MONTREAL (CP) — A labor arbitrator has upheld the firing of a hotel pantry maid who took home bones to give to a friend's dog. Maria Onecha, who worked at the posh downtown Chateau Champlain for five years, was fired last December for removing the seemingly-worthless bones, which she said she thought she had permission to do. But hotel personnel who testified before arbitrator Harvey Frumkin noted that the bones — some of which weighed more than three kilograms — had enough meat for three meals.

SCOC rules Youth Act sections 'inoperative'

OTTAWA (CP) — The right of a citizen to place charges against an offender takes precedence over sections of a Quebec law aimed at keeping juveniles out of court, the Supreme Court of Canada ruled Tuesday. Chief Justice Bora Laskin stopped short of declaring sections of the Quebec Youth Protection Act unconstitutional, but said in his ruling they were "inoperative" in the case that came before the court. The affair started when a woman went to police to charge a juvenile with robbery. Quebec authorities said the charge could not be placed because the youth protection law took precedence over the federal Juvenile Delinquents Act and a Criminal Code provision allowing a citizen to file such charges. The youth protection law provides that a director of youth protection, appointed by the provincial government, can step in to protect a juvenile before charges are placed. The trial judge, upheld by the Quebec Court of Appeal, ruled that the Juvenile Delinquents Act and the Criminal Code take precedence over the Quebec law.

The supreme court was then asked to rule on the constitutional validity of the Quebec law. Laskin said he did not think an assessment of validity was needed. The youth protection law appeared to be within provincial legislative competence, but did not take precedence over the Juvenile Delinquents Act or the Criminal Code provision.

Suffragette Therese Casgrain dies at 85

Therese Casgrain, socialist and defender, died overnight Monday at 85.

MONTREAL (CP) — Therese Casgrain, an aristocrat who considered herself a humanist and who became one of Canada's most indefatigable suffragettes, socialists and defenders, died in her sleep Tuesday. She was 85.

She is credited with being the driving force behind a 14-year fight to give Quebec women the vote in provincial elections, a right gained in 1940, and she was a strong fighter for unionization and better pay for the province's school teachers.

She was an early leader of the province's consumer movement, worked for nuclear disarmament and was a strong critic of Canada's role in the Vietnam War.

Casgrain ran for office nine times, once as an independent Liberal and the rest as a member of the Co-operative Commonwealth Federation, forerunner of the NDP, of which she was Quebec president. But the only post to which she was elected was that of church warden in her parish of St. Leon-de-Westmount and she remarked once: "An election defeat doesn't kill anybody."

In October 1970, she was appointed to the Senate as the NDP's first member of the upper house. She was a senator for only nine months until she reached the mandatory retirement age of 75.

She sat as an independent after breaking with the NDP and coming out in favor of the War Measures Act. She spoke out about English-Canadian tendency to treat Quebecers as second class and harassed the government about the sale of Canadian-made napalm to U.S. forces in Vietnam.

STUMPED QUEBEC Last year during Quebec's referendum campaign, aged 84 and as elegant and energetic as ever, she stumped the province on behalf of Canada with the Yvettes, a team of women activists, professionals and politicians of all ethnic backgrounds. Afterwards she kept on lobbying, speaking and writing for the elderly, the poor and the rights of native women.

At 19 she married Pierre Casgrain who, before he died, was a Liberal Member of Parliament, Speaker of the House of Commons, secretary of state and a judge. She is survived by four children, 17 grandchildren and five great-grandchildren.

"Unfortunately, my married life only lasted 33 years," she told an interviewer after her biography A Woman in a Man's World was published in 1971. "It takes a very great man to let his wife be somebody."

Born in Montreal into the Quebec establishment, she spent most of her life fighting it and said: "Had I been born a man, I'd either be prime minister of Canada or in jail. What a choice!"

The daughter of Sir Rodolphe Forget, financier and Conservative politician, she grew up in a small world of power, wealth and influence in a family that traced its roots back to the beginning of French settlement on the continent.

HOME LAVISH

The sprawling family country home in Saint-Irene-les-Bains, beside the St. Lawrence River east of Quebec City, had 16 bedrooms, a Turkish room, a Japanese room, stables to house the ponies on which the children of the family learned to ride, bowling lanes, a tennis court, an indoor pool, and 10 live-in servants.

A local workman once greeted her mother with the words: "Lady Forget, you remind me of Queen Victoria in her Vatican."

She considered herself a practical person and used to criticize militant feminists for missing the point.

In 1971, when some Quebec women were campaigning to be allowed into the traditional male bastion of taverns, she said: "I don't mind a glass of beer but I can't for the world understand the big fuss."

"I would think it far more important to devote time and energy to fighting for equal pay for equal work, or for day nurseries."

Tardif unaware of aide bribe proposal

QUEBEC (CP) — Quebec Housing Minister Guy Tardif says he didn't know until reading a newspaper story this week that his former aide had suggested a $50,000 payment to an employee with damaging information about the Quebec Housing Corp.

The aide, Jean Foisy, said last week his suggestion was a "serious error of judgment," but was meant "just as a joke."

Questioned by reporters during a news conference Tuesday, Tardif said Foisy told him last year of allegations that Jean-Roch Boivin, Premier Rene Levesque's chief aide, was involved in attempts to bribe Yvan Latouche, who was aware of irregularities within the corporation's major repairs division. Boivin has denied the allegations.

Tardif said Boivin's name came up in a discussion of a claim by Duroc Construction that the corporation owed it $1 million.

The minister said he was "furious" when Foisy told him that "there are lots of things happening here that you don't know about."

Tardif added that he has not spoken to Foisy officially since that time.

Tardif called Boivin to tell him about the allegations "just as I would do for anyone if I heard that kind of rumour about them."

"A few days later I got an answer. Boivin called saying the rumors probably started because Duroc was ready to offer $50,000 to anyone who could resolve the dossier."

"I think you can understand that's a small sum compared to what it could cost the company in the courts," he said.

"Nobody more than myself would like to have this cleared up," Tardif said, noting however that a public inquiry could only be called by the justice department.

Talk of a scandal in the corporation has been going on for nearly a year. The charges of irregularities, including nepotism and the awarding of contracts without tender, revolve around contractor Luc Cyr, who was in charge of the major repairs division.

Cyr was hired for the job on Boivin's recommendation, with the approval of Premier Levesque.

Shuttle launch delayed

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. (AP) — Launch of the shuttle Columbia was delayed today, with just 31 seconds left in its sunrise countdown, due to a "possible problem with the software."

Astronauts Joe Engle and Richard Truly were strapped in their cockpit seats, ready to fly, when the countdown clock was stopped at 7:48 a.m. EST.

Launch officials immediately set out to find and fix the computer trouble and there was a possibility a launch might come later today.

NASA officials say it appears that the earliest a second launch attempt could be made this morning is about 10 a.m. EST.

If not, the liftoff on Columbia's second test flight will be delayed two days at least.

Launch control spokesman Hugh Harris, caught by surprise when the countdown clock stood still, said the problem was not known but appeared to be in the computer software, or programming.

Columbia is computer controlled, with four main units and a backup unit on board.

A last-minute problem also halted the first attempt to launch Columbia on her maiden mission last April, and the problem then, as now, was with computers. It was fixed and the ship launched two days late.

Gunfight kills cop, second hurt

MONTREAL (CP) — A young suburban policeman was fighting for his life today after being shot by three bank robbers who also killed his partner on Tuesday.

Constables Serge Gagnon, 25, and Michel Vincent, 26, were gunned down when they literally walked into a volley of bullets while answering an alarm at a branch of the National Bank of Canada in suburban Longueuil.

Vincent was shot twice in the head and died moments later.

Gagnon, shot twice in the chest and once in the arm, was rushed to hospital and underwent a four-hour operation during which his left lung was removed.

He was wheeled into the operating room a second time early today in an attempt to stop internal bleeding.

"The dead officer didn't have a chance," said another witness. "He was shot just as he got out of the police car. It was horrible."

Although Gagnon managed to fire at the bandits, Longueuil police believe none of the bullets hit their mark.

Iltis contract boosts Bombardier confidence

By Stephen McDougall

VALCOURT — Things are looking up for Bombardier Inc., originally a snowmobile manufacturer and now diversified into such areas as mass transportation, railway locomotives and heavy equipment. And, it is securing the future of yet another division created three years ago, that of Logistics vehicles, or put in laymen's terms, military support vehicles.

Though this division is quite young and has only secured one contract so far, the manufacture of 2,762 army trucks for the Canadian Armed Forces, Normand Carpentier is certain it won't be their last.

Carpentier, president of the industrial products group at Bombardier, expresses confidence that this division will bear considerable fruit not only on defence contracts at home, but in future export sales to other countries in the NATO alliance, as well as countries considered friendly to North America.

One reason Carpentier is confident about future defence contracts is the recent agreement with Volkswagen of West Germany for exclusive worldwide rights to manufacture and market a four-wheel-drive vehicle called the Iltis, which is used in the West German forces as a jeep.

For Bombardier, the vehicle could mean a further contract with the Canadian Department of National Defense of over $60 million. It would also mean the company could sell the vehicle to other countries since Volkswagen, with the selling of its rights, will no longer make the vehicle.

And the prospects for that contract looked even rosier when Minister of National Defense, Gilles Lamontagne, told reporters three weeks ago that Bombardier was "virtually certain" to win a $60 million contract, which would most certainly point to the Iltis.

But according to Carpentier, the Iltis does have a competitor — the M 151 jeep — manufactured by American Motors in the United States. American Motors, which has been in the forefront of jeep designs for years, has been building the M 151 since the early seventies and has sold a large amount of the vehicles to Canada since 1974.

But this time the M 151 could find it difficult to be favored by the defense ministry. Many members of the Armed Forces find the M 151 poor in quality and maneuverability.

Hunters warned: Beware of atrazine residue

By Merritt Clifton

SUTTON — The agricultural chemical atrazine may be dangerously contaminating meat from wild game animals, Concordia University professor M.F. Malik believes. Malik, a Doctor of Science and professor of chemistry for the past 17 years, argues that while "You will not get sick from eating one meal" of contaminated meat, "it has a long-range effect" that hunters should be aware of.

Malik warned hunters in the Cowansville Guide last week that because "This year, unusual acreage of farming land was planted with corn," and treated with atrazine to help the corn crop, "eating wild animals from the vicinity of such farming land could be potentially dangerous for humans." He stresses that the danger isn't inherent in atrazine use, although like all hydrocarbon-based fertilizers, "Atrazine is very lethal. You must wear a mask when applying it."

Rather, in normal farm use, Malik considers atrazine a very good fertilizer and pest-killer, very beneficial to corn, encouraging growth. It can be detected in the ground only for several weeks after use." Atrazine is usually applied as either a coating on seeds, or a powdery spray right after planting. It combats nightshade, jimsonweed, cocklebur, nutedge, and quackgrass, all common cornfield weeds, without harming the corn itself. "So the mature corn is not affected," Malik continues, "nor the beef or any animals feeding on it. But most wildlife — rabbits, grouse, deer, waterfowl — eat seedlings or planted seeds" in spring "because in that part of the year there is a shortage of other forage. The chemical accumulates within the animal and is stored there for several years" in body tissues, unless the animal ingests a lethal quantity.

