GUILDHALL.

All in the Wagon.—Whilst the Lord Mayor, Mr. Alderman Wood, Mr. Alderman Walthman and Mr. Alderman Thompson were on the hustings yesterday, scrambling for the representation of the city, Alderman Sir Claudius Hunter was busily engaged in the Justice Room, endeavouring to reconcile the consubstantial differences of a Mr. and Mrs. Gatehouse.

Mrs. Gatehouse, a small, loud-spoken matron, complained that her spouse, a large, full-spread, comely, quiet talking personage, had for more than five years past been continually battering and bruising her, and encouraging his daughter (by a former wife) to call her hard names, and bump her with a certain heavy utensil, by Laundresses called a fat iron, until by all these long continued bumpings, bruising, and batterings, she was literally bumped, bruised and battered to a mere mummy—and she therefore hoped the Alderman would bind Mr. Gatehouse down, in such a manner that he could not repeat the like again.

Sir Claudius Hunter observed, that he really did not perceive any outward sign of all these batterings and bumpings—and he endeavoured to prevail upon Mrs. Gatehouse to retire with her husband and come to some amicable arrangement; as the interference of the magistrate could only widen the breach between them. But Mrs. Gatehouse was peremptory to have her husband "bound down" and therefore the Alderman asked him what he had to say.

"Why, Sir," said Mr. Gatehouse—having first charged his thumb and finger with a very ample pinch of black rappee—"why Sir I hardly know how to make either top or tail of my wife!"

"Well, that is very possible," said Sir Claudius Hunter, "but it is no reason why you should beat her."

"Beat her, my dear Sir!" rejoined Mr. Gatehouse, "I never beat her but when she deserves it. She is of such a cantankerous temperament, that without a little correction now and then, it would be impossible to keep her within bounds, and she has no one else to correct her—so what am I to do your Worship?"

"Why you are not to beat her," replied Sir Claudius Hunter,—the best way for you to do, when she will not be quiet is to walk out of the house and leave her until her anger is over. That is what I should always recommend in such cases."

"But, Sir," rejoined Mr. Gatehouse, "my circumstances will not allow me to leave home—I have my business to attend to, and if I was to leave home every time she is out of humour I should hardly ever be there, and my business would soon go to ruin."

Here Mrs. Gatehouse, who being rather deaf, had been anxiously trying to hear what was going and exclaimed—"Oh, if your Worship listens to him he'll tell you a tale an hour long. This is the way he's always talking at home—but I hope your Worship won't listen to him, for if you do there'll be no end to it."

"I pity her! from my soul I pity her!!" ejaculated Mr. Gatehouse—absorbing another ample pinch of rappee, and regarding Mrs. Gatehouse with a look of much kindness.

"I assure your Worship," continued Mrs. Gatehouse, "that his daughter calls me an old cat, and a cattamarra, and a vile old hye poeetic—only because there is a chapel I go to sometimes; and I was black and blue for a month the last time his daughter bumped me with the fat iron."

"Why do you let your daughter beat her?" asked Sir Claudius. Mr. Gatehouse explained that this daughter was a great bone of contention between them; she being a daughter by a former Mrs. Gatehouse, and of course very obnoxious to the present Mrs. Gatehouse, who was continually urging him to turn her out of doors, which he was fully determined not to do.—Whilst the girl was very young she used her cruelly, but now she was grown up she retaliated whenever she was ill treated, and that led to continual squabbles between him and Mrs. Gatehouse. "But," added he, "I pity her from my soul, I pity her—for I think she would be better tempered if she could, and I have no doubt her deafness makes her worse."

"Bind him down your Worship," cried Mrs. Gatehouse. His Worship however would not bind him down—but observing that he plainly perceived they were "all in the wrong," he dismissed them with an earnest recommendation to be all in the right as soon as they could.

ANECDOTES &c. OF WEBER.

Slight anecdotes are frequently very characteristic, and the two or three which we have noted below are eminently so of the great musician whose death amongst us has excited so much sympathy.

Weber was invited to dine with Mr. L——, the music seller, whose residence and establishment are of a very handsome description. On entering the noble drawing-room, the quiet German opened his eyes and looking round said softly, as if to himself, "I see it is better to sell music than to write it."

