon last night. To-night it was to be full.

$27,000,000 "Grid" Plan Nearing Completion

London.—At Fordingbridge, on the outskirts of the New Forest in Hampshire, the last pylon was erected recently which completed the main part of the "grid" scheme for transmitting electricity throughout England.

This portion of the undertaking was begun five and a half years ago, has involved the erection of 26,265 pylons, has cost £27,000,000 and has employed directly or indirectly some 200,000 workers.

In addition to the network of pylons all over England and Scotland, the scheme has involved the building of many main and substations; also the transformer stations which step down the main power current of 132,000 volts to 66,000 or 33,000 volts. Of the 4000 miles of transmission cables, 2894 carry the higher power. The 273 transforming and switching stations represent a transforming capacity of 11,000,000 horsepower.

The main scheme is split up into nine areas, and at present some 2500 miles are in operation. It is anticipated that the whole system will be supplying electricity by the end of 1934. The current will be there, and it will only remain for the electricity companies to develop the different areas and supply them. By 1940, with the grids fully loaded, there should be an output of 25,000,000,000 units.

100 Bushels to Acre on 36-Acre Oat Field

Theodore, Sask.—John Hodge, farmer two miles from here, has a record yield of oats. He harvested 3,660 bushels from a 36-acre field.

We are at one of those dramatic turning points in history when the path to progress lies clearly before us if only we have faith and confidence to take it. J. Raymond B. Fosdick.

SAVED IMPORTED DRESS

"After a little wearing, a lovely green voile—an imported dress—lost color so completely that it was not wearable. A friend who had admired it asked me why I wasn't wearing it any more. On hearing the reason, she advised dyeing it and recommended Diamond Dyes. To make a long story short, it turned out beautifully. I have a lovely new dress that really cost just 15c—the price of one package of Diamond Dyes. I have since used Diamond Dyes for both tinting and dyeing. They do either equally well. I am not an expert dyer but I never have a failure with Diamond Dyes. They seem to be made so they always go on smoothly and evenly. They never spot, streak or run; and friends never know the things I dye with Diamond Dyes are redyed at all."

Mrs. R. F. Quebec.

"I want to see the moon!" he announced suddenly.

The family gasped. "It was true!" they looked at each other. "Teddy had never seen a great big round full moon!"

So his mother promised him he could stay up to see it. Then she thought about it rising an hour later. That wouldn't do at all! No, Teddy would have to go to bed on time. She tried to explain. He couldn't understand. He had been promised, and that to him was enough.

A Puzzling Question

Now he lay wondering why little boys could have promises made to them broken so easily. He wanted to see the moon.

Downstairs he heard voices, the radio, doors closing, laughter, feet running up and down stairs. They had forgotten the boy and the moon and the promise. And it was all so important to him.

The harder he tried to think the wider awake he became.

He sat up in bed finally and watched the curtains blowing at the window. And then between the two houses across the way an enormous golden ball hung directly in his line of vision. The moon! He sat and stared and then leaped out of bed and hung on the window sill.

The moon seemed to say, "I'm on your side. I fooled them all. Here we are—now take a good look; then be a good boy and go to sleep."

Teddy finally went back to bed and instantly to sleep. He was satisfied now. To-morrow broken promises would not exist—perhaps. At least not this one.

PURPOSES

No stream from its source
Flows seaward, how lonely soever its course,
But what some land is gladdened
No star ever rose
And set without influence somewhere.
Who knows
What earth needs from earth's low est creature? No life
Can be pure in its purpose, and strong in its strife,
And all life not be purer
and stronger thereby.

Benny Comes Back

Mirth and music—once again Benny, star comedian of many stage successes and numerous "hit" radio programs is destined to rule over weekly proceedings in his old role of master-of-ceremonies and chief wise-cracker. Miss Livingstone, who made her first professional appearance before the microphone "just for fun" and now shares honors with her husband as an entertainer, will serve as a foil for Benny's wit, and doubtless will find time for her now celebrated imitations of Mae—"Come up and see me sometime"—West and other stage and screen celebrities.

Thirty-five Studios in New Radio City

The National Broadcasting Company will have thirty-five studios in Radio City, of which sixteen will be completely equipped and in operation on the night of the formal opening. Eleven more, including five audition studios, will be complete except for technical equipment. The new electrical power plants which are being embodied in the scheme are so arranged that, should a bombing raid or natural catastrophe disable the regular electrical power plants, this enormous battery plant would be used to meet any emergency. The power stored here in reserve would continue operation for a week.