More often, each individual animal ingests a sub-toxic dose of atrazine. But as other, bigger animals eat smaller animals that have been contaminated, they in turn accumulate larger doses, so that the animals at the top of the food chain are most likely to be poisoned. In Brome-Missisquoi, where rabbits, grouse, and especially deer have few natural predators, hunters are at the top of the food chain.

PM urges premiers to accept Davis trade-off

OTTAWA (CP) — Prime Minister Trudeau is hoping to convince some other provinces to embrace a proposal by Ontario Premier William Davis aimed at breaking the year-long constitutional logjam.

Playing the role of mediator at a constitutional conference Tuesday, Davis suggested that talks focus on a major trade-off by both Trudeau and the eight premiers who have been opposing his proposals for the last year.

The Davis suggestion would involve acceptance by Trudeau of the amending formula favored by the eight dissenting premiers. In return, the eight would accept a slightly-modified version of the charter of rights Trudeau wants entrenched in the constitution.

Trudeau hopes some of the eight "will fall off the branch" today and accept something close to the Davis proposal, a highly-placed federal official said Tuesday night following an emergency cabinet meeting of more than two hours.

New Brunswick Premier Richard Hatfield, who along with Davis has been Trudeau's only other provincial ally in the constitutional debate, was reported to be willing to accept the Ontario premier's suggestion.

Most premiers refused comment on the Davis suggestion following a day of hectic and often confusing negotiations. For several hours proposals and counter-proposals flew between a downtown hotel suite, where the eight dissenting premiers met, and the government Conference Centre, where Trudeau and his two provincial allies were located.

Davis acted as a go-between during part of the talks, which according to some provincial sources, were not always friendly.

COMPROMISE REJECTED

Trudeau rejected a different compromise proposal delivered to him Tuesday by Peter Lougheed of Alberta, Bill Bennett of British Columbia and John Buchanan of Nova Scotia because the rights charter would have been watered down considerably, both provincial and federal sources said.

"They hit up against the same kind of incomprehensible wall that we've known for over a year," Quebec Premier Rene Levesque angrily told reporters.

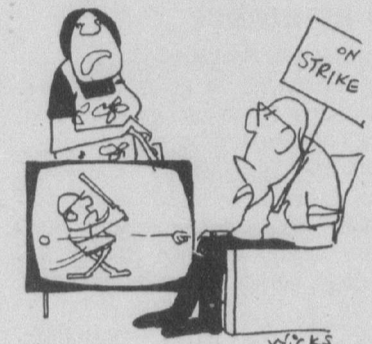

The so-called Vancouver amending formula favored by the eight dissenting premiers requires the consent of Parliament and seven provinces representing at least 50 per cent of the country's population.

Trudeau has opposed this formula because up to three provinces could opt out of agreements signed by the others, creating what he calls a "checkerboard Canada."

Although both Trudeau and Justice Minister Jean Chretien said Tuesday they are still opposed to this opting-out provision, they are willing to accept some form of the Vancouver formula if the provinces accept a charter of rights.

Queen face will stay on postage stamps

OTTAWA (CP) Prime Minister Trudeau's "loyalty to the Queen" was defended Tuesday as the opposition questioned government plans for 1983 postage stamps.

Andre Ouellet, minister responsible for the new Canada Post corporation, flatly denied in the Commons that the government has issued instructions to stop printing stamps bearing portraits of Queen Elizabeth now or in the next six years.

And he turned down requests for bargain-priced stamps for senior citizens and the handicapped, saying it is not the job of the post office to assist the needy.

Ouellet was obviously offended by questions from Bud Bradley, Progressive Conservative postal critic, who said officials in the post office design department say they have received instructions to remove the Queen from 1983 stamps.

Ouellet denied the charge, reminding Bradley of Trudeau's announcement last week that the Queen would be kept on 1982 issues after postal officials said she might be dumped in an effort to "Canadianize" the country's stamps.

The prime minister, whose feelings about the monarchy have been questioned in the past, "showed clearly last week his loyalty to the Queen," Ouellet said.

DENIES ALLEGATION
The minister said he was surprised by Bradley's allegation.

"Somebody, somewhere is really trying to create a situation that doesn't exist."

Bradley, MP for Haldimand-Norfolk riding in Ontario, then suggested the post office print half-price stamps for senior citizens and the needy.

If the proposed 30-cent first-class postage rate is approved by the government for 1982, these groups would thus pay only 15 cents to mail a regular letter.

But Ouellet replied that while all MPs sympathize with the plight of the needy, the post office is not an institution designed to provide social assistance. There are other programs for that.

Walter McLean, Tory MP for Waterloo, Ont., asked Secretary of State Gerald Regan to seek reduced postal rates for national voluntary associations but the minister sidestepped the question.

Irate Soviet captain refuses to leave sub

STOCKHOLM (AP) — The skipper of a Soviet submarine that ran aground in Swedish waters is refusing to leave his ship for further interrogation after two sessions that the Swedes said did not produce a satisfactory explanation for his penetration of a restricted military area.

"We must stick to a clear-cut and firm Swedish stand and not give in to the Soviet demands to hold all sessions aboard the submarine," said Lt.-Gen. Sven-Olov Olsson, the head of the military command in south Sweden.

Olsson said such technical matters as the functioning of the sub's navigation equipment might be sorted out best aboard the submarine, which Swedish tugs refloated Monday and towed to an anchorage in inner Gaese Bay.

But he said the question of how and why the sub entered Swedish waters south of the Karlskrona naval base should be discussed elsewhere in private.

Meanwhile, Soviet Ambassador Mikhail Yakovlev called on Foreign Minister Ola Ullsten to "convey Soviet views on the handling" of the incident.

a Foreign Ministry spokesman said.

The captain of the sub, Lt.-Cmdr. Pyotr Gushin, continued to claim that a "mistake in navigation due to faulty equipment and fog" caused him to run aground eight nights ago in an archipelago off the southeast coast. But Olsson said this was "not a credible answer."

The Swedish government has said the sub and its crew of about 56 men will not be released until it receives a satisfactory explanation for the violation of Swedish waters. Swedish officials contend that the ship was fitted with intelligence-gathering equipment for spy missions and that it could have made its way through the islands to the area where it ran aground only by skilled manoeuvring.

The Soviet government would not allow Gushin to be questioned outside his ship until Monday. He was interrogated for seven hours then on a Swedish torpedo boat anchored outside the restricted zone and submitted to 45 minutes more of interrogation Tuesday aboard his sub. But Swedish officers said he insisted he has been instructed not to leave his ship again.

McGill wants $8 M million

MONTREAL (CP) — Faced with a $14-million deficit this year, McGill University is asking its 3,200 employees to lend it $8 million by accepting reduced salary increases.

The university is also considering selling some of the art objects it owns to save the rest of its multi-million dollar collection.

Women picket Steinberg store

MONTREAL (CP) — About a dozen women picketed a downtown Steinberg Inc. supermarket Tuesday to demand price reductions in Quebec equal to those the company is offering at its Ontario stores.

A spokesman for a consumer group said Steinberg is using its profits in Quebec to wage a price war in Ontario.

Last week, the supermarket chain cut the cost of 2,000 grocery products by an average 18.5 per cent in 73 Ontario stores.

Police battle protesters

FRANKFURT (AP) — Hundreds of riot police battled more than 3,500 demonstrators Tuesday in downtown Frankfurt as protests intensified against the construction of a third runway at the Rhein-Main airport.

Peaceful demonstrations, organized by environmentalists who say thousands of trees will be destroyed to make way for the runway, were reported in Berlin, Wiesbaden, Freiburg and Stuttgart.

'Machine gun Granny' arrested

GENOA, Italy (Reuter) — A 74-year-old woman, dubbed Machine Gun Granny by the Italian press, joined 13 other alleged Red Brigades members in a Genoa courtroom cage Tuesday on the opening day of their trial.

Caterina Picasso, a widow, is believed to be the oldest person ever accused of belonging to the notorious guerrilla group.

Soviet tanks widen highway

NEW DELHI (AP) — Soviet tanks have begun leveling homes, mosques and other structures along a major Afghan highway to clear passage for supply convoys, a reliable report from Afghanistan said Tuesday.

The move to demolish buildings on both sides of the Kabul-Gardez highway began several days ago and was proceeding along a 48-kilometre stretch of the road in Logar Province.

Priest told victims funds would finance leper colony

NEWMARKET, Ont. (CP) — He told his trusting victims that the profits would help a leper colony in Africa, but after going through $300,000 and facing 34 charges of fraud, Rev. Pius Emmanuel Finnin finally is going to jail.

The Roman Catholic priest was sentenced Tuesday to four years in prison after pleading guilty to swindling a long line of parishioners, relatives and fellow priests.

One elderly woman lost her life savings in Finnin's schemes to reap tremendous profits from uranium mines, and the family whose financial demise brought police to the case lost more than $50,000.

None of the money has been found and investigators say it probably is not even in the country.

Finnin's chequered career began in Bathurst, N.B., where he was ordained in 1951 but had to leave because of problems with an investment scheme. WENT TO U.S.

He went to the United States and later turned up in Saskatchewan. There, on the condition that he not solicit funds for himself or the church, he was given a temporary parish posting that lasted 12 years.

But in the mid-1970s he arrived in York Region, just north of Toronto, where he began assisting priests on an occasional basis and soliciting funds for investment from parishioners.

Two people he befriended were a farmer and his wife from nearby Markham, Ont., who operated a roadside vegetable stand. Finnin persuaded them to sink more than $50,000 — much of it borrowed — into his investment scheme, where the money would return at such a rate there would even be enough left over to help some African lepers.

Experiment to castrate sex offenders with drugs

CALGARY (CP) — Dr. Julio Arboleda-Florez wants to talk to rapists, peeping Toms, exhibitionists, transvestites and incestuous lovers.

The director of forensic sciences for Calgary General Hospital and southern Alberta is interviewing men with bizarre sexual tendencies in the hope they will participate in an experiment leaving them "temporarily castrated."

Volunteers will take pills each day containing the drug cyproterone, designed to reduce their sex drive.

"It's a form of medical castration," Arboleda-Florez explained.

He hopes that as his volunteers become less interested in sex, they will lose their urge to act out their perversions.

Arboleda-Florez is looking for 10 acceptable volunteers while co-researchers in Toronto and Ottawa each want 10 more.

Cyproterone has been used extensively in western Europe for several years to deal with sex offenders. Studies have shown it to be just as effective as surgical castration in reducing the number of sexual offences committed.

Weather

Wednesday will be sunny with a high of 5 to 7 and an overnight low of -2. Thursday will start off sunny and become cloudy later in the day with a high of 10.

However, the drug is still illegal in the United States and only received Canadian government approval earlier this year.

DRUG SAFE

Arboleda-Florez said he is not aware of any evidence the drug can cause physical harm if it is used properly and that most arguments against its use are ethical ones.