Weber got, perhaps, about £1,000 by his visit to England:—£500 for his Oberon, and other sums for superintending rehearsals, leading the orchestra, concerts and private parties such as the Marquis of Hertford's, Mrs. Coutts, &c. for which thirty guineas was the fee. Mrs. Weber was of opinion, as her letters from Germany express, that her husband was not sufficiently recompensed—certainly if we compared his reward with the immense sums levied by less gifted foreigners, we also should think so. The truth is, that amusing talent is always paid out of all proportion, much higher than great abilities or genius.

One of Weber's distinguishing excellencies was his uniting the sound in his compositions to the sense of the words—his music was twin sister to the poetry—a rare and exquisite quality. In one of the pieces of Oberon, Miss Paton, with all her fine powers and beautiful execution, failed to produce the effect aimed at by the composer. "I know not how it is," said she, "I never can do this as it should be." "The reason is," replied Weber, "because we do not know the words."

A grander example of his feeling and judgment in this respect occurred when performing a hymn to the Deity. Some of the voices were in a high key. "Hush, hush!" exclaimed the genuine master, "hush!—if you were in the presence of God, would you speak loud?"

We have heard that the Saxon (his own) ambassador has shewn so strange a jealousy of Weber's being in England, as even to neglect his remains—on the contrary, the Prussian Ambassador has shewn every mark of attention. In other quarters there has been some very paltry and selfish caballing—upon which, (for the sake of liberality and good feeling, where the fine arts and science are concerned) we may be tempted to deliver our sentiments.

A lithographic print of this distinguished composer printed by Kullmandel, from a design by J. Hayter, has been produced very speedily and opportunely.*

LAW.

MODEL FOR DEFENCE.

At a time when our men of the law are so sadly puzzled by the conciseness and brevity which the late statute imposes upon them in the preparation of written pleadings, we are anxious to put them in possession of all aids and appliances towards the performance of this difficult duty. With this view, we now give a form or model of a "Defence," which a country practitioner of long standing has invented, as applicable to every case, and which is invariably adopted by him in his own practice. Our practitioner's name shall be Thomas. When a client waits upon him, with a newly-served Summons, and, with dismal looks, begins his long roundabout statement of the circumstances, Thomas at once stops his mouth, and bids him be of good cheer. "Andrew!" cries he to his clerk, "tak a sheet o' paper—Defences for John Todrick, &c. The defender in this case ought to have been the pursuer. The Summons is from beginning to end one tissue of falsehood. It alleges that the defender is indebted to the purchaser to the amount of £25 sterling. (Get on, Andrew!) The defendant denies the fact and retorts the allegation.—(Eh! John, I think that 'll redd his tail.—Go on, Andrew!) In point of fact the pursuer is indebted to the defender in a very considerable sum—(Oh, John, I think that 'll finish him!—Go on, Andrew!)—for which he has an action in his eye which will be raised on the fitting occasion. (I think that 'll tie his hair, John!) The defender will in these circumstances fall to be assuozed, with expenses. (That 'll dish him, John! Gae awa, Andrew, and extend it; and lodge 't directly. Guid mornin', John—ye'll see how we'll redd their tails to them!)—Edinburgh Times.

AURORA BOREALIS.

A writer in a late number of the London Mechanic's Magazine, has published a new theory of the Aurora Borealis, which has so long puzzled the philosophers. After speaking of the absurd theories of preceding writers, he refers to the observations of Mr. Fisher upon the subject, who accompanied Capt. Parry to the arctic regions; and it is to the Work of Mr. F. that he says he is indebted for the suggestion of this attempt at an hypothesis. In his accurate accounts of the various halos, arcs, paraselons, &c. which he saw in the dreary regions he visited, he tells us that he always observed, during their appearance, floating particles or crystals of ice in the atmosphere; which was also the case when the sun first appeared after its long absence, which was visible by refraction three days before it rose above the horizon. Now, considering the great refracting power of water, either in its fluid or congealed state, and the prismatic forms of its crystals, thus evinced in an immense degree in the formation of these meteoric appearances, and at the same time knowing the exhaling power of the sun, aided by the evaporation and expansion occasioned by volcanic and subterranean fires, which can raise vapour to almost any conceivable altitude, it is too great a stretch of imagination to suppose that minute crystals of ice may be suspended at a great height in the atmosphere, sufficiently high to even be exposed to the sun's rays, which of course pass obliquely over the globe, when the Arctic Circle is enveloped in the Earth's shadow.—If this could take place, the rays might be refracted by clouds of the congealed atoms towards the North Pole, and cause the phenomenon of the Aurora Borealis; and towards the South in a less degree, proportionate to the supposed quantity of floating crystals in a comparatively warmer region, forming the Aurora Australis. The visible phenomenon then, is here considered to be an atmospheric reflection of the refraction of the sun's rays through a floating medium of crystallized water. And according to this view of the case, the various momentary movements, extinctions, and re-illuminations of the phenomenon must be effected by the rising, falling, sudden crystallization, expansion, alteration of form, and aggregation of the minute crystals or atoms, varied infinitely by currents of wind, chemical and other causes unknown.