John S. Young, the Ideal Radio Voice

Habits formed in youth are hard to break. When a child, John S. Young, the only announcer with L.L.D. attached to his name, used to talk to himself. As he grew up into manhood he learned to speak French, German, Italian and Spanish, like the sound of his voice in any language. Others liked it, too. The late Florenz Ziegfeld—super showman—pronounced Young's the ideal radio voice.

Post Scripts

Al and Bob Harvey are booked well into the Spring for radio program work. These two boys no sooner leave the boat than they are called to the mike.

A sponsor of a morning program tried out sixty announcers before deciding to give the role to a comedian. Buck Bannister, barnyard imitator on the Corn Cobs Club program, has hopes of protecting his talents with a policy. He has applied to Lloyd's for a ruling in the matter.

Toronto is to have its own Radio City. Forbes Randolph with the opening of his Music Hall is bringing the finest of ideas from the Continent and New York. Radio stars who have made names for themselves in Canadian radio are to be featured. Canadian talent is at last to be recognized, and why not? Some of the greatest picture stars and radio artists are Canadian, but they had to cross the border to gain recognition.

Suit in India Dates Back 2,000 Years

Jubbulpore, India.—The judge at Jubbulpore, India, who has to decide on the claim of the Rani Kirti Bai of India to the inheritance of an estate, appears to be faced with a difficult job.

For the Rani has filed in court a genealogical tree tracing the ancestry of her family back for 2,000 years.

And in reply, the present occupants of the land in dispute, which includes 99 villages and is worth about £35,000, have produced a wealth of documents which, it is claimed, go back farther still.

Ocean Air Service Near Realization

Europe to U.S. Flights Assured, Declares Dr. Hugo Eckener

Akron. — Transatlantic Zeppelin service between Europe and the United States is seen as nearing realization by Dr. Hugo Eckener, famed Graf Zeppelin skipper.

"With President Paul W. Litchfield of the Goodyear-Zeppelin Corporation, I have worked out a program for carrying that dream to realization," Dr. Eckener announced recently as he concluded a day and a half of almost continuous conferences here.

Dr. Eckener disclosed he hopes to start the service in the Spring of 1935. By that time the LZ-129, now under construction at Friedrichshafen, will be completed and ready for operation.

An effort will be made to get permission of the United States navy to use the hangar at Lakehurst, N.J., as a terminal, Dr. Eckener said. If this cannot be done a mooring mast will be stationed at some suitable landing place between Philadelphia and Washington.

