

IN TIME OF PEACE A Bavarian regiment has been sent upon a forced march under such conditions that three men were killed, seventeen are dying, and one hundred and seventy were stricken down by the heat. In war it is sometimes necessary to drive men on until they die, but in time of peace the line that divides such an action from murder is a mere legal one. The army of Bavaria is not, as is at least of nearly all the smaller German States, under the direct control of the Prussian War Office, and, therefore, the reproach of slaughtering men by red tape cannot, because of this massacre, be attached to the German military system.

A SPECIAL DESPATCH to the Hermes condemns the reports of damage done to the Manitoba and North-West wheat crops which were received on 'Change yesterday. Our correspondent's report, while agreeing that private despatches as to the severity of the frost, is more hopeful as to the probable damage. His estimate seems to be that about one-quarter of the crop has been injured, but not destroyed by the frost. He distinctly hopes that the injury is not very