PERUVIAN LOANS.

(FROM AN INHABITANT OF PERU TO HIS FRIEND IN NEW YORK.)

Those who have invested their money in loans to these countries, have suffered their cupidity to blind their reason. Can it be imagined that these Governments possess more gratitude and good faith than have been found in certain Governments in Europe?

So long as the necessity exists, the fairest promises and demonstrations may be made, and a new loan being required, or rather until it be obtained, the interest upon a former loan may be paid; and as things are at present here, it is pretty plain that it requires to raise a new loan to begin to pay the interest of the old; and, with regard to the principal, as this cannot be paid off by any known present fund devoted for this purpose, or proposed to be enacted for it, but by resources which it is vaguely supposed may exist at a future period, and these to arise out of a very great increased prosperity in the country? Every liberal mind must be desirous to see these new governments raise themselves to a footing of equal respectability with those States which afford the greatest security to persons intrusting them with their property. But those who are acquainted with this country and people know, that very great changes must happen before such an event takes place. Hitherto, the governments here have been very much wanting in attention to their credit, where they have been intrusted with the money or goods of persons resident in this country. A decree of Bolivar himself, issued some few months ago, declared, that none other debts should be paid until the pay and arrears due to the army and marine were satisfied, and this notwithstanding that many of the claims of private individuals are for money or effects supplied under a solemn promise of payment being made within a fixed time. Bolivar excused himself upon the ground, that but for the exertions of the army, the country could not be in a situation to pay said claims; but no such plea was whispered when individuals trusted him and the Government upon their unqualified promise.

Innumerable have been the instances where the different Governments have thrown obstacles in the way of the just claims made against them; and I may venture to say, that hardly a person here could be found to trust them, except those who could be found to count upon some particular favour or interest. What then can be the expectations of foreigners, and in a foreign country?

If it be difficult to obtain from certain countries in Europe payment for the subsidies they have received from the British Government itself, what hope can be had for the fate of contracts with persons whose claims cannot be made national? I fear that an appeal to the national honour of Peru, the only pledge, would be of little avail; and before such an appeal be made, how many changes may take place, not only in administration, but in divisions of territory, which changes here may be called new revolutions, and these may even be brought forward as excuses for non-payment.

I have already said, that new loans may be raised to pay off the old ones, and that whilst necessity for more money exists, there may be a disposition to pay. At the same time I fear, that should the necessity cease, that is, when their resources here be sufficient for ordinary and internal demands, former necessities, and with them honour and gratitude are likely to be forgotten, and the contract entered into in England may be looked upon as having been grievous and burdensome to this country, which according to the public prints, appears to be now in Chili the view they take of the loan which that country obtained from England.

The late Mr. Sheriff, when about to administer the ordinance of baptism one Sabbath in his own chapel at Kirkaldy (the parent being a weaver, had written the intended name for his child upon the back of his web billet), Mr. Sheriff, in taking up the paper, turned the other side, looking attentively at it for a few seconds, he said loud enough to be heard by all the congregation, "What! are ye to ca' the bairn Blue Check?" One day in the course of his sermon he noticed how the pride of the human heart manifested itself, when persons, but especially young females, dressed above their station in life; pointing his finger to the pew where his own family were sitting, "Look at our ain Kate there," says he, "as ill as any o' them." At another time he was called to assist in dispensing the Lord's Supper at a considerable distance—being mounted on horseback, and jogging slowly along the road, his mind deeply engaged in religious meditation, and not aware of a carriage coming up behind him at a very quick pace, he had not time to clear the way, his leg was grazed by the wheel, and he very narrowly escaped being thrown down and crushed to death. The window of the carriage being down, with the greatest composure he said, "Lord drive you a' to Heaven my bairns." This extraordinary salutation induced the gentleman to enquire who he was, and was told that it was the Reverend Mr. Sheriff. He waited on him soon after at his own house, congratulated him on his narrow escape, making at the same time an apology for his own rashness.