Size, specialization key to Bombardier good fortune

The Volkswagen's Iltis in competition with American Motors jeep for Canadian armed forces contracts, and which would be built exclusively by Bombardier in Valcourt.

in during the Vietnam war and in other countries aided by the United States, also has another black point. The Defense Ministry stipulates that any vehicle used by the Canadian Armed Forces must have Canadian content in its manufacture, the same sort of deal which was worked out for the truck contract. Bombardier, after having consulted with the government, negotiated a licence to manufacture 50 per cent of the American Motors-designed truck, notably the body and chassis, while importing the engines and drive train from American Motors.

For the M 151, the same arrangement would be made while 100 per cent of the Iltis manufacture would be Canadian, made exclusively by Bombardier probably at its Valcourt plant where the trucks are made.

When asked about the chances for the two vehicles, Carpentier will not say which has the better chance. But he would say the M 151 has had more use in NATO forces and felt the vehicle was still a proven vehicle despite its criticism. But he could not deny that if the Iltis were chosen by the defense ministry, Bombardier would benefit more in terms of employment, revenue, and research and development in future defense contracts.

For Bombardier, the contracts mean a new stage for their future growth. Already, financial market analysts are touting Bombardier as a favorable financial investment despite its loss of $5.77 million last year on sales of over $390 million.

Bombardier owes this good fortune to its size, its diversity and to the nature of the contracts.

"For most manufacturers 2,000 or 3,000 trucks is too small an order for them to do profitably, but for us it is just the right size," said Carpentier, whose company has been able for years to fill small specialized contracts for different companies and governments in vehicle and mass transportation equipment.

And Bombardier is also looking towards filling future contracts for various armies with both the present vehicle prototypes and its conventional tracked heavy equipment vehicles, which are used by both Canadian and U.S. government defense forces for land clearing, snow removal and other support purposes. But the possibilities are that Bombardier could expand into even more technologically advanced vehicles such as troop carriers and possibly armored vehicles if war ever broke out. But Carpentier cautions that such prospects are for the remote future. He said the only time the company ever tried such vehicles was when it worked with a Swedish manufacturer several years ago to develop a tracked vehicle. But it never got into the manufacturing stage because the Defense department simply was not interested at the time.

For now, Bombardier is concentrating on its truck contract, getting sub-contracts from its other divisions as well as outside companies arranged, working out the fine technical details with the ministry of defense, ordering materials and getting its manufacturing plant ready for the initial run, which Yvon Lafortune, head of Logistics, says should start in January of next year.

And the contract should please many people in the Armed Forces who have had to put up with their present 2½-ton truck which is dated back to 1956, having gone under several overhaul projects to keep them on the road.

The personnel can also hope their next jeep will be coming soon, since all they have for the present are 1967 and 1974 vintage American Motors models, which in the words of one defense ministry official "are falling apart".

Old school Inspectors had sense of humor

Some years ago a teacher in Wellington County unearthed a country school minute book which held a special interest for me. This book dates back to 1890 and includes financial statistics as well as the usual comments left by the Inspector after his official visits. And an entry made by the School Board Secretary in 1908 notes that the cost of operating the school rose from $380 per annum in 1905 to $500 in 1908 -- an increase, the secretary points out, of 31 per cent in just three years.

A subsequent entry reveals the board made some effort to get just a little more for its money however by requiring the teacher to light the fire in the morning and do the evening sweeping and cleaning.

The teacher must have registered some small protest it seems, because the following year the board let the cleaning job to a Mrs. S. Mountford, Sr., who at a yearly salary of $39 proved to be the lowest tender for the job.

In the notes left by the Inspector there is one cute little entry dated May 15, 1893 which reads: "Visited school today and was very pleased with way teacher conducted the lessons. Order was very good with the exception of two or three pupils who made themselves quite at home."

A year later, in much the same vein of humour, the Inspector says: "I asked one little fellow who was Prime Minister of our country and he said it was God."

Well I'm rather pleased to discover that even back in the reading and writing and hickory stick days, there were Inspectors who could be quite human. I was a country school teacher in that very county as a young man, and as late as 1934 I was receiving the princely sum of $525 a year. And my recollection of the Inspector is not nearly so pleasant. I found him pretty much of a tyrant -- a man who knew very well that his report could get you fired at the next board meeting and who obviously gloried in his power.

He could also whale the supreme bejassus out of a pupil too, and he sometimes did so more because he thought the teacher could profit by seeing how expertly it could be done rather than because the kid really deserved the whaling.

No wonder the kids became as unnaturally proper as the teacher when that Inspector's car was seen coming up the road.

But the cruelest thrust my Inspector ever made at me I think, was when he reported to my board that he didn't think I was earning my money. Since I taught all eight grades plus first year high school that year for my $525, I never forgave him for that. Especially after I learned that his salary was something over $4,000.

The Inspector's reign of terror seems to be pretty well over now, and for me it is entirely over. As a matter of fact now that I hold down the role of college professor to pay the feed bills I had surmised that there was nobody brave enough to check up on my teaching any more. But then just this week I noticed three very attentive students sitting at the back of the class and writing mysteriously on pink forms of some sort. And when I took some notice of them, one of the other students was good enough to warn me.

"Better make it good, sir," he said. "They're from the evaluating committee."

It shakes you a bit to learn that the pupils are now becoming the inspectors. But I at least have the satisfaction of knowing that even if they do officially insult me, they aren't going to get seven times my salary for doing it.

Festival des Cantons dies

SHERBROOKE (TB) — The Festival des Cantons is dead. Administrators, who suspended activity March 25, decided yesterday to terminate the festival. The decision came on the heels of reports by a number of committees set up to study the situation.

After six years of activity and one year of reflection, it became apparent the Festival could not survive in its present format. Financial loss, bad weather and opposition from many of the city's businessmen could not be overcome.

Members of the general assembly of the association will be asked to ratify the decision of the administration and, according to president Bernard Tanguay, there is not likely to be any opposition.

The administrative council is a damant however, that there is a place for a summer festival in Sherbrooke. To this end, the council has recommended interested groups take charge of preparations for a three-day Quebec folklore festival for 1982.

Doctor urges hunters have meat tested for atrazine

In addition, Malik explains, the contamination danger increases according to the amount of young corn included in a game animal's diet. A deer who lives in the forest three-quarters of the year, rather than cornfields, will ingest less atrazine than one who forages in cornfields all year long. An adult deer contains less atrazine buildup relative to body weight than a fawn, born in spring and exposed to atrazine-treated fields all summer.

Because atrazine is a relatively new chemical, Malik cannot predict how or when the effects of ingestion will appear in humans. Atrazine first came to his attention in Quebec only two years ago, when use in local cornfields dramatically increased, just about the time it was "banned in several provinces out west, I think Saskatchewan, Manitoba, and Alberta." Malik also believes atrazine and several related chemicals are "banned in at least half of the United States." He knows definitely that the Quebec department of fish and game recently warned hunters not to eat waterfowl shot in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, due to atrazine contamination, and that similar warnings have been issued in various parts of the U.S. He recalls that traces of atrazine were detected in the Yamaska River several years ago following fish-kills that followed spraying by Dmtar. Colin Mayfield of the University of Waterloo in Ontario has found trace levels of atrazine throughout the Great Lakes basin for the past three years. Even though the amount is less than one part per million, Mayfield suspects a similar connection with fish-kills there.

The most obvious effect of atrazine ingestion right now appears in wild animal carcasses. The brains and livers of animals that have accumulated significant atrazine doses do not decompose normally. Malik has "found several dead wild animals in the vicinity of my place," he says, "some of them with unusual meat decay, suggesting chemical overdose," but admits that at present he holds "only suspicion of this, nothing more."

Until more is known, Malik is "suggesting that those hunters who wish to consume their trophies get the meat tested for residues of chlorine hydrocarbon or other toxic substances, especially if meat will be served to children," who like the fawns can accumulate high atrazine dosages relatively quickly, particularly since "they may eat proportionally to their weight three to four times more meat than adult persons."

However, Malik grants that getting meat tested may not be all that easy. "It is very difficult for a private person to carry a dead animal all the way to Montreal," he acknowledges, and then wait for test results before eating any of it. In addition, atrazine is a difficult chemical to test for. The test involves burning a portion of meat, then immersing the ashes in a liquid solution.

Malik is not eager to see atrazine banned or restricted here. "How can we tell a farmer not to use something on his corn that increases his yield, only to protect deer and rabbits?" he asks. "We could not blame somebody who manufactures this stuff for farm use, nor could we blame the farmer."

Atrazine is presently sold in Quebec by Blue Seal Feeds, whose Richford, Vermont plant refused to show Malik their chemical formula for it, by Ciba-Geigy Canada Ltd., and by Pfizer Ltd., who recently began manufacturing a liquid version of it to replace pellets and powders. But atrazine faces stiff commercial competition from Monsanto's more versatile Roundup. Roundup kills a wider range of weeds while affecting fewer food crops. As Malik puts it, "If you use atrazine on your garden, it kills everything but corn for several years." Wheat, soybeans, and barley may be grown after Roundup treatments.

On the other hand, Roundup is less effective than atrazine in combatting certain particular cornfield weeds. Therefore many farmers have begun using both chemicals, in tandem or in rotation. Roundup was similarly touted as a potential replacement for the controversial phenoxy herbicide 2,4-D several years ago, and did cut into the 2,4-D market. Today, however, Roundup and 2,4-D are also commonly used together. As with atrazine, longterm effects from Roundup exposure are still largely unknown, but it is officially considered safe until proven otherwise, based on laboratory tests.

Career Week: Richmond Regional highlights career choices

By Charles Bury

RICHMOND — Career Week is under way at Richmond Regional High School and over 500 students here are getting an idea of the many different jobs they can seek when their studies are finished. Other high schools in the region are having their Career Weeks too, but Richmond administrators say they are giving the event "special" importance this year.

And today, over 100 Richmond students will be visiting the Champlain College-Bishop's University campus in Lennoxville to get a better look at the many different fields of study they can pursue when their high-school days are over. In a Career Bazaar which will gather youngsters from many local schools, professionals, representing over 60 job types, will vie for the students' attention along with recruiters from universities as far away as Kingston, Ontario. Starting Monday, students have been listening to speakers describe some of the ins and outs of different jobs, from heavy-equipment operator to newspaperman, agronomist to haute-cuisine chef and oceanographer.

A representative of the federal agricultural research station at Lennoxville told a group of students about the many different activities going on in farm research; a Richmond veterinarian described his work. Representatives of two French-language polyvalent high schools were present to speak of the courses they offer which are not available at local English-language schools, such as diesel mechanics and heavy-equipment operation.

Student Cathy Watson of Windsor said she attended a Monday afternoon session because she was "interested in hearing how to get into the newspaper business."

She said she liked writing and "wanted a career doing something I like."

But a newsman who arrived more than an hour late told the group of about 20 students they shouldn't go to journalism school if they want to work in newspapers, they should specialize in another subject area instead, perhaps following up with a post-graduate diploma from a communications school.

The newsman said journalism was not a difficult job "as long as you can spell." But the article he promised would appear in Tuesday's Record only appears today (Wednesday).

Editor Lisa Codrington of the Richmond yearbook The Reflector '82 said the students were looking forward to today's visit to Lennoxville to "find out more about careers."