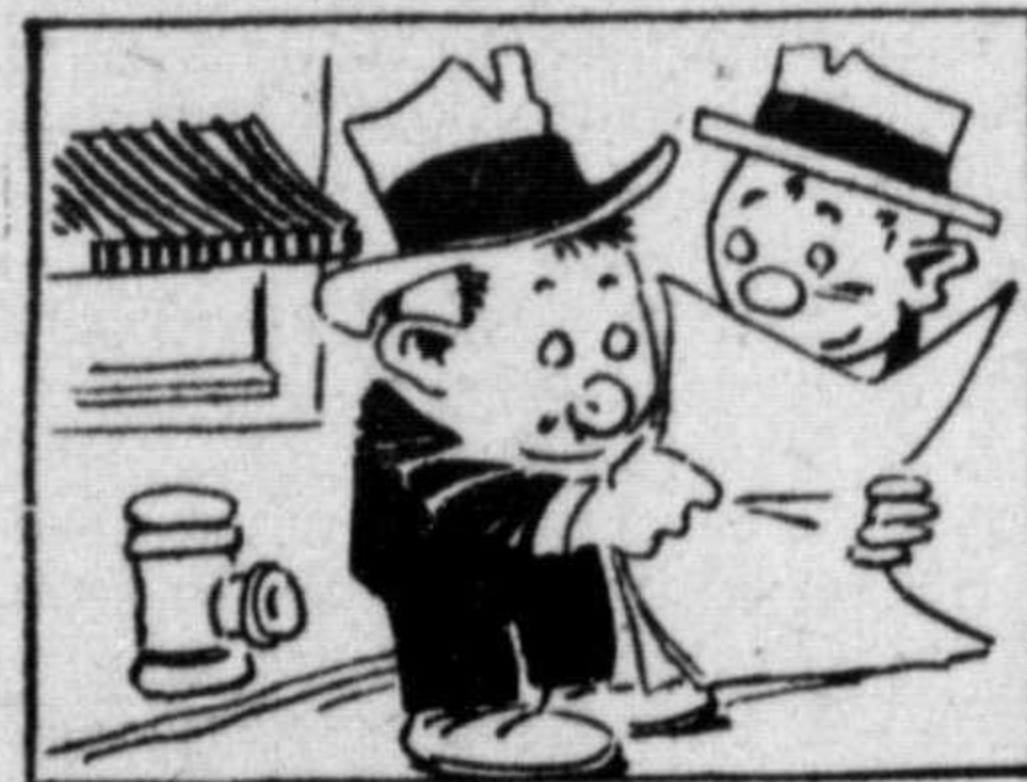

Dr. Eckener said he also had under consideration, and believed feasible, a special schedule of winter sail-fairs to and from Miami, Fla., which would provide tourists with service to Spain and across the Mediterranean.

Dr. Eckener said he will be in personal command of the Graf Zeppelin on her flight to the World's Fair at Chicago via Pernambuco, Miami and Akron. The ship will leave Friedrichshafen October 14.

WORDS AND DEEDS

Words are unnecessary when we can point to tangible results. How much time is wasted in foolish talk! Most of us can name a young man who is continually telling others what he proposes to do. "If mere talk amounts to anything at all, he would long since have been chairman of the company which employs him.

Deeds, not words, count. This is said to detract from the glory of good literature. It is altogether fitting that we should refer to the "works" of a Dickens or of a Rousseau. These men employed words as builders, use tools, and out of words they built thought forms that have helped to effect better social and educational conditions in the world. With their pens these men wrought in just as real a sense as did the men who burrowed through the Alps to make possible more wonderful railways. Great writers, like great engineers, are wary of idle words and work for the accomplishment of some noble purpose.

"With my wife it's a case of 'rule or ruin!'"
"Lucky chap! With my wife it's both!"

"It is an error to claim that there is, anywhere in the world, an absolutely pure race."—Joseph Caillaux.

Woman's Chatter...

By MAIR M. MORGAN

SUBJECT TO ARGUMENT

A Paris court recently had a nice point to decide upon. Whether a woman should spend more on her dress than her husband is prepared to pay.

A banker was sued by a milliner for the cost of four hats sold to his wife. He protested, saying that he had not authorized his wife to buy the hats. He further declared the hats (priced at about $30 each) were far too expensive, and that the milliner should not have accepted the orders for five hats in four weeks without having secured authority of the person who would be called upon for payment. Another argument used by the banker was that he and his wife did not, owing to their marriage contract, share their worldly goods but had separate accounts.

The court intervened with the remark that whatever may have been the banker's arrangements in this connection he was bound to pay his wife's expenses to keep up an appearance commensurate with his social standing. If she failed to do so she might do harm to his credit!

In view of the fact that a banker's wife is expected to be well-dressed, the court ruled that the expenditure for hats incurred at a time when women generally order their summer outfits was not excessive so far as the number of hats was concerned.

The banker paid!
No doubt many wives will become quite brave and beard friend husband in his den with a demand for at least one new hat!

PALE FACES ARE "IN"

Lipstick and rouge have been banned by the Commonwealth Bank of Australia.

If a girl employee of the bank appears with additions to nature's handiwork on her face, a high feminine official of the bank sternly orders her to go and wash her face.

In addition, no frills are allowed. Her "uniform" must consist of a coat and skirt of sombre black or navy blue.

And yet the Bank magazine "Bank Notes" still has a goodly number of engagements and marriages to report amongst the office staff! Significant?

Fashion magazines reporting on what the well-bred woman thinks of make-up declare the new trend as "Discard make-up." "Be Natural!"

AUTHOR'S REWARDS

The Book Window, English publication, is inclined to believe that Lloyd George stands to receive close to £25,000 for his memoir serially and in book form in England and America. A record in highly paid books as Lord Beaconsfield only got £10,000 for his last novel "Endymion" and John Morley, £13,000 for "Gladstone."

BEHIND THE SCREENS

FOR THE "TALKIE" FAN
By P. M.