The intimacy thus begun continued through life. About the time the volunteer corps were raised in Fife, a young man dressed in full uniform, entered the Church one Sabbath morning, at the commencement of divine service, and although there was plenty room in the pews, he stood in the passage exposing his person to the view of all the congregation. As soon as Mr. Sheriff had read and explained the psalm, he turned towards the stanger and addressed him thus, "Tak a seat young man, and we'll a' look at your bra' breeks when the kirk is out."

LORD COCHRANE.

Copy of a Letter from Lord Cochrane, to his Highness, Mohammed Ali, Pacha of Egypt.

Your employing foreigners in your military and naval service, the privilege which you claim and exercise of building and equipping ships of war in neutral states, and of purchasing steam vessels, and hiring transports under neutral flags, for hostile purposes, and to transport to slavery a people whom the Ottoman arms have never yet been able to subdue, warrants a belief, (whatever your sentiments may be,) that the civilized, educated and liberal portion of mankind will be gratified, that succours, similar to those which you have unfortunately obtained hitherto from those states, are now about to be afforded to the brave, the oppressed and suffering Greeks; nor will the advantage derived be wholly theirs; for until you shall cease, or be forced to abandon your inhuman traffic in Christian slaves and the commission of cruelties which stain the character of man, your subjects must inevitably continue barbarous—a state from which it would be a source of great gratification to contribute to release them.

It is true that the Christian world have not of late contended in arms with those of your faith, on points of religion; they have not, however, fallen into a state of apathy so great as to see unheeded perpetration of those enormities which you are daily committing on their Christian brethren; a sentiment with which no feeling of animosity towards you, or towards your people, is combined, but on the contrary, a desire to render you every good service consistent with that duty paramount to all others—namely, to wipe out the stain from the civilized world, of unfeelingly and inhumanly co-operating to exterminate, enslave, and transport to bondage a whole Christian people; and such a people the descendants of those Greeks, whose genius laid the chief foundation of literature and the art—who reared those noble monuments and edifices, which time, and the more destructive barbarian hand, have yet failed to destroy, and which, compared with the wretched hovels of your hordes, may better point out to you the elevation they attained, and the prostrate state in which your people are—owing, alas! to the baneful effects of bigotry and despotic sway. Surely, surely, there is ample field for the exercise of your energies at home, in encouraging industry, the arts, and sciences, in promoting the civilization of your people, and in enacting equitable laws for the security of persons and property; on which basis the national prosperity of all countries must rest. But should your ambition, not content with bestowing blessings like these on your native land, lead you to soar almost above mortal acts, distant oceans would unite, and the extremities of the globe approach at your command; thus might your name be rendered immortal, and Egypt become the imporium of commerce, and one of the richest and happiest nations upon earth. How infinitely great the glory of such acts; How despicable the fame of a tyrant conqueror, the ruler of slaves!

It would be pleasing to support you as the author of great and good works; but it is shameful to permit your present proceedings, and dastardly to leave the unfeeling apostate sons of neutral and Christian nations unopposed, aiding to perpetuate barbarism for horrid gain, drawn from the price of Christians torn from their homes and sold as slaves in foreign lands.

Against these atrocious men, my companions and myself cast the gantlet down, and will contend, in the hope, that you and they may perceive your true interests, and your great error, and pursue a different course before it shall be too late. Quit the classic sacred soil of Greece. Let the slayings and burnings, and impalings of this people cease; and, oh! shocking to humanity! the ripping up of pregnant females, and the hewing in pieces their infant babes, and other acts yet worse than these, too horrid to relate! Release the Christian slaves—pursue an honorable and enlightened path, and we become friends to aid you in your pursuits. But should the present course be continued, let the bands of cruel assassins in your employ count on our opposition; count, too, on our neutralizing the effect of every vessel procured or bought from Christian states. "Here the word of the Lord, ye rulers," (in the prophecy now to be fulfilled.) "Go to them that go down to Egypt for help and stay." "When the Lord shall reach out his hand, both he that helpeth shall fall, and he that is helped shall fall down, and they shall all fall together."