Student Lynda Giguere said about 24 school buses moved students back and forth between their homes and the Richmond complex. Two busloads will be travelling to the Champlain-Bishop's campus.

Guidance counsellor Kevin Danaher said in an interview Richmond arranged the exchanges to "bring reality closer to the kids. When you get out of this joint," he said, "you've got to work."

Danaher added Richmond welcomed the delegations from the French-language schools, because French "helped them get jobs. It's either French or Ontario."

Ironically, Bishop's University, co-host of today's campus visit, recently decided to eliminate the position of recruiting officer, although recruiting teams from Kingston's Queen's University and Ottawa's Carleton University will be on hand to lure the students away from Quebec.

Townships talk

SHERBROOKE (TB) — A Ham North resident was fined $50 yesterday for threatening to break a plate over his aged mother's head during the course of the evening meal.

Rosaire Chretien was sentenced by Judge Bruno Cyr at sessions court after hearing testimony from neighbours to whom the elderly lady fled. Chretien was also ordered to behave like a good boy for one year.

LENNOXVILLE (TB) — The second in a series of Humanities lectures will take place at Bishop's University tomorrow night, Thursday, November 5 at 7:30 p.m. Dr. Stuart McKelvie of the department of psychology will give a paper entitled "Are we conscious of our minds?"

The lecture, which will take place in the MacKinnon Hall lounge, deals with the difficulty encountered by psychologists in their quest to understand the workings of the human mind.

Refreshments will be served following the presentation and members of the public are most welcome.

SWEETSBURG WARD (JM) — Francois Dery of Cartierville and Emile Lefebvre of South Stukely were cited to the next term of the assizes following preliminary hearings here yesterday on counts of attempted escape from legal custody, forcible detention of two prison guards and assault causing bodily harm to peace officers Bob Bell, 59, and 53-year-old Paul Tardif, both of Cowansville.

Crown attorney Claude Noiseux produced five witnesses who testified concerning the events at the maximum-security provincial Sweetburg jail on October 1. Dery and Lefebvre stood mute at voluntary statement.

Co-accused Emilien Cote, of Lachine, and Richard Patient of Magog, renounced their rights to preliminary hearings on identical counts and with the consent of the crown and the defence were cited to jury trial according to terms of article 476 of the criminal code by Judge Guy Genest.

Thérèse Casgrain

The women of Canada lost one of their best friends yesterday with the passing of Therese Casgrain. Through most of her 85 years, she was one of French-Canada's few spokespersons for women's rights and just about the only one with continuing credibility.

Casgrain was a political person, although the highest (and only) elected office she ever held was as a warden at St. Leon de Westmount church. She ran for MNA and MP a total of nine times, for the Co-operative Commonwealth Federation (CCF), later the NDP. But Quebec wasn't ready for her, or for a woman deputy.

She fought against the things she found wrong with society, whether they were women's issues or not. She broke with the NDP when, as a rookie senator at age 74 in 1970, she came out in favor of the War Measures Act. She harassed the government for letting Canadian industry supply the U.S. with napalm for its war in Vietnam. She was a shining leader of the 'Non' forces in last year's referendum, travelling the province to speak to wild applause at the 'Yvette' rallies which turned out to be the major force in the federalists' victory.

Born to a wealthy family, she spent her life defending the causes of the poor, deprived and disenfranchised. From a prominent Conservative family (her father was Sir Rodolphe Forget), she sided with the left, rather than the right. "The left is the side of the heart" was her credo.

Always modest about her many accomplishments, she will be missed more than she would have ever guessed.

CHARLES BURY

The names have changed but the game is the same

By Carl Mollins

WASHINGTON (CP) — The names change, positions shift, but the power games are much the same as they were 25 years ago this week when the world felt the reality of the new era of superpower politics in dramatic and dangerous counterpoint.

It was, in 1956, the climactic week of what came to be known clinically but fearfully at the time simply as Hungary and Suez.

On Nov. 4 that year, Soviet tanks crushed an insurgency in Hungary in what proved to be a pattern for Czechoslovakia in 1968 and potentially for Poland today.

Two days later, U.S. pressure forced British and French troops to retreat from an invasion of Suez in a move that converted the United States into the major armorer and thus political power in the Middle East, as demonstrated in the wars of 1966 and 1973 and currently in a record sale of weaponry to Saudi Arabia.

These coincident episodes of political violence confirmed the demise of 19th-century colonialism, of accompanying spheres of influence, of any lingering idea of European power blocs based on coalitions of equals.

Suez and Hungary instead established in stark practice the new imperialism of superpowers, where only the United States and the Soviet Union truly counted in global competition.

The United States, in its enforced settlement of a Suez crisis it had helped provoke, laid claim to a pre-eminence in the Middle East and — by an implication later tested in Southeast Asia — elsewhere.

The Soviet Union, in its suppression of Hungarian nationalism without challenge from the West, affirmed hegemony over an outland of buffer states, lately extended to Afghanistan.

The separate but balancing U.S. and Soviet interventions each constituted a challenge to the other, but they stepped back in a kind of grumbling understanding.

Today, although the policies of the two superpowers are occasionally challenged by China or states within either the Atlantic Alliance or the Warsaw Pact, the Washington-Moscow power struggle remains the main contest.

OTHERS WATCH

Others can only stand and fret.

Commentators in the bystander role, notably in Europe, see superpower competition now as being at least as fervent under Ronald Reagan and Leonid Brezhnev, Alexander Haig and Andrei Gromyko, as in the days of Dwight Eisenhower and Nikita Khrushchev, John Foster Dulles and Dimitri Shepilov.

Paranoia, a lack of confidence, once again seem central features of U.S. foreign policy, the world and its political components cast in simple reds and whites, as it was a quarter-century ago after notorious Washington witch-hunts for subversives.

Moscow appears from reports here to be suffering a similar crisis of self-confidence, as it was in 1956 following Khrushchev's disruptive denunciation of Stalinist communism.

The sense in both superpowers of systems under siege seems to have erased the intervening years of detente and attempted disarmament.

The superpower order has never really admitted attempts by others to stand aside, or to form a power bloc of the non-aligned — an attempt launched the year before Suez and Hungary at Bandung, Indonesia. Moscow tended, damagingly, to claim these would-be neutrals as its own, while Washington dismisses them still as crypto-Communists.

For Canada, the events of 25 years ago confirmed what Canadian historian Donald Creighton has portrayed as its submissive role in a world of superpowers. The late Lester Pearson, then Canadian external affairs minister, won a Nobel Peace Prize for promoting a formula for what Washington wanted in the Middle East — the withdrawal of the Europeans and Israel from Suez.

Establishment's Newman says he's still an outsider

By Art Chamberlain

TORONTO (CP) — The man who made The Canadian Establishment a book title as well as a sociological description insists he's not a member of the group.

Peter Newman says he's an outsider, "almost a professional outsider."

"First of all I'm an immigrant (most establishment members are native Canadian) and as a journalist you have to be an outsider, on the other side of the barricades," he said during an interview in the office he occupies as editor of Maclean's. He came to Canada from Czechoslovakia as a child in 1940.

Newman, leaning back in his chair, both feet on the desk revealing that he wears grey wool socks with his pin-stripe suit, spends much of his day talking to the wealthy and lunching with them at their favorite spots but insists it's all part of the job.

"You're not going to get anything of interest if physically you stay outside."

PLANS CHANGED

Newman's latest book, The Acquisitors, the second volume of his planned series on the Canadian establishment, is not the book he thought he was going to write.

The first, published in 1975, detailed the men who wielded the economic power in the country — Bud McDougald, E. P. Taylor and others of their generation. The second book was to be about the Jewish establishment but Newman became fascinated by the role of one family and in 1978 published The Bronfman Dynasty.

Then he intended to turn back to the establishment, only to find the players had changed. McDougald was dead, Taylor was no longer a force and the economic rise of the West had shifted power in that direction.

Newman set out to write about the new establishment and started with Conrad Black, the new head of Argus Corp. He quickly realized Black was a case apart from the new power group and will make him the subject of a separate book.

DESCRIBES NEW BREED

His latest book looks at the rise of what he calls the Acquisitors, the newly rich who shun the Protestant ethic of the former power brokers and happily spend their money on new possessions. He writes that their way of life "amounts to little more than creative selfishness."

He doesn't pass judgement on their approach to life and admits he had great fun stringing together the anecdotes about people who tear down $500,000 homes to make room for more expensive ones and give their wives Rolls Royces for birthday presents.

While he likes to write about the wild life, Newman says he doesn't live it. He describes his own existence as ascetic with little room for parties and socializing.

He's in bed by nine most nights and up at four to put on a Stan Kenton record and start writing.

But even for an ascetic it's not easy to get out of bed at 4 a.m. He wears two wrist-watches with built-in alarms. "The first goes off to get me out of a deep sleep and 15 minutes later the other one buzzes to get me up."

Putting aside his pipe and leaning over his desk to rip up an old matchbook, Newman says that he's excited by the new members of the establishment.

"They have a spirit of adventure like the fur traders who risked their lives to establish the Hudson's Bay Co. The difference is that the acquirers are risking their psyches and souls."