Editor's Note:—It is in keeping with the times that this column make its appearance. During the past year Hollywood has been definitely challenged by the English Studios. After such successes as "Rome Express"—"Sunshine Smile"—"The Good Companions," etc., England has definitely made a bid for public favor and, according to the response, undoubtedly has won. This column will introduce and make familiar the stars of the English Cinema World, as well as give you the latest tit-bits about your favorites of Hollywood.

This week introduces Leslie Fenton, who is appearing in English films. As you may guess he is an Englishman. However, Mr. Fenton is well-known in Hollywood, where his home is. His wife, if you don't know it, is Ann Dvorak, who, you will remember, broke her contract to go on a tour of Europe with her young husband. She is now back in Hollywood and hard at work.

Noel (Cavalcade) Coward has written many witty and delightful plays, but no more successful piece than "Bitter Sweet." I understand Canadian film fans will soon have an opportunity of seeing this delightful tale of old Vienna.

September seems to have gone out with a honeymoon rush down Hollywood way. Jean Harlow twice married (divorce ended her first marriage and death her second) evidently is not daunted. She recently wed H. G. Ross, movie cameraman. Everyone will wish her luck.

Wedding bells in the modern manner have sounded again for Sally Eilers. Harry Joe Brown, well known director, is the lucky man. They eloped by plane from Hollywood to Yuma, Arizona's "Gretna Green."

Bette Davis, popular young film star, created a sensation recently when she attended a premiere escorted by eight boy friends. This was Miss Davis' answer to all the gossip around Hollywood regarding the separation rumors about Bette and her husband, Harmon O. Nelson, Jr. Bette's escorts of the evening included all the men her name had been linked with and several more. A good idea, say we!
Interesting, if true! According to

May Unlucky for Marriage

The reason so many people consider it unlucky to be married during the month of May is due to an old superstition inherited from the Romans. During the month of May the Romans held two important events—one the festival of the goddess of chastity, the other the celebration of the dead, Marriage during this month, they thought, was sure to be ill-omened, as an offence against the goddess and a slight to the dead.

The Moment of a Minute

Minutes are of little moment to the most of us, yet they are of the material by which eternity is influenced. Not until reduced to terms of result do we realize their meaning. One of the noted racing records of the world, made but once, and by but one man, differs only by a fifth of a second from the record made by the generations of runners who preceded him. In terms of time this is but the tick of a stop-watch, yet in distance it is over six feet, and reduced to terms of result, it is the superiority of one over billions. The runner who strains every nerve and sinew for speed, who endures when the seconds seem hours to the laboring lungs and tortured muscles, who knows naught but the goal, realizes the worth of a minute. It is this conception of our time that Paul had when he pictured life as a struggle on the stadium with the hosts of heaven as spectators. "Lay aside every weight," rings his voice down the centuries; "press on toward the goal unto the prize of the high calling." "Run with patience the race that is set before us." In such a race even a minute must not be misused.

"If it is right for the manager of a business to try to make it pay larger dividends, it is quite as right that he should try to make it pay higher wages."—Henry Ford.

"It will be upon intuition that men will more and more rely for dealing with the ever-varying situations of the future."—Sir Francis Younghusband.

Protection of Roses and other Plants for Winter

In the parts of Canada where the snowfall is heavy, comes early and stays all winter, ordinary perennials need no other protection, but in districts where the ground becomes bare in winter a covering of straw, cornstalks or pine boughs is advisable. Bulbs such as tulips and daffodils should be covered with old manure. At the Central Experimental Farm, Ottawa, it has been found that daffodils sometimes kill out in the winter, but a mulch of old manure seems to give the needed protection.

Except in the mildest sections of the country climbing roses, Hybrid Teas and Hybrid Perpetuals should be covered for winter. As climbing roses bloom on last year's wood health or there will be very few if any flowers. When the weather turns cool the canes should be taken down from their support and tied together. The bundle of canes should be laid on the ground and earth mounded up around the roots to the height of twelve or eighteen inches. In some varieties the canes are stiff and should be bent over into the ground. After the ground is frozen the canes should be covered with dry leaves or straw and these covered with boards, placed together to form an inverted V so that water will drain off. It is important that the canes should be kept dry as moisture may freeze on the bark and damage it. Building paper is sometimes used. In spring the covering should be removed gradually. In places where mice are troublesome some wheat soaked in poison should be placed under the covering as they frequently damage the bark of the rose.