Instead of filling brimful the cup of bitterness, of which you yourself must ultimately drink, how admirable might you employ your people, and your treasure, the waste whereof is tearing you on a barbarian successor, to prolong the bondage of Egypt.

The Christian prayer of those called to rescue their suffering brethren is, that conforming yourself to the dictates of reason and humanity, you may live long to benefit mankind; and as you are more enlightened than your predecessors, so may you become more humane and just.

(Signed) COCHRANE.

TRINITY COLLEGE, DUBLIN.—Mr. Plunkett was elected on Monday, without opposition. There was an attempt made to go through the ceremony of chairing, but it did not succeed further than the entrance to the Hall. Here Mr. Plunkett contrived to extricate himself, and shortly after he found an easy passage to the Provost's house, and from thence passing quietly to his residence in Stephen's green. In descending from the chair, it appeared to be the opinion of the spectators, that he received some injury; but the supposition, we believe, was unfounded. The learned mob of the "adverse faction" seized the chair, as soon as it was vacated, and after breaking it to pieces, deposited the fragments in a part of the concern sacred to a certain goddess. It is quite disgraceful that we should have to relate this of persons pretending to be humanized by education, and holding a station in society above the canaille of the coal-quays or the shambles. But the inmates of the "Silent Sister" have for years been deteriorating, as well in mere habits as those acquisitions of the mind that enhance the glory of a people. The Orange Lodges have added this to the other works by which they have earned the curses of posterity.—Morning Register.

SCOTLAND.

EDINBURGH.—On Monday, Mr. Dundas was re-elected member of this city. He was put in nomination by Mr. Froter, the Lord Provost—the gentleman whose love of distinction was so sorely tempted by an offer of the seat for himself. The following amusing scene took place in the Town Council, at the election meeting:

Deacon Paterson—"I understand there are some of the gentlemen who have not seen the candidate; and there may be some of them who have a few questions to put, or a recommendation to give. I propose that Mr. Dundas be brought into the room." This proposal was seconded by Deacon Murray.

The Lord Provost—"If there are any gentlemen who have not seen Mr. Dundas, it must have arisen from accidental circumstances; for I am convinced that he meant and is anxious to treat every member of the Council with the utmost courtesy and respect. Mr. Dundas is in an adjoining room—and though it would be very awkward to compel him to submit to a public examination, I shall be happy to introduce any gentleman to him; and I am certain he is ready to give every explanation to him that may be required of him."

Deacon Paterson—"I do not much care whether I see him or not; and, if agreeable to the gentleman who seconded my motion, will not press it.—[after a pause of about a minute, Mr. Paterson proceeded.]—My Lord, I sincerely regret that I cannot concur in sentiments coming from one I so much respect, but I take the liberty of saying, that I decidedly differ from your Lordship as to what we ought to do in the discharge of our duty this day—a duty the most important of any which the Council is called on to perform, and on which so far as we are concerned, hangs the fate of the country. To the individual proposed, I have no personal objection; but, as a public man, I must candidly say, that he has none of the qualities which would induce me to support him on this occasion. If we examine his votes in Parliament, we will find his name swelling the majorities on every occasion where the liberty of the subject is to be infringed, the public burdens increased, or reform prevented. (Hear, hear.) But what else can we expect when he is not ashamed to take some thousands a-year out of the taxes, for offices without duties, and is thus a gainer by the waste of the public money, and has an interest in keeping up every thing that is corrupt in the present system. Every reasonable man wishes to see efficient public officers, but sinucures are a disgrace to the country; and before I can vote for Mr. Dundas, he must give a pledge to vote for the abolition of all such places, including those he holds himself. (Hear, hear.) I do not propose any other candidate, but I take this method of expressing my dissent from the motion your Lordship has submitted."

The Lord Provost—"I consider it to be the better mode not to request any pledge, but to leave it to our representative to act freely according to the dictates of his own conscience, as shall appear to him to be most for the advantage of the community."