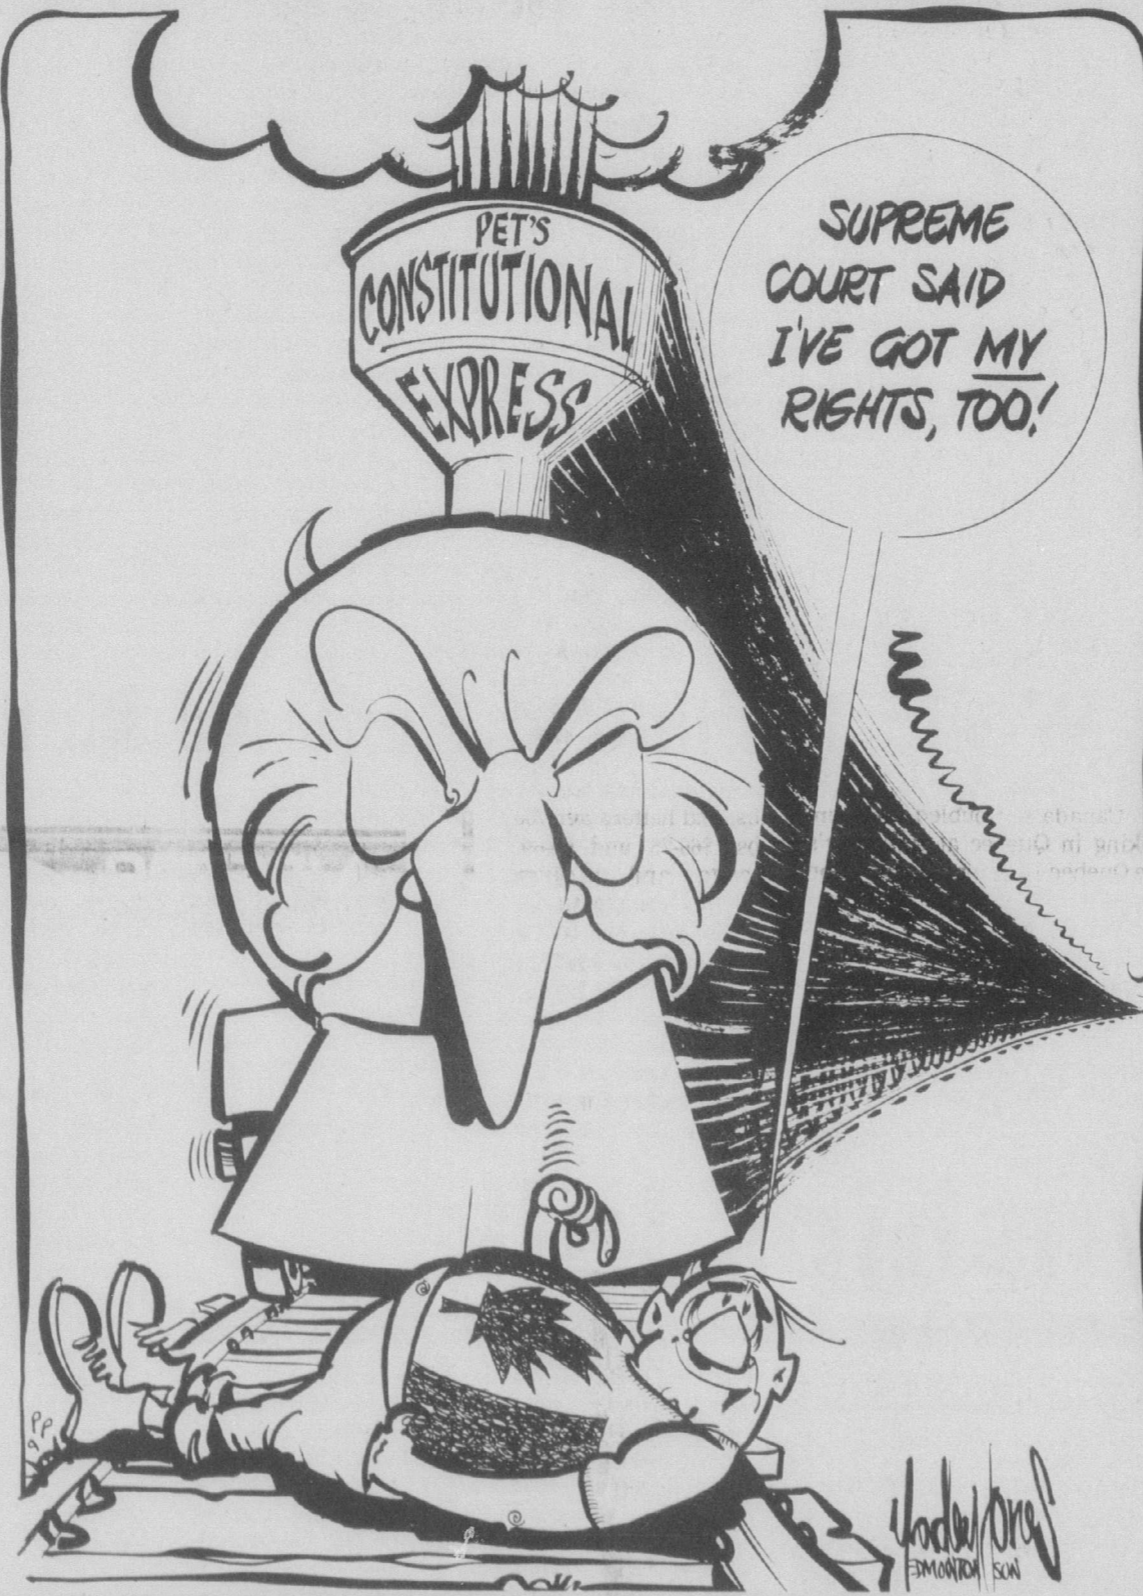

Newman expects that over the next few years these risks will pay off for the average Canadian with jobs in a batch of new high-technology industries.

"These are people who will determine whether free enterprise lives or dies in Canada," he says and there is no question he hopes it will live.

Although Newman thinks the subjects of his book will appreciate that it "grants them recognition as a new class," some have rushed to the phone to call their lawyers.

The Toronto Star and The Financial Post apologized to a Toronto woman for a reference to her in an excerpt from the book that they published. The issue now is in court to decide whether changes will be required in the book.

"What the establishment values most is privacy and I'm invading that privacy," Newman says.

Knowles missed by Commons

OTTAWA (CP) — Although Stanley Knowles still is in Ottawa Civic Hospital, recovering from surgery following a brain hemorrhage Oct. 2, his heart is in the House of Commons where he is the longest-serving member.

Minutes before the Commons resumed this month, he telephoned Speaker Jeanne Sauve "to tell me he is with us all in thought." Her wishes for a speedy recovery won the unanimous support of MPs.

Knowles has represented Winnipeg North Centre since 1942 except for his defeat in the Conservative sweep of 1958. He was an unhappy man until he was re-elected in 1962.

Now, at 73, he faces a long bout of therapy to regain the memory and speaking ability that are a large part of his reputation as one of the masters of the Commons rulebook and defenders of parliamentary tradition.

"Doctors feel he may regain 65 to 70 per cent of his speech and memory," Knowles's son David said recently. To his friends, that would be enough for Knowles to remain at centrestage in the Commons.

Others privately don't share that optimism but keep the doubts to themselves out of respect for Knowles.

Tommy Douglas, an old friend and former party leader, and his wife are among the few who have been able to visit Knowles.

Mrs. Douglas said Knowles "has made progress every time we see him." His memory is improving and he will return to the Commons, she said.

David Knowles said his father has been helped by calls from well-wishers. "He needs to know people are thinking and praying for him."

Glamor gone from diplomatic life

By George Bentley

REGINA (CP) — Life in the diplomatic corps isn't what it used to be, says Ken Taylor, former Canadian ambassador to Iran and now consul-general in New York.

Taylor, in Regina recently to speak to the annual meeting of the Saskatchewan Health Care Association, said "a lot of the glamor or some of the exotic nature of the diplomatic service is more of a recollection than a reality at the moment."

"I'm not getting out and I'm not certain many of my colleagues are," he said. "But a number of people now are questioning whether or not they want to look forward to moving every three years for 30 years or however long they last in the service."

Taylor said this also does not take into account the fact that either the husband or wife, or both, are working, the questionable security, quality of life and a handful of other considerations.

"I think people are a bit skeptical as to whether this is the same business they thought they were joining some time ago," he said.

Taylor said security is becoming a bigger concern in light of recent events around the world.

"I, like most New Yorkers, don't walk through Central Park at night," said Taylor. "But I take no special precautions I think that would be different from most diplomats."

But he said those precautions are more than what most people would take.

"It's maybe the characteristic of diplomacy today. We've had to buy armored cars, the whole front part of my office in New York is steel walls with bullet-proof glass and doors that open electronically."

And those measures aren't just at the offices.

Taylor said his home has an alarm system connected to the local police precinct station, the doors are made of steel and there is even a way to isolate his office from the rest of the building.

"These are more or less a sorry commentary on what diplomacy is all about because it seems a diplomat's effectiveness is limited by how close he is to the country he is accredited to and if you're walking around in a steel safe, it is difficult to conduct a normal relationship."

He said this is becoming increasingly characteristic of the situation for most Canadian embassies overseas, adding the same holds true for American and most European embassies, particularly the West German ones.

Letters

Save us, Pierre!

Following is the text of an open letter to Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau.

Dear Sir:

I am writing this open letter to you to support your efforts to repatriate the constitution with the Charter of Rights. Over the past few years I have become increasingly bitter over the political events occurring in this province and the rest of the country. The election of the Parti Quebecois, the implementation of Bill 101, the referendum rhetoric, the continual haggling with the federal government, and the reelection of the PQ have made me frustrated and angry. The constitution debate and the abandonment by Claude Ryan's Liberals have left me and many anglophones with a feeling of isolation and desperation.

This area of the province, the Eastern Townships, was first settled by the Loyalists. Fifty years ago the majority of the population in the Sherbrooke area was English-speaking. Our ancestors had to work hard, and made a valuable contribution to the prosperity of the province and the country. They believed that this country was a free country where they could keep their religion, their culture, and their language without discrimination. They developed their own schools and institutions to serve their own needs.

Now we find out that our mere existence as a cultural entity is only a privilege. The right to use our language freely has been eliminated. Our school boards will soon be scrapped and our schools will be at the disposal of the francophone majority. Even the English names for the towns, counties, and roads are being changed. The ideals for which our ancestors worked are ignored. Memories of their contributions are slowly but deliberately being erased.

The Supreme Court ruled that your government's repatriation plan was legal, but disobeyed normal conventions. A convention means that if something has always been done in the past, it must always be done in the future. In Quebec, we had the convention that we could use our language freely without restrictions. We had a convention that allowed us to speak to our government in our own language. But these conventions seem to mean nothing. They have been eliminated by the National Assembly. Now our school boards will soon be done away with. That is how this Quebec government has respected our conventions. Yet the provinces demand that Ottawa respect theirs.

We need this Charter of Rights to help stem the abuses of power so rampant in Quebec. The seven premiers are willing to side with Levesque, eager to maintain the same powers that his government wields so viciously within this province. The power to outlaw the use of English on signs and in companies; to ban the use of English in government services, to eliminate English school boards, to censor English movies, and to discriminate against other Canadians coming into the province. Similar powers would be useful to a government that wanted to use a minority as a scapegoat for the province's problems. The provinces argue about their rights and ignore the needs of the people. Rights should be guaranteed for the people first and for governments second.

In the upcoming constitutional talks Ottawa should refuse to dilute any part of the Charter of Rights. No province should be allowed to opt in or out of any section. Individual's rights must be applied equally across the country. Further, no province should be given the right of veto over future amendments to the constitution. To do so would be to ignore future demographic changes which might occur in Canada and would subject the whole country to the decisions of only one or two provinces.

Many associations have been vocal in their complaints about what is happening in Quebec, but their words seem to have been ignored by Quebec and unheard by the rest of Canada. It is time for more dramatic actions to be taken, for demonstrations or strikes, to emphasize that we have serious problems that must be solved. I hope that your success with the constitution will help solve some of them.

Yours respectfully,
BRUCE G. DURRANT,
Lennoxville

Top quality shows on fall schedule

Farms, furrows and feathers

BY CLAUDIA BOWERS

There's an old song that says 'I'll be around to call when the work's all done this fall'. Well, this is it and the E.T. and indeed the nation are gearing up for some of their best shows. Promising top quality in just about everything, fall schedules are geared to emphasize the importance of agriculture on a regional basis and nationwide.

But, the agriculture picture is not exactly rosy. Both levels of government have cut budgets and subsidies and this year's salons and exhibitions are focusing on cost cutting procedures and self-sufficiency both at home and on a regional basis.

The Eastern Townships is leading the way in this area. A first ever Agri-Food Salon is opening its doors next week, and organizers are hoping that the contacts formed will open new roads to local processors and markets, putting much of our agricultural resources to use towards regional self-sufficiency.