Bush roses such as Hybrid Perpetuals and Hybrid Teas bloom on the new wood, so that it is not necessary to keep the whole of the stems alive as the plant will grow and flower if cut back to three or four eyes. The earth should be mounded up around the stems as recommended for climbers and after it is frozen, strawy manure, straw or leaves placed over the beds and covered with pine boughs, cornstalks or chicken wire to keep it in place.

As the amount of protection required for plants varieties according to the climate it is advisable to find out what method has proved successful with other gardeners in the district.

Set aside the evening of Wednesday, October 25th, for the big chicken supper and social evening at St. Edward the Confessor's Parish Hall, Bristol.

To Hold Cancer Week

For the first time in Canada, a cancer week will be held in Quebec this Winter by Laval University to draw the attention of the public to the gravity of the disease and the necessity of combating it in the early stages.

Coldest Near Equator

But the Chilly Weather is Ten Miles Straight Up

The coldest place known about this little planet, says Dr. Beno Gutenberg, geophysicist, is just about ten miles above the equator.

At that point the temperature has been measured at 150 degrees below zero. Fahrenheit. Colder temperatures have been produced in laboratories, but Dr. Gutenberg was speaking of natural temperatures.

He reported to a group of fellow scientists that at the same altitude above the Polar regions the temperature is not so low.

Another strange thing, he said, was that the higher one went above the 10-mile altitude, the higher temperature he would find, until at 100 miles or so it would be well over 1,000 degrees.

WHITES ASSIST NATIVES

Live With Australian Aborigines and Teach Them Modern Methods

Unemployed white men, who have "gone native" in Australia, and joined roving aboriginal tribes, may have a profound influence on these stone-age nomads.

L. A. Wells, explorer, after his return from a trek through the wildest parts of Australia, says he was surprised to find that many tribes included one or two white men. They were naked and almost black from exposure to the sun and were living in accordance with native customs.

They were able to improve on the age-old methods of hunting and trapping and had brought to the tribes a knowledge of the conservation of food and cultivation of vegetables.

By making the tribal food supply more plentiful and certain these whites, it is believed, may save many of the tribes from decay and extinction.

ASK RETURN OF THRONE

Removed a Century Ago From Ceylon to England

A request that the ancient throne of the Kandyan Kings, which has been at Windsor Castle for more than 100 years, should be returned to Ceylon, its traditional home, has been made by the Ceylon State Council to the Secretary of State for the Colonies.

The throne was used by British sovereigns at the investiture of the Knights of the Garter, until 1924, when it was removed, by the King's command, from the Throne Room to the Grand Vestibule because it was considered out of keeping with the decorative scheme.

The throne, which is an imposing structure of silver gilt, supporting dragons of cut crystal with amethyst eyes, is ornamented with floral decorations. The plating is set with gems.

Bits of Dahlia Lore

When the dahlias are eventually cut down by a hard frost, do not be in any hurry to lift them. They should be left in the ground as long as it is safe to do so. They should be dug on a sunny day if possible, but should not be left more than two or three hours in the sun and wind. The majority of winter losses, I believe, are caused by two much drying out before the clumps are stored.

The proper way to dig up the clumps is for two people, each with a digging fork, to work on opposite sides of the clump. First cut off the stalk above the ground; then lift the clump carefully and turn it upside down so that the stalk may drain, and leave it in this position until the clump is removed to the storage bin. Extreme care must be used in handling the clumps in order that the necks of the tubers be not strained or broken.

If your soil is not very sandy it may adhere to the clump—particularly around the crown, and I find that if you leave this earth on the clumps they will go through the winter in perfect condition. The clumps from which all soil falls off will be harder to winter, especially those with long slender roots.

If you have a cement floor in your cellar, and a furnace, your tubers should be stored in barrels, boxes or bins, according to the number that you have. They should be packed away upside down, and as soon as those on top have dried slightly they should all be covered with sand, sifted ashes, or dry peat moss. If you have an earth cellar without a furnace where root crops keep in good condition, you will not need to cover your dahlia roots.

If possible, keep the temperature of your storage room at 45° Fahr., and you will bring your dahlia roots through the winter in perfect condition.—E. S. Dibble, Lachine, Que., from the October issue of The Canadian Horticulturist.