The election went on, and Mr. Dundas was introduced after it was fairly over.

It will be recollected that this article was written in London when the Treaty with the Burmese was supposed to be concluded.

The Modern Traveller: a Popular Description, Geographical, Historical, and Topographical, of the various Countries of the Globe. London, 1826. J. Duncan.

The new volume of this excellent publication, which has just been added to the number of its useful and entertaining predecessors, is very judiciously devoted to countries which not only possess a permanent claim to our attention, but are particularly interesting at the present period, in consequence of their coming into nearer collision with the British Empire, and having recently had much new light thrown upon their history and situation. We allude to Birmah, Siam, and Assam, a few months ago very partially known, but now explored by our armed countrymen, and yielding extensive provinces conquered and annexed to our easttern dominions. Respecting Assam and its dependencies, Arracan, Ye, Tavoi, and the coast of Tenasserim, recently attached to our immense Indian territories, this little volume contains all the information which newly awakened curiosity requires to be gratified.—The past annals of Birmah, also are well worthy of perusal, especially the account of Alompraw (the Buonaparte of that country), who rescued it from its Peguan conquerors, and finally seated himself upon an independent throne. At page 31 there is a striking trait of oriental customs.

"In the year 1744," Shembuan sent a formidable force against the Muninpoora Rajah and the Cassay Shaan, carrying his arms into the recesses of the distant hill districts of the Brahampootra. The Rajah of Cachar, consented to yield as tribute to the Birman monarch, besides a sum of money, a virgin of the Royal blood, and a tree with the roots bound in their native clay; thereby indicating that both person and property were at the disposal of his sovereign pleasure. In the south of his dominions, Shembuan repressed a most formidable and dangerous rebellion of the Peguans, of which he availed himself to bring to a mock trial, and execute as a common criminal Beiaga Della, the aged monarch of Pegu, who had lingered for twenty years in captivity. It deserves notice, however, how precisely the fate of this unhappy sovereign corresponded to the act of barbarity inflicted by Beiaga Della himself on his vassal, the king of Birmah."

A few years later a Chinese army of 50,000 men invaded Birmah, but were so successfully opposed, that not one returned to tell the tale of their defeat. When Arracan, now ceded to England, was subdued by the Birmans, we are informed—

"The booty is said to have been considerable—but on nothing was so high a value placed as on the original sitting statue of Guadma Buddah, made of brass highly burnished. This, together with five other gigantic images of the same metal, representing Kachyas, or Hindoo demons, the guardians of the sanctuary, and an enormous brass cannon, thirty feet in length, was conveyed by water to the capital with much pomp and superstitious parade. It was upon this occasion we are told, that the Birman monarch having gained possession of so important a trophy, and succeeded to the prerogatives of the Great Mogo, assumed the imperial title of Eoa, and the still prouder designation of Lord of the White Elephant, the highest distinction in the Cuddhic world. This important acquisition, did not, however, satisfy the conqueror's ambition. The rival state of Siam was recovering its former vigour, after enjoying a long respite from hostilities—but the emperor now resolved to push his conquests further southward along the western coast of the peninsula. After an unsuccessful effort made by an expedition from Raagoon to gain possession of the island of Junkseylon, Minderajee left his capital at the head of 30,000 men and a train of 20 field pieces, and taking the route of Tonghoo, reached Martaban in the spring of 1786. Scarcely had he entered the Siamese territory, when he was met by the king of Siam with a powerful army. A furious engagement ensued, in which the Birmans were completely routed, their useless cannon were taken, and the emperor himself narrowly escaped being made prisoner. Hostilities were carried on between the two nations without any decisive result for several ensuing years, till at length, in the year 1793, overtures for peace were made by the Siamese, and a treaty was entered into, by which they consented to cede to the Birmans the western maritime towns as far south as Mergui, including the important province of Tenasserim and the port of Tavoy, acquisitions of great importance considered either in a political or a commercial light. The province of Bamoo and the fort of Quantong had also been wrested from the Chinese, and the boundary extended to the thickly wooded heights which separate the Chinese province of Yun-nan from Ava—and the Birman emperor thus found himself invested with the undisputed sovereignty of a territory equal in geographical extent to the whole of France."