A history of townships' farming based on information gathered from the late 1700's paints a picture of farming excellence even at that early date. Our own E.T. is touted as one of the best farming regions in Quebec and local history has recorded transactions between our local producers who specialized in beef, wool, or dairy cattle with buyers from western Canada as well as the USA. Profit and quality ran hand in hand with these agricultural entrepreneurs, and one individual named Cochrane in Compton was the first to import quality Jerseys, Shorthorns, horses and prime sheep.

The results of prime breeding stock and good management brought buyers from as far away as the American west, and started many neighbors off on the right foot with premium foundation stock.

This type of specialized farming which evolved from the basic steps taken a generation earlier just for survival, led to the development of related industries such as hides for the tanneries. These later evolved into the shoe industry. Wool production opened the way for woolen mills and around 1860, dairy farmers in Hatley, Waterville, Stanstead and Barnston formed a first ever cooperative to manufacture cheese. The E.T. soon was known world-wide for quality cheeses as tons were shipped to Europe and the United States.

However, we were almost too efficient, and the call of the wide open spaces of the Canadian west were more than many of these successful farmers could resist. Many sold their farms and with their riches in their pockets, moved west. Cochrane, a pioneer in the E.T. in top quality breeding went with the rest and eventually became known as one of the great ranching pioneers of Alberta.

Some of the dynamism went with these folks and since the late 1800's, until about 1970, the Eastern Townships has gradually faded into the total mosaic of a continental market, with the emphasis on milk production.

But, today's problems are complex and far-reaching. Our perspective must be global as well as regional. Some way must be found to limit the control of powerful multi-nationals. The environment and ecology are other areas of prime concern. In the center of all this is the individual farmer, whose prime concern is to meet those payments and keep mind and soul together.

The Agri-Food Salon doesn't claim to be the total answer. But suggestions which could lead to more efficient use of the agricultural potential in the E.T. could only do some good.

The Royal Winter Fair gets underway November 12 through 21 and this year features corn in all its forms as well as a select group of artisans working and exhibiting the art of their choice. As usual, the horticultural display promises to be fantastic and entertainment during the day is non-stop in that department. For the show ring buffs, there is continuous judging going on in the various rings. Of interest this season, the evening horseshow, will feature a special presentation by the Lippizaner stallions, famous for their nimble feet and high flying pirouettes.

The Montreal effort to duplicate the effect and atmosphere of the Royal starts the last week in November and continues into December. For the townships, it's a chance to see much the same thing, although the setting and atmosphere will take some years of growth to catch up to the grand old Royal.

All these events tend to make one forget their troubles or fantasize just a little about new methods or new productions. But, the present situation won't let the agriculture producers keep their heads in the clouds for long. This week the Quebec Farmers Association holds its annual meeting at Macdonald College where the guest speaker is Charles Gracey, general manager of the Canadian Cattlemen's Association. Here, beefs will be aired and the not so nice news of budget and subsidy cuts.

Early in December, the Union des Producteurs Agricoles will hold its annual meeting in Quebec City. Quebec farmers are angry and confidence in the agriculture minister is at an all time low. Resolutions to march on Quebec and demand Garon's resignation have come from every corner of the province and the meeting will give delegates and ordinary members a forum to speak their mind. Although only official delegates have a vote general membership is especially invited to observe and speak out if they wish.

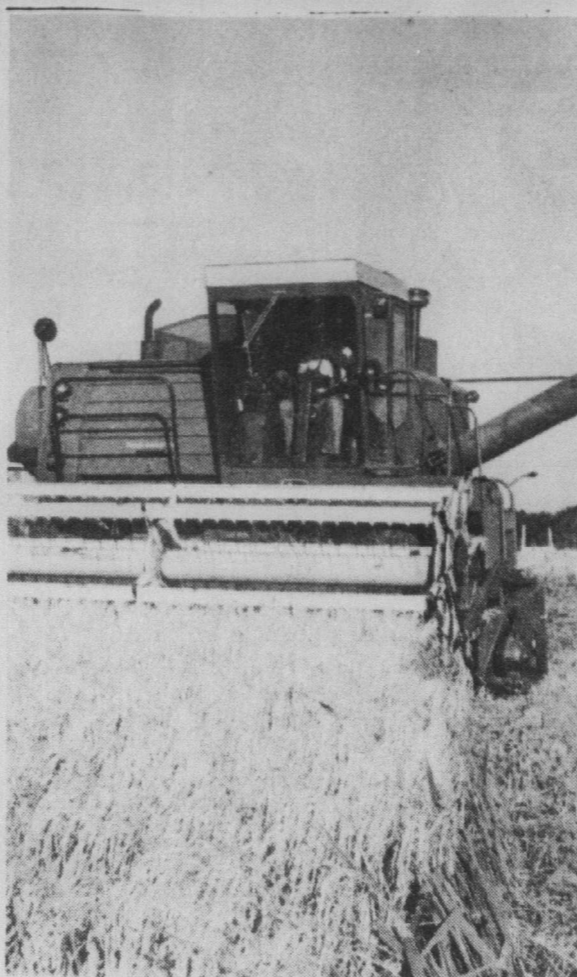

I have lately discovered this typewriter is not accurate. Not only does it not spell very well but it has taken a turn for the worse and began to bungle up names. It seems one young man who heaped glory on himself at several local plowing matches, winning trophies and prizes galore was erroneously called Michael Kirby. Now, after a severe talking to, this typewriter has admitted its mistake and apologizes to Michael Naylor for its error.

By the way, to finish what was inadvertently cut off in a recent column about a pert young miss, the office dictionary states the definition of 'pert' includes... smart, trim and cocky... It was in this context the word 'pert' was used and I still think it is a complimentary description of a neat, trim and pretty combination of a young lady and her steed.

Beef chief to speak

MACDONALD COLLEGE — Charles Gracey, well known general manager of the Canadian Cattlemen's Association and sometimes controversial figure in Canada's troubled beef industry, will be speaking in Quebec at this year's annual meeting of the Quebec Farmers' Association at Macdonald College.

In a communique the QFA says it welcomes Gracey and the opportunity to question him on his ideas for the Canadian beef sector. The theme for his speech will be on the current condition of the Canadian cattle industry; one likely to arouse considerable interest amongst producers and all those involved in getting our beef to the dinner table.

Western grain farmers aren't so sure the future is as bright for their product as some analysts would have everyone believe.

Grain farmers wary

SASKATOON (CP) — Farmers don't share in the enthusiasm of others in their industry who see foreign customers lined up in the future to buy Canadian grain.

The conclusion was reached by a special study prepared for the Canada Grains Council and distributed recently at a concluding session of the organization's semi-annual meeting.

A number of factors lead to that opinion. But the main reason is that farmers aren't convinced other players in the marketing chain can deliver the goods, or that prices will be high enough to make expanded production worthwhile.

The study, prepared by a nine-man committee headed by A. A. Guillard of Agriculture Canada's research branch, said farmers will have to be guaranteed their grain will be sold before they will grow it.

"The key constraint to expanded output lies in the perception producers have that the marketing system is not capable of handling the volumes of grain they can produce."

The committee, which included a soil scientist as well as farmers and grain-company officials, said there is little doubt farmers can grow enough grain to meet the market potential.

Agricultural resources in the West appear to be physically capable of supporting more than 50 million tonnes of grain each year. That compares with an average annual production level of 35.5 million tonnes between 1976 and 1980.

Annual crops exceeding average levels will be needed to meet the Canadian Wheat Board's export projections of 30 million tonnes by 1985 and 36 million tonnes by 1990.

The study said another impediment to increased production is the quota system governing deliveries to grain elevators.

NOMINATION

The President and Chief Executive Officer, Mr. Louis Jalabert and Mr. Jean Charles Daigneault, General Manager, province of Quebec, announce the appointment of

Mr. JEAN MATTE as Vice-president of Business Development for the Eastern Townships (office situated at 75 Wellington Street North, Sherbrooke, telephone 566-4883).

M. Matte joins Banque Nationale de Paris (Canada) with a well established background of banking activities acquired with a Canadian chartered bank. M. Matte's appointment is an indication of the scope that Banque Nationale de Paris (Canada) intends to give to its activities in the province of Quebec.

jump overcalls in diamonds. South takes dummy's ace at trick one and if he now runs off all his clubs and trumps he comes down to a three card ending. Dummy holds his three hearts, declarer has two hearts and jack of diamonds. East must hold one high diamond and as a result if he started with three or more hearts, including the queen, he would have had to unguard it.

A rubber bridge player in a six contract would ignore the finesse and take his slam. You would think that a match point player who had stopped at six spades would do the same. Yet when Barry Crane, who is one of the best — if not the best — match point player in the world and certainly the most successful, risked his contract when he played this hand at six spades some years back.

Here is his explanation. "I considered bidding more, but finally decided not to. I tend to overbid, so it looked as if lots of declarers would be in six no trump and would refuse the finesse to play safe. I wanted to beat them and the overtrick actually gave me a good score. Furthermore, I felt that East's weak bid greatly increased the chance that West would hold the queen of hearts."

By Oswald Jacoby and Alan Santag

Today's hand is quite similar to yesterday's. South starts with 12 top tricks at either no trump or spades and can score his 13th by a simple heart finesse or a squeeze against East.

We'll show you the potential squeeze first. East has made one of those weak

UCW meeting

LENNOXVILLE — The October meeting of Unit 3, Lennoxville United Church Women, was held in the Lounge, with 27 answering the roll call. The Leader, Geraldine Smith, welcomed our guest, Mrs. F. Bennett, and opened the meeting with the U.C.W. Purpose. Irene Hadlock conducted the devotions, starting with a hymn, with Thelma Hutchison at the piano, this was followed by a Scripture reading. As this was Thanksgiving month, Irene chose an appropriate theme, "Count Your Blessings", and the hymn by the same title was sung by all. A poem by Helen Steiner Rice was read and we closed with a prayer.

The minutes of the last meeting were read by the Secretary, Margaret Dale. Sylvia Wilding, Treasurer, submitted her detailed financial report, and included the results from our very successful rummage sale. The Leader conveyed her thanks to all those who worked for the rummage sale.

The Treasurer, Sylvia Wilding is moving to Ottawa, and asked Irene Hadlock to present her with our parting gift. Helen McNaughton has very kindly consented to carry on as Treasurer. There being no further business the meeting was adjourned by Helen Tolhurst, after which Laura Gaudine showed slides of Harrington Harbor, and spoke briefly about the function of the Quebec-Sherbrooke Presbytery. Eunice Bartlett thanked Laura for a very interesting and informative talk.

This was followed by refreshments being served by the hostesses, Ruby Robinson, Gladys Paton and Edith Bennett.

Before launching new projects or ventures this year, finish what you have begun. You're likely to be luckier with the old rather than the new.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 22) Use tender measures when dealing with members of your family. If you come on too strong you may ignite something that you'll wish you hadn't. Romance, travel, luck, resources, possible pitfalls and career for the coming months are all discussed in your Astro-Graph, which begins with your birthday. Mail $1 for each to Astro-Graph, Box 489, Radio City Station, N.Y. 10019. Be sure to specify birth date.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 23-Dec. 21) On occasion you have a tendency to blurt things out that are better left unsaid. Today you should count slowly to 10 before speaking.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19) In business situations, double-check all the facts if someone offers you a lavish proposal. There could be hidden strings attached. AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 19) Should you become involved in something competitive today, don't underestimate your competition. The odds may be in his favor.