"In June, 1819, Minderajee praw terminated his long and prosperous career, after a reign of 37 years. The state paper issued on the occasion announced, according to the Chinese formula, that the immortal king had gone up to amuse himself in the celestial regions. He was succeeded without opposition by his grandson, the Eagy Tekin, or Prince Royal. The new Emperor was proclaimed in June 1819, and on the 3d of November following, being his birthday, he was solemnly crowned at Ava. He must immediately after his accession have entered on the reduction of the province of Cassay, as in January 1820, he celebrated his victory in presence of the American Baptist Missionaries. By this conquest the frontiers of Birmah were pushed forward, on the north and west to the eastern boundary of Bengal, in Dinapore and its districts, the Garrows, the Sylhet hills, and the mountain ridges of the Cachar."

* Shembuan was the younger son and successor of Alom-praw: this date 1744, seems to us a misprint for 1764.

These extensions brought the Birmans into contact with our Indian territories, the result of which has been so lately published in the other London (not literary) Gazette.

Did we not estimate this publication altogether far above the class of compilations to which it might appear to belong, (but out of which its original intelligence, its being almost entirely re-written, and its other excellent qualities, completely remove it), we should not mention, to reprehend, a careless repetition of the same words which occur pages 53, and 155. The Editor has made this work too deservedly popular, for us to suffer him even to no, even without a nudge.

KINGSTON, U. C. August 8.

The Crops, throughout the Province, are generally good this season. In some parts of the country a great deal of sickness has recently prevailed, which, together with frequent showers of rain, has retarded the progress of the harvest, and occasioned loss to the Farmer.—U. C. Herald.

MONTREAL, August 12, 1826.

We are sorry to have to announce a melancholy instance of sudden death, occasioned by the drinking of cold water while in a high state of perspiration. On Thursday evening last, Jeremiah Holmes, Esq. of the firm of McDonald & Holmes, merchants in this city, took a walk into the country. On his return he felt himself warm and thirsty, and imprudently requested a glass of water. In order also that the water might be the more cool, he directed the servant to let the pipe run for some time. Having finished his draught he retired to bed. On the following morning he was found dead; and from the appearance of the body, the medical gentlemen are of opinion that his death must have happened within half an hour after he had swallowed the fatal beverage. We hope this additional example of the danger of drinking water in hot weather will not be disregarded; and that we will not soon be under the painful necessity of recording a similar catastrophe. What adds to the regret on the present occasion, the victim was a young man universally respected.—Morn. Herald.

On Wednesday last, a visitation was held in the Protestant Episcopal Church of this city, by the Right Rev. and Hon. C. James Stewart, D. D. Lord Bishop of this Diocese. All the Clergymen in the See, 25 in number, with the exception of three, were present; and after listening to an able discourse from the Rev. S. S. Wood, Rector of Drummondville, on the duties of pastor and people, were addressed by his Lordship. His charge in the words of a contemporary, "was replete with that Christian humanity, piety, and truly Apostolic feeling which are the most prominent points in his Lordship's character." An excellent dinner was given at the Masonic Hall Hotel, by their hospitable Diocesan, to the Reverend Gentlemen.—Morn. Herald.

MONTREAL, August 12th.

Sir, In consequence of the excitement and prejudice which exists with many of our inhabitants against the character of the Rev. George Bourne, of Quebec, charging him with having written a certain communication published in the Boston Recorder, and signed Paratus, I feel it my duty to state, that a letter has been received in Quebec, and publicly read from the Pulpit, exonerating him from any participation in, or knowledge of the affair whatever, until it appeared in Public Print, and I would observe, that I do not make this communication for the sake of the Rev. Gentleman, whose character stands on its own basis, but for the satisfaction of those, who are in error, with respect to it.—(Communicated to the Courant Aug. 9th.)

QUEBEC, AUGUST 15, 1826.

We are indebted to Captain REID of the Posthumous for the perusal of Bell's Messenger of the 25th June, but find in it no Foreign intelligence or any thing interesting, except the account of the proceedings at the different Elections.

His Majesty was in perfect health, and taking his usual rides from Windsor to Virginia Water, where he enjoys his aquatic excursions, and usually dines on board one of the Barges on the Lake. His Majesty has been pleased to direct, by his order in Council, the fee hitherto demanded at the Admiralty, from Officers of the Royal Navy, on obtaining leave of absence to go abroad, shall be discontinued in future.—The Duke of York's health continues improving.