PISCES (Feb. 20-March 20) Sometimes, no matter how hard we try, we can't please everyone. Don't be discouraged today if your best efforts go unnoticed or unrewarded.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) You won't like having your routines or what you plan to do disrupted today, so it's best to stay away from persons who may try to change your schedule.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) Try to function as independently as possible. You may not work too well in tandem with associates. Each of you might aim for different targets. GEMINI (May 21-June 20)

Stick to standard methods and procedures workwise. Experimenting with shortcuts may cause more problems in the long run.

CANCER (June 21-July 22) Be careful today if you are buying an expensive item from an unfamiliar firm or from a person about whom you know little. Bargains could be a bust.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22) This is not a good day to try to resolve issues on which you and your mate are poles apart. Neither of you is likely to compromise.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22) Co-workers may be a trifle more difficult to get along with today. Their attitude will be a contributing factor, but you're not blameless. LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23) Unless you are extremely prudent today, there's a possibility you will not manage your resources too well. Stretch each dollar to its limits.

Relief ace Rolie Fingers wins AL Cy Young award

NEW YORK (AP) — Rolie Fingers says every pitcher who has ever won the Cy Young Award will tell you the same thing — "That everything went right during the whole year."

Fingers, a cagey 13-year veteran with a handlebar moustache, was voted the 1981 Cy Young winner in the American League on Tuesday by the Baseball Writers Association of America.

The Milwaukee Brewers right-hander said he was surprised because he was a reliever and "being a relief pitcher, it doesn't happen that often."

"It makes winning even more gratifying."

Sparky Lyle, then with New York Yankees, was the only other AL reliever to win the award, in 1977. Bruce Sutter of Chicago Cubs in 1979 and Mike Marshall of Los Angeles Dodgers in 1974 won it in the National League.

"I feel this was my best season ever," Fingers said. "Very few guys get a chance to have a year like I had."

"Every guy on the ballclub played great behind me. That's one of the main reasons I won. I gave up 10 runs all year, and every one of them was earned. The defence didn't give up a run when I was out there."

Fingers, 35, won six games and had 28 saves with a 1.04 earned-run average in 47 appearances. He worked 78 innings, striking out 61 and walking only 13.

FINISHED AHEAD

He finished well ahead of Oakland's Steve McCatty in balloting by a special panel that consisted of two writers from each of the BBWAA's 14 franchise cities.

Fingers received 22 of 28 first-place ballots and finished with 126 points. He was the only pitcher named on every ballot. McCatty of the A's had the other six first-place votes and finished with 84½ points. Jack Morris of Detroit Tigers was third with 21 points.

Milwaukee won the second-half title in the AL East but lost to New York Yankees in five games in the mini playoffs.

"Awards at the end of the season are fine, but it's playoff wins and the World Series that really matter," said

Fingers, who broke into the major leagues with Oakland in 1969. "We were shooting for a World Series and I sure would have liked to have gotten there."

Fingers was an essential part of the A's World Series victories in 1972, '73 and '74. He was the most valuable player in the 1974 Series against Los Angeles, winning one game and saving two with a 1.93 ERA.

He left the A's in the first free agent re-entry draft in 1976, signed with San Diego and worked four seasons for the Padres. San Diego traded him to St.

Louis Cardinals last December during the winter baseball meetings, and St. Louis sent him to Milwaukee two days later.

In his first two seasons with San Diego, he set NL records with 35 saves in 1977 and 37 saves the next year. He also holds two World Series records, for relief appearances with 16 and career saves with six. He was named NL Fireman of the Year three times, in 1977, '78 and '80, and he repeated in the AL last year, becoming the only man to win the award in both leagues.

ETIAC junior football champions

Bishop's College School junior football team won the Bob McHarg trophy as the top squad in ETIAC junior competition this year. They were quarterbacked by Sean Pinck and much of the offence was supplied by runningbacks Barry Nevokshonoff and Christian Boisclair barging up the middle and around the end. Pulling guards Robert Lee and Brett Martin cleared out most of the traffic making Nevokshonoff's and Boisclair's jobs much easier.

Greg Hessian also had an outstanding season scoring three touchdowns and picking off four interceptions. Tim Hodge, Scott Hyndman and Phil Ho anchored a defence which gave up the fewest points in the league.

TORONTO (CP) — It seems only proper that Hamilton Tiger-Cats, who dominated the Canadian Football League's Eastern Division this season, should do likewise in the balloting for all-star selections.

In the announcement today of Eastern all-stars, the Ticats placed players in 15 of the 26 categories. No team in recent memory has dominated the East all-stars to such an extent.

Tom Clements, the CFL's third-ranked quarterback with 301 completions for 4,536 yards and 27 touchdown passes, leads the Ticat all-stars as the only unanimous choice in the East.

Other Hamilton offensive stars include running back Rufus Crawford, slotback Rocky DiPietro, and wide receiver Keith Baker who is returning with kicker Bernie Ruoff.

From Hamilton's offensive line, which allowed the second-fewest quarterback sacks in the East and was rated fourth in the CFL in that department, are centre Henry Wasczuk and tackle Ed Fulton.

CHOSEN AGAIN

Wasczuk was also picked last year.

Montreal's offensive line, best in the East and third in the CFL, has Bill Norton and returnee Doug Payton selected at guard and tackle, respectively.

The Alouettes' other all-star is James Scott, the gifted wide receiver formerly of the National Football League's Chicago Bears. Scott led Eastern receivers and was fourth in the CFL with 1,422 yards on 81 catches for a 17.6 average and six touchdowns.

Others to repeat as Eastern selections are guard Val Belcher and tight end Tony Gabriel of the Rough Riders playing the final year of an illustrious 11-year career.

Four teams skip draft's first phase

NEW YORK (AP) — The World Series-champion Los Angeles Dodgers and four other teams will be skipping the bidding war for baseball's premier players in the next three re-entry drafts.

Joining the Dodgers on the sidelines for the only four Type A players in the re-entry draft this month will be Seattle Mariners, Minnesota Twins, California Angels and Boston Red Sox, Blake Cullen, administrator-director of public relations for the National League, said Tuesday.

Type A players are those in the top 20 per cent in a computerized category of all major league players. Players who have been in the major leagues for 10 years and with their last team for at least five years, and those who have gone through the re-entry draft before are excluded from the computer listings.

The only players in that category who have opted for free agency this year are left-handed pitcher Ron Guidry of New York Yankees, right-handed pitcher Dick Tidrow of Chicago Cubs, relief pitcher Ed Farmer of Chicago White Sox and outfielder Ken Griffey of Cincinnati Reds.

Infielder Phil Garner would have been listed as a premier player, but he signed a contract with Houston Astros on Monday.

STICK WITH FARM

"I think the theory is, as it has been all along, that the Mariners are a team that grows through the farm system," said Melody Tucker, Seattle's public relations director.

"That has been the club's philosophy all along and continues to be (owner) George Argyros's," she added. "He wants to get into the free agent market actively when it gets to a point where one or two players will make the difference — put you over the top."

According to Tucker, seven teams asked not to participate in the Type A player re-entry draft. But only five teams could be listed as "excluded clubs," according to the formula worked out at the end of this past season's 50-day strike. Cullen would not reveal the names of the other two teams opting out.

The five exempt teams will not have to make available a list of 26 players who will go into a compensation

Al buyers sniffing around

MONTREAL (CP) — Herb Capozzi said Tuesday he is looking into the Montreal football situation for a group of investors interested in buying the Alouettes of the Canadian Football League from Nelson Skalbania, who was in Montreal on a rare visit.

Capozzi, a Vancouver resident and former general manager of British Columbia Lions, said the western Canadian group comprises several individuals, not including Pat Bowlan of Edmonton, an oil and real estate millionaire who also has been reported as being interested in the club.

"They asked me to look into the situation here and see what sort of feeling there might be about westerners owning the club. They're capable of making their own minds up on the finances. They just want a little more input into the feelings of the community."

"They've got the financial information. The economics don't bother them in the sense that they'll make their own financial arrangements."

An Alouettes spokesman said Skalbania "was in and out of the office today in 20 minutes."

WISHES PLAYERS LUCK

"He went into the dressing room and told the players: 'I don't get in very often, so I just want to wish you luck in the semifinal against Ottawa (Rough Riders) on Sunday.'

pool for the draft. However, the five will be able to participate in other phases of the draft.

ARE COMPENSATED

Clubs losing a Type A player will receive a player from the pool as compensation.

"We have decided to 'opt out' because we have a great deal of confidence in our farm system," said Dodgers vice-president Al Campanis.

Haywood Sullivan, Boston executive vice-president and general manager, said: "The Red Sox will participate in the draft, but not for the premier player."

Never ask a farmer how many acres

Dear Ann Landers:

Please tell your readers that they should never ask country people how many acres they own. It is the same as asking, "How much money do you have in the bank?" Just call me —

An Embarrassed Rancher In Monterey, Calif.

Dear Rancher:

Why are you embarrassed? Too few or too many? Actually, I don't think the question is in poor taste, but what do I know — me in my Chicago apartment? How about it, you folks who own property — am I wrong?

Dear Ann Landers:

I am 26 years old. After my child was born I had a tubal ligation. Is there a way a doctor can untie the tubes? I would love to have one more child, if possible.

I hope you will print your answer in your column, because I have no one to discuss this with. I would be ashamed to admit what I did.

P.S. Please tell your readers that a woman who is pregnant is not in the proper frame of mind to decide whether or not she wants more children. Sign me —

Very Sorry In California

Dear Sorry:

Some tubal ligations can be reversed. Others cannot. Only your gynecologist knows for sure.

I agree: No woman should make such a decision when she is pregnant — and at 26, after only one child! Please tell me your doctor tried to talk you out of it.

Dear Ann:

I hope you will allow me to share my story with your readers. I am a compulsive overeater but, thanks to the support and love of Overeaters Anonymous, I am now able to limit my eating to three balanced meals a day. I like myself for the first time in my life, and my world keeps changing for the better.

Before I joined OA I was out of control. I devoured half pounds, pounds, layers, boxes and bags of junk food in addition to my regular meals. I learned through OA that compulsive overeating is a disease like alcoholism and gambling. Will power is not enough to make a compulsive stop stuffing his face. I tried for 15 years and it didn't work.

Many diets and diet groups can help you lose weight, but OA offers a spiritual and mental approach that will teach you how to handle life's challenges without turning to food.

Please, Ann, urge your readers to hunt up the nearest OA chapter. I've gone from a size 22 to a 16. Size 14 is my goal (I'm 5-6) and I'm going to make it by Christmas. God bless you for the service you render.

M.S., Flint, Mich.

Dear M.S.:

Thank YOU for reminding me that it's time to plug OA again. They do a remarkable job.

Ottawa's plan diminishes

OUR RIGHTS: the Supreme Court's answer proves it.

Since the beginning of Confederation in 1867, Québec has always had to be steadfast in defending its rights: In 1980, when the federal government decided to change the constitution unilaterally, Québec reacted vehemently and denounced the Ottawa plan as being against the interests of the Province. The recent Supreme Court judgment confirms that the apprehensions expressed by Québec were justified.

The following are some pertinent excerpts from the Supreme Court judgment:

Ottawa's plan threatens to reduce Québec provincial powers...

"... The Charter of Rights would operate retrospectively as well as prospectively with the result that laws enacted in the future as well as in the past, even before confederation, would be exposed to attack if inconsistent with the provisions of the Charter of Rights. This charter would thus abridge provincial legislative authority on a scale exceeding the effect of any previous constitutional amendment for which provincial consent was sought and obtained."

REF: Majority decision, question 2, on the constitutional proposal, p. 29.

Ottawa's plan is irreconcilable with the federal principle

"The federal principle cannot be reconciled with a state of affairs where the modification of provincial legislative powers could be obtained by the unilateral action of the federal authorities. It would indeed offend the federal principle that "a radical change to (the) constitution (be) taken at the request of a bare majority of the members of the Canadian House of Commons and Senate."

REF: Majority decision, question 2, on the constitutional proposal, p. 37.

Ottawa's plan is unconstitutional

"We have reached the conclusion that the agreement of the provinces of Canada, no views being expressed as to its quantification, is constitutionally required for the passing of the "Proposed Resolution for a joint Address to Her Majesty respecting the Constitution of Canada" and that the passing of this Resolution without such agreement would be unconstitutional in the conventional sense."

REF: Majority decision, question 2, on the constitutional proposal, p. 41

Ottawa's plan changes the constitution by riding roughshod over convention and dilutes Québec's powers without its consent. That is unacceptable!

A Weaker Québec? NEVER!

The situation is extremely serious. It affects us all. Quebecers may rest assured that their government will keep them informed of future developments.

End of ET rail era nears with Via cuts

The Victoria Bridge was a stunning sight

By Bernard Epps

Unless Via Rail has a sudden change of heart, we have very little time left to travel by train. The Eastern Townships will lose its last two passenger runs and that will be a shame because we had the first real railway in all Canada and the first international railway in all the world.

It was called the St. Lawrence and Atlantic Railroad, abbreviated SLAR, and ran from Longueuil to Richmond and through Sherbrooke to Island Pond, Vermont, where it reversed itself as the Atlantic and St. Lawrence Railroad, ASLR, before driving to the sea at Portland.

The first rail line in all Canada was, of course, a 16-mile portage route from St. Johns on the Richelieu to La Prairie opposite Montreal. It was made of wooden rails which had an annoying habit of curling up in the sun and its four cars were hauled by horses the first year. It was called the Champlain and St. Lawrence Railroad.

Other short portage lines were built around the Lachine and Long Sault Rapids and from the St. Lawrence to Joliette but there was one serious problem with the river routes of Canada. While they required marvelously little maintenance and had served transportation for thousands and thousands of years, they became embarrassingly solid in winter — even the great St. Lawrence.

Montreal owed its importance to the gateway for trade from the Great Lakes to European markets but the Americans opened the Erie Canal in 1826 and siphoned a lot of that trade through the Hudson River and New York City. Then they began building railroads — from Baltimore to Ohio, from New York to Buffalo — threatening to drain whatever business was left. The merchants of Montreal realized that something had to be done and the merchants of the Townships, with Alexander Tilloch Galt as spokesman, knew exactly what that should be. Montreal needed a railway through Sherbrooke to an ice-free port on the Atlantic.

Boston had long been considered to be New England's (and the Townships') seaport but an enterprising young lawyer from Portland, John Alfred Poor, insisted that his town was closer and deserved that honor. He proposed a sleigh race to prove the fastest route from Montreal to the sea and in February, 1845, mail was loaded simultaneously aboard sleighs in Boston and Portland and sent off into the snowy mountains toward Montreal. Poor's sleigh arrived a good 12 hours ahead of the Boston sleigh and the route to Portland was proven.

Money was needed now and Galt went to England on the first of a great many missions to persuade British financiers to invest in Canadian railroads. He was successful but the market crashed in 1845 and his investors backed away. Galt went to the Canadian government and persuaded them to pass the Guarantee Act insuring six per cent interest on half the bonds issued on railways more than 75 miles long. The building began.

An engineer was hired to build the bridges and lay the tracks. He was Casimir Stanislaus Gzowski (later Sir Casimir) and he had fled Poland after taking part in an uprising against Russia in which he had been wounded and taken prisoner. He came to Canada in 1841, was appointed an engineer in the Department of Public Works and then set up his own consulting firm.

The CTR station at Richmond

Under his capable direction, bridges spanned the Richelieu, the Yamaska, the St. Francis and steel rails were laid quickly and efficiently.

The gauge of those rails was five feet six inches — a broad gauge adopted for a variety of reasons, none of which made much sense at all. One argument was that such a gauge would make it difficult for American trains to bring troops on another invasion of Canada. Another insisted that if all Canadian lines were thus different from American, it would prevent freight from the north and west being sent along the Buffalo and New York route.

The government therefore passed a law that all railways in Canada should be built on a gauge of five and six inches — even though the Champlain and St. Lawrence was built on standard gauge and remained stubbornly standard. This silly law retarded the growth of Canadian railways and the SLAR was eventually forced to lay a third rail along its entire length.

The first trains ran the length of the SLAR in 1853, and have been carrying passengers on the same route for 128 years. The next step was the building of the Victoria Bridge to carry trains right to the island of Montreal and that was a feat which made the entire world sit up and take notice.

It was a square steel tube on 24 stone piers designed by Robert Stephenson, who had built the first locomotive for the Champlain and St. Lawrence, and was opened by the Prince of Wales (afterwards King Edward VII), in 1860. It was then considered one of the wonders of the world and stands still as a magnificent achievement.

It "surpassed everything of its kind in the world," said The Canadian Handbook and Tourist Guide of 1867. "Every tourist ought to visit the bridge before leaving Montreal, and if possible to go through on foot. The interior, when viewed by the dim light of a lamp or lantern — the opening by which you entered growing smaller and smaller in the distance as you approach the middle 'til it only shines faintly like a pale blue star — the hoarse rumbling and vibration caused by the slightest sound, striving for escape from its hollow prison — inspire a feeling of awe and reverence. To look from one of the openings in the centre piers, on to the St. Lawrence rushing past in one grand stream far below, sweeping under the bridge in eddies and whirlpools, or bursting into little spirals of angry foam as they touched the sharp edges of the masonry — to look along the sides of the iron tube, which taper away at each end in the distance until it seems a mere reed of metal, one cannot but be astounded, not only how such a design was ever carried out, but how it ever could have been conceived as practicable."

But practicable it was and still is, the sharpened points of those stone piers still knifing through 70,000 tons of winter ice on the upstream side. They could take a roadbed twice as wide as the original and so, when Montreal was bursting its boundaries in the 1890s, that square tube was replaced by the present open iron trusses and cantilevered extensions added to each side where automobiles now travel. The only complaint of the workmen was that the old bridge was built too well — it was harder to cut away the old, than to install the new.

The SLAR became the foundation of the Grand Trunk which would link all corners of Canada by rail. Sir Casimir Stanislaus Gzowski joined forces with Sir Alexander Tilloch Galt in contracting extensions of the Grand Trunk Railway and both made fortunes.

In 1918, the Canadian National Railway was created to keep several lines from bankruptcy. In 1923, the CNR took over the Grand Trunk.

Sir Alexander Tilloch Galt was also instrumental in creating the other railway through Sherbrooke where the Atlantic Limited is now making its last runs. It began as the St. Francis and Megantic International Railway chartered in 1870 to "lay out, construct and finish a double or single track of iron railway from Sherbrooke to the Province line at a point near Lake Megantic, there to connect with a line of railway in the State of Maine about to be constructed — and which will connect with the European and North American Railway or a branch thereof, so as to form a continuous railway from the Grand Trunk to the city of St. John, New Brunswick."

The capital needed was estimated at $1.5 million and the Compton County Council voted almost a quarter of a million out of the taxpayers' money. Certain Townships which would be least benefited by this railway, took the council to court over their decision. When they lost the legal battle, Sherbrooke, Compton, Ascot and Orford were so incensed that they broke away from Compton County and formed a municipality of their own.

Work began in the winter of 1870-71 but then railways began to go broke and there was a general collapse in 1873. By 1875, the St. Francis and International reached only as far as Bury. The company was reorganized as the International Railway Company and the line pressed slowly on to reach the international border four years later.

But the State of Maine was in no hurry to build a line across its sparsely settled north either and it was July 13, 1889, that the first train carried passengers from Sherbrooke to Saint John. It was leased in perpetuity to the CPR.

But since passenger revenues fell steeply after the war, both the CPR and the CNR have been trying to discourage people from taking their trains by keeping them dirty and uncomfortable, scheduling them at inconvenient times and pulling them into sidings to await every freight on the line. In 1976, Via Rail was created to take over what little passenger service survived.

Then Jean Luc Pepin and the Cabinet decided to cut one fifth of the remaining service — 15 trains affecting 1.2 million passengers — and let it be known that no amount of public outrage would have any effect on that decision.

Ten new Light-Rapid-Comfortable trains would be used to upgrade the Windsor-Quebec corridor where service is already fairly good.

A great many commentators have pointed out that to cut passenger trains at this time is sheer lunacy. At a time of rising fuel prices, more and more people can be expected to go by rail and it is still the most fuel-efficient mass transportation system we have. Once existing lines are allowed to disappear, they will be nearly impossible to re-establish.

There is a still graver danger in cutting long-haul passenger service in favor of the Windsor-Quebec run just at this time, and that is that it may accelerate the disintegration of Canada. The West is already furious over the federal moneys spent in Ontario and Quebec. The Maritimes are in dire need of the Atlantic Limited (which runs 80 per cent full on the average). It was the railroads that stitched us together in the first place and we may well fall apart without them.

Before the President, Sister Madelyn Curtis, gave her address, she asked Sis. June Monteith, to come to the centre of the floor. She presented her with her Past President's jewel from the Dove Theta Rho Assembly. Sis. Madelyn gave us a most interesting and instructive address on the "Beehive". She also thanked the lodge for all courtesies extended to her, for her corsage, and her gift which was a beautiful cup and saucer with all the emblems of the ten provinces on it.

The President's hymn was sung, "May You Always". Sister Shirley Vaughan expressed her thanks to all present for coming, to her Marshall, her mother, Sis.

Dorothy Clark, for all her support, to the Sisters of Prosperity for all of their assistance towards the District meeting and also for her gift and hoped all would remain to enjoy the banquet at 6 p.m.

The meeting was then turned over to Sis. Rose Monteith when the members of Prosperity brought the district meeting to a close.

After the closing, many viewed the jewellery on display. Banquet tickets were sold by Sister Else Syberg, P.D.D.P. and Sis. Dorothy Clark, P.N.G. While the hall was being prepared for the banquet, Sis. Isabella Beattie, P.P. played many selections on the piano. At 6 p.m. everyone sat down to enjoy the delicious turkey banquet with all the trimmings served very efficiently by the Stanbridge East United Church Women. Grace was said by Bro. Earl Bracey, D.D.G.M.