The weather has been oppressively warm for some time past, and the harvest in the surrounding country appears nearly ripe for the sickle.

The body which we mentioned to have been discovered by Mr. Chasseur, has not been allowed to be removed, the following particulars respecting it are copied from the (Old) Gazette.

Mr. Chasseur, who had obtained permission from the Magistrate and Elders to lift the body of a woman, found undecayed in the old Cemetery of St. Francois, Riviere du Sud, after being buried forty-five years, went down on Friday to convey it to his Museum at Quebec, but meeting with opposition from the inhabitants and her relatives, some of the children being still alive, properly abandoned the project. The body is to be re-interred in the parish church. It has, however, been examined by several medical practitioners.

It appears that the body is neither petrified, nor ossified, but that it has been preserved from its extraordinary fatness. The subject was a woman of remarkable size, now measuring seventeen inches across the hips, who had died in child-birth. The head and part of the feet were wanting, but the other parts of the body were quite perfect and the flesh retained its fullness and freshness: This was the case also with the interior coatings of the body, particularly the lungs and stomach, into which large incisions were made. External portions of the body resembled in colour and consistency very hard tallow, and its chemical analysis might throw some light upon its nature.

The Orient, White, the other of this year's tea ships, was to leave Canon on the 20th February, and is now due at this port.

Mr. Kean has renewed an engagement at Montreal for five nights, so that he will probably not play at Quebec before the middle of next week. Mr. Kean has written that he would come to Quebec, and Mr. Spiller of the Royal Circus has gone up to Montreal to enter upon an engagement with him. Mr. Kean plays Macbeth to-night in Montreal, Mrs. Gilfert plays Lady Macbeth.

We understand that Mr. Davis, Ring-Master at the Circus, has opened his Riding School, which is attended by several respectable Scholars. Mr. Davis is said to be very capable of giving instructions, both to Ladies and Gentlemen, in the attainment of this useful and elegant accomplishment.

THEATRE.

We had great pleasure in declaring in our last Number the gratification we derived from the exquisite performance of Juliet, by Mrs. Barnes, and we have now to acknowledge ourselves indebted to Mr. Barnes for the rich treat his comic talents afforded on Saturday evening last, when he appeared in the Farce of "TURN OUT" as the simple, true-loving and awkwardly "purrito," Gregory Grant. The rusticity of the Devonshire gawky was happily personified, whilst the tender remembrance he cherished for his sweetheart, Sally Smallfry, was irresistibly ludicrous. Mr. Faulkner, in the same piece, played Restive, and gave the irascible, visionary, politician a full share of animation, whilst he carefully avoided overacting, even in the scenes where his most obstreperous anger was provoked. The Juliet of Thursday night was on this occasion Marian Ramsay, the naïveté which Mrs. Barnes infused into the character, rendered it a most interesting performance. Mr. Barnes also, on the same evening, appeared as Nipperkin in O'Keel's well-known musical piece of "Sprigs of Laurel."—The cunning drunkard was as well supported as the simple rustic had been in the first farce, and in no way suffered from the distinct recollection we retained of both Munden and Bernard in the same character. We experienced but one drawback from the pleasure of the evening, and that was, at observing the very scanty audience attracted by the display of so much talent. We confess that we think the Manager would consult his true interest if he closed the Theatre on Saturday night, since we are informed that it has invariably been a losing night, at all seasons of the year, and it is hardly fair on his part, towards the talented strangers now with the Circus Company, to expose them to the mortification of playing almost to the empty air.

That excellent actress Mrs. Spiller takes her benefit this Evening, together with young Arthur, a juvenile performer of the smallest size, but of by no means diminutive abilities.

Poetry.

SONG.

Composed for a German Air.

When back we look on happier years,
How oft the musing eye
Is quench'd in swoll'n and bitter tears,
Shed o'er their memory!

For scenes remote will still appear
Thou present scenes more bright—
As only distant landscapes wear
The robe of azure light.

Who saith the present moment is
All that belongs to man?
'Tis quickly gone— in woe or bliss—
A point in life's brief span.

Yet Memory's sweet and soothing power
Recalls each season flown,
And many a bright departed hour
Becomes again our own.
